THADANI AG. C. J. AND RAM LABHAYA J.

Boloram Kumar and others - Appellants v. Dandiram Kumar and others - Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 1903 of 1947, Decided on 3rd June 1949.

(a) Tenancy law-Landlord and tenant-Alienation - Tenancy of temple property on condition of service to deity - Transfer to non-paik is not absolutely void but voidable-Temple authorities may acquiesce in transfer-Evidence Act (1872), S. 115.

A transfer of temple lands held by paiks on condition of rendering services to the deity is not absolutely void. The temple authorities may consent to or acquiesce in the transfer. They may accept services from a non-paik transferes or if he is not capable of rendering services they may accept rent in cash from him. There is nothing to prevent the temple authorities from adopting these courses. A transfer without their consent and acquiescence which seeks to separate the obligations of land from its enjoyment is only voidable at the instance of the temple authorities : Appeal No. 1056 of 1938 (Cal.), Disting. [Para 8]

Where a sale of paikan land was made under the orders of the Court in execution proceedings preceded by attachment without any objection from the temple authorities and the auction-purchaser was shown in the revenue records as a tenant and the period of limitation for challenging the sale had expired:

Held, that assuming that the auction sale contravened the custom relating to transfers of paskan lands and was therefore originally void, the title of the transferee could not be disputed by the temple authorities. [Para 8]

(b) Co-sharers - Suit: for declaration of title and exclusive possession in absence of partition not maintainable—Transfer of Property Act (1882),

A person purchasing a share in the tenancy rights is only a cocharer tenant. As such he is not entitled to a declaration of title to and khas possession of a specified plot of land forming part of the tenancy, where there is no allegation or proof that there was any binding partition between the co-sharers : A. for Appellants.

J. N. Bora - for Respondents.

Ram Labhaya J. — The facts leading to this appeal by contesting defendants 1.8 are as follows: Dag No. 695 corresponding to the present dag No 508 was part of the lakheraj lands owned by Hajo Madhab Temple. Defendant 19 is the present Daloi of the temple. The present area of the dag in question is 5 B 3 K 16 Lessas.

[2] This land was held by Paiks of the temple on condition of rendering services to the deity. In 1889 a dispute arose between two groups of tenants. The predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiff of the present suit, belonged to the group which was found entitled to tenancy rights in 9/20th share of the dag in question. The ancestors of the defendants (1.18, both contesting and pro forma) were found entitled to tenancy rights in the rest, viz., 11/20th share.

[3] One Lakshminarayan got a money decree against some tenants of the group of the plaintiff and got to entire dag attached in execution of his decree. Objections were raised to the attachment and, it appears, an Amin was appointed to make local enquiries as to the claims of the objectors. An attested copy of the report has been placed on the record. It appears from the report that there were three groups of objectors. The present plaintiff with others claimed 8 K 4 L. The Amin found them in possession of the area they claimed. This portion was marked Ka. Another group of objectors was found, to be in possession of 2 B 8 K 7 L. This portion was marked kha. The rest of the area of the dag 2 B 2 K 5 L marked Ga was not in the actual possession of anyone. It was described as dense forest. Exhibit 4 is an attested copy of the order on the claim put forward by the present plaintiff with others. This claim was disallowed on a compromise. No reference was made to the Amin's report in the order. No other order in the objection proceedings has been placed on the record. The attested copy of the sale certificate on the record shows that 9/20th share from the dag was put to auction and sold. The sale was not of any specified portion or plot. The cosharers may have held specified portions of land in groups and different cosbarers in the two groups may also have occupied separate plots. But what was put to sale was not the specified plot or plots in the possession of the judgment-debtors but the undivided share to which they were entitled as tenants. The decree-holder according to the certificate became the purchaser of the tenancy rights in the dag in question to the extent of the share mentioned in the sale certificate, i. e., 9/20th share. It is claimed by the plaintiff that the decree-holder auction-purchaser purchased and got possession of specified portions Ka and Ga measuring 3 B O K 9 L, though he remained in actual possession of the Ka portion measuring 3 K 4 L on behalf of the decree-holder.

[4] On 24th September 1935 Surjyanarayan, brother of Lakshminarayan who had died, sold to him 2 B 2 K 19 L out of the land said to have been purchased by his brother Lakshminarayan marked Ka and Ga in Amin's report. In the sale deed Surjyanarayan, the vendor, claimed that they (meaning he and his brother) had purchased the area (2B 2K 19L) on 21st June 1921 in a court sale out of dag No. 695 measuring 5B 3K 16L and they obtained possession through Court of the two specified plots Ka and Ga. This he purported to sell to the present plaintiff who alleges that he was in actual possession even before sale though on behalf of the auction-purchaser. On the basis of the sale deed, the plaintiff got a chitha mutation in his favour on 23rd March 1936. His case now is that he purchased two specified plots of the dag n question from the auction purchasers who were the owner of tenancy rights. He was also in possession till 1937 when a portion of the area in his possession was encroached upon by defendants 1.3. A complaint was lodged against them but they were acquitted on 12th March 1937. On 14th May 1989 plaintiff applied for demarcation of boundaries which were settled by order dated 7th June 1939. Plaintiff further alleged that he removed his dwelling houses from the portion marked Ka to another plot at a distance of about a quarter of a mile. Defendants taking advantage of this fact took forcible possession of the entire area of 3K 4L (Ka portion). On the basis of their possession they also got a mutation in their names during the last Temple Survey Operations. Plaintiff, therefore, instituted the suit which gives rise to this appeal for a declaration of his right and title to the plot measuring 3K 4L (Ka portion) and also for recovery of its khas possession.

[5] The claim was resisted by defendants 1.3. Pro forma defendants 4.9, 11 and 12, 13.16 and 18 supported the plaintiff's claim by a joint written statement. Defendants 10, 17 and 19 were proceeded against ex parte. The trial Court dismissed the suit holding that the suit was not maintainable in the form in which it was laid. The Court also found that the suit was barred by time and plaintiff's title to the land if any, had been extinguished by adverse possession on the part of the defendants. It was further found that plaintiff had no right, title and interest in the suit land nor was he in possession thereof and dispossessed as alleged by him.

[6] On appeal by the plaintiff, the learned Second Additional Judge, A. V. D. reversed the decree of the learned Munsif and decreed the claim. He granted plaintiff a declaration of title to the suit land and further ordered that he be put in khas possession thereof.

[7] On behalf of defendant appellants Mr. Ghose has assailed the correctness of the appellate order on three grounds. He has contended, first, that the tenancy was inalienable The salein execution of decree by which the auction purchaser became the owner of tenancy rightsto the extent of 9/20th share was void and similarly the subsequent transfer of 1935 on which the plaintiff based his title. The second ground of attack was that Surjyanarayan whopurported to convey the rights which Lakshminarayan had acquired under the court sale was not competent to transfer those rights and the transfer, therefore. did not pass any valid title to the plaintiff. His last contention was that in no case could the plaintiff be granted a decreedeclaring his exclusive title to a specified plot; nor could a decree for its khas possession begranted to him. We shall deal with these contentions seriatim.

ed, it is argued that the land belongs to the temple. Plaintiff and defendants were tenants under the temple as paiks. They held the land on condition of rendering services to the deity. Their tenure was subject to services which they had to render. As the obligation to render services could not be transferred to non-paiks, the land also became inalienable. The land cannot be disassociated from the obligations that it carried. The contention in short is that the tenancy in question is of a peculiar kind and one of its incidents is that it is inalienable except amongst paiks under certain circumstances. Transfer to a non-paik, it is urged, would be void. In support of this contention the learned counsel has relied on an unreported judgment of the Calcutta High Court in Appeal No. 1056 of 1938 (Jiban Chandra Sarma Daloi on behalf of the Madhab Temple v. Parasuram Kalita). The case related to the land of the temple to which the land in this belongs. The suit was instituted by the then Daloi of the temple as the land belonging to the temple had been transferred by paiks to a person who could not render services which the paiks holding the land were under an obligation to perform. According to the sale deed, the transferor was to remain responsible for rendering services. The land was transferred to the son-in-law of one of the transferors without the obligations of service that the occupation of the land carried with it. It was held by their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court that a transfer of paikan lands would not be valid and binding on the temple unless the burden of service attached to such lands is also transferred to the alience, and as in that case the property had been transfer. red to the transferee free of the obligation to render any service, the alienation was not valid and binding on the temple authorities. The claim of the temple for khas possession of the land on the ground that the tenancy had been forfeited, was disallowed.

Paikan land and was therefore void, it will not, affect the claim of the plaintiff. The sale was made under the orders of the Court in execution proceedings. It was preceded by attachment. There were objections to the attachment from the tenants. The temple authorities could not have been unaware of the sale. They did not raise any objection. The sale was made and confirmed. The auction purchaser was shown in the revenue records as a cosharer tenant. The auction sale came in 1920. The purchaser was obviously recognised as a tenant by the temple authorities. The Daloi of the temple, who is a defendant in the case, does not challenge either the auction sale or the subsequent transfer in plaintiff's favour. The auction sale of the tenancy rights has not been challenged within the period allowed by law. Therefore, even if the transfer was originally void, the title of Lakshminarayan, the auction-purchaser, could not now be disputed by the temple authorities by reason of the efflux of time. In these circumstances contesting defendants can have no right to challenge the transaction. They did not raise this question in the Court below and it has not been raised even in their grounds of appeal. The second sale in favour of the plaintiff was in favour of a Paik and it has not been contended by anyone of the defendants including the Daloi, the manager of the temple, that the sale was objectionable on the ground, that the obligations as to service had been divorced from the rights and privileges which the occupation of the land carried. This contention, therefore, has got no force. It finds no support from authority.

[9] The second contention need not detain us long. The objection is that Surjyanarayan who transferred the rights in the disputed land to the plaintiff was not competent to do so as Lakshminarayan alone was the auction-purchaser. Surjyanarayan has appeared as a witness in the case. He has explained that he and Lakshminarayan the deceased were brothers. They were both members of a joint Hindu family and after the death of Lakshminarayan he became the karta of the family. His nephew, a son of Lakshminarayan, was also a member of the family. He, therefore, was competent to make the transfer and it was made with the consent and acquiescence of Lakshminarayan's son who signed the deed of sale as an attesting witness. In fact, while attesting the deed at the time of execution, he gave his consent to the transfer in express terms. Before registration the words conveying his express consent were scored through. The explanation given for this is that they were advised that consent to the transfer in express terms would render the document liable to fresh stamp duty and will give rise to other complications. The attestation as a witness, therefore, was allowed to remain and the rest of the endorsement was crossed and was for all practical purposes deleted. This statement of Surjyanarayan has not been rebutted by any evidence. Lakshminarayan's son, who was evidently aware of the transfer, has not objected to it. He has not been examined by the defendants. He is the only person who could object to the transfer. Even though setting up his title, the defendants have not examined him. The inference is irresistible that Lakshminarayan's son does not question the competency of his uncle to transfer the tenancy right to the plaintiff. In these circumstances the sale in plaintiff's favour could be enforced against the present defendants. Lakshminarayan's son is not a party. He would not be bound by this decision but so far as the defendants are concerned, they cannot by their denial alone prevent the plaintiff from claiming relief on the basis of the sale deed in his favour, which apparently has been consented to by one who is the true owner according to defendants. The contention is repelled.

[10] The last contention raised by the learned counsel is that there was no justification for the appellate Court to grant a declaration of title to and khas possession of the specified plot of land which is one of the two plots which the sale deed purports to transfer to the plaintiff. The learned counsel is on surer ground here. Under the sale certificate and according to the entries in the revenue records Lakshminarayan, the auction purchaser, was a cosharer tenant. He had purchased tenancy rights to the extent of 9/20th share. There is no allegation or proof that there was any binding partition between the cosharers after the auction sale. It is possi. ble that cosharers may have been holding specified plots in their separate possession under an amicable arrangement for purposes of convenience. But by that arrangement they would not become exclusive owners of the plots in their possession. Lakshminarayan therefore could not be the exclusive owner of any specified plot even if he was in possession of it as under the sale certificate he purchased an undivided share in the tenancy and not specified plots. Lakshminarayan's successors in interest could not sell anything more than he had purchased. They could only transfer to the plaintiff the undivided share in the tenancy of which they were owners. They could also transfer to him the possession of any plot that they have as co-sharers. But they could not convey exclusive title to any specified plot. The sale-deed in plaintiff's favour conveys to him two plots described as Ka and

Ga within definite boundaries. The plaintiff's claim is that even though the auction certificate does not mention these specified plots, Lakshminarayan was the purchaser of these plots and was in possession through him and by virtue of the sale-deed of 1935, he acquired exclusive title to these plots. Defendants dispossessed him from one specified plot marked Ka. On the basis of exclusive title and exclusive possession he claims a declaration of title and khas possession. As indicated above there is no basis for a finding that he is exclusively entitled to the plot in suit. The learned Judge in appeal appears to have been influenced by the Amin's report in coming to the finding that what was sold at the auction was not an undivided share but two specified plots. We do not find any justification for this view. The oral evidence in the case is not conclusive. If specified plots were sold, there is no reason why the sale certificate should not have evidenced the sale of the specified plots. The records of the execution proceedings in which the property was sold are not available. They are said to have been destroyed. The Amin's report which appears to have influenced the learned Judge is not helpful. It does not indicate what exactly was put up for auction. Besides it has been objected to as inadmissible though it is not necessary to decide this point as even if admitted it does not support the claim that specified plots were put up for sale. There is no documentary evidence on this point except the certificate which shows that what was purchased was an undivided share. In the absence of any proof of a binding partition before the auction sale, it seems more probable that tenancy rights in specified plots were not sold. We are, therefore, of the opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge had no legal basis or justification for holding in defiance of the contents of the sale certificate that two specified plots were sold. In these circumstances, a decree declaring the title of the plaintiff to the specified plot in suit was not at all possible in law and yet this is what the plaintiff has claimed. He might have claimed in the alternative that he was at least entitled to 9/20th share in the tenancy. No such claim has been put forwarded. The suit is only for a specified plot measuring 3 K. 4 L. out of the entire dag. A decree that he is entitled to a larger area than that claimed by him as a co-sharer cannot be passed, as the entire dag is not in suit and 9/20th share of the whole is not being claimed. The declaratory relief granted to the plaintiff by the lower appellate Court is, therefore, contrary to law and the decree to this extent cannot stand.

[11] As regards khas possession of a specified plot, the position is no less difficult. A co-sharer may ask to be restored to possession of a specified plot, if his case is that he was occupying a specified plot as a co-sharer under an amicable arrangement between the co-sharers and was dispossessed by another co-sharer. But that is not the case here. Even if it is assumed for purposes of argument that the particular plot in suit was in plaintiff's possession before the sale in his favour on behalf of the auction-purchaser and was subsequently in his possession as a cosharer in the tenancy, it is not possible to grant him relief in this case as he is not suing as a co-sharer whose possession has been disturbed in that capacity. His suit is for exclusive title and for exclusive possession. He has not been able to prove exclusive title and therefore he is not entitled to exclusive possession also. There is thus no basis for granting him exclusive or khas possession of the property. If he had taken up the position that he was entitled to a specified plot as a co-sharer, as his possession as a co-sharer had been disturbed, the claim could certainly have been considered. But in these circumstances of the present case, even the relief for khas possession is not permissible. The view of the law that we have taken finds support from Ekabbar Ali v. Sh. Kon Ali, A. I. R. (12) 1925 Cal. 272: (82 1. C. 31) and Kovummal Ammad v. U. Arangadan Ammad, A.I.R. (23) 1936 Mad. 666 : (163 I. C. 825).

(12) The result is that the suit cannot succeed as laid. We, therefore, allow this appeal, reverse the order of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge and dismiss the suit for reasons given above. We shall leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

J. C. Sen-for Petitioner.

Order. This rule was issued upon the Deputy Commissioner, Nowgong, to show cause why the convictions and sentences imposed on the jetitioner should not be set aside. The case for the Crown was that the petitioner was travelling on the train from Pandu through Gauhati on 14th October 1947. His conduct aroused suspicion and he and his luggage were searched. In the trunks belonging to him was found 37 seers of opium. Evidence was adduced by the prosecution in support of these allegations and the learned Magistrate, believing the evidence, found the petitioner guilty under S. 9 (a) of Act I [1] of 1878 and sentenced him under that section to undergo rigorous imprisonment for two years, and to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000 in default, to suffer rigorous imprisonment for a further period of one year. The learned Magistrate also found the petitioner guilty under S. 9 (c) of the said Act on the same facts, and sentenced him under that section to undergo rigorous imprisonment for two years and to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000 and in default of payment of fine, to suffer rigorous imprisonment for a further period of one year. The learned Magistrate further directed that the sentences should run consecutively.

[2] The petitioner appealed. The learned Sessions Judge, after hearing the learned advocate for the appellant, called for the record of the case, but did not say that the appeal would be heard, and did not pass any orders admitting the appeal. After perusing the record, the learned Sessions Judge directed that the appeal be dismissed summarily. It is against that order that the present rule has been obtained.

[3] Mr. Sen for the petitioner has pointed out that separate convictions under S. 9 (a) and S. 9 (c) of the said Act for the same offence were not justified.

[4] If the petitioner imported the opium, he did so by carrying it himself, and his possession was the method of importing it. In our opinion, the learned Magistrate was not justified in convicting him for two separate offences for the same act, and in imposing two separate sentences therefor. In fact, on the evidence, it is impossible to say that there was any evidence of an offence of importing. The evidence against the accused was merely that he was in possession of the opium and that he had a ticket from Pandu a station in Assam. The evidence proved possession of opium, but did not prove importation of opium. Mr. Sen contended further that the learned Sessions Judge, in view of the nature of the evidence, ought to have heard the appeal properly and to have delivered a judgment after hearing the appeal. Mr. Sen has indicated to us the nature of the evidence in this particular case and we are of opinion that the learned Judge exercised a proper discretion in dealing with appeal summarily.

[5] We are unable to hold that the evidence was of such a nature that the learned Judge ought to have heard the appeal in full. We, therefore, order that the rule be made absolute to this extent only, viz: conviction and sentence under S. 9 (a), is upheld but the conviction and sentence under S. 9 (c) of the Act is set aside and the appellant is acquitted of the charge of importation.

R.G.D.

Order accordingly.

Sampatlal Keshan and others - Petitioners v. Baliprasad Shah and others - Respondents.

Civil Revn. No. 322 of 1948, Decided on 3rd June 1949, against order of Sub-Judge, A. V. D., D/- 13th March 1948.

(a) Assam High Court Order (1948), S. 3 - High Court — Constitution of — Chief Justice alone appointed before prescribed day - Constitution of High Court not affected by delay in appointment of other Judges - Government of India Act (1935), S. 220.

Both S 3 of the Assam High Court Order 1948 and S. 220, Government of India Act, 1935, allow the Governor-General to make appointment of Judges other than the Chief Justice from time to time. No time limit is placed on the exercise of jurisdiction vested in him in this respect. It cannot be said, therefore, that the Governor General was under an obligation to appoint Judges at once or at a time that they could function on the prescribed day or on any particular day. He is really the judge of the time when appointments of other Judges may be made. It follows that where the Chief Justice alone has been appointed before the prescribed day, the constitution of the High Court cannot be affected by the delay in appointment of other Judges. The Chief Justice is not debarred from performing the duties of the Chief or from discharging his function as a Single Judge till the appointment of other Judges: A. I. (c) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 41, R. 23 - Remand for disposing of application according to law after hearing parties-Disposal by successor-in-office of deciding Judge is not without jurisdiction.

Where a case is remanded to the 'lower Court' for disposal of an application for restoration of suit dismissed for default, on merits and according to law after hearing the parties, there is no direction that the case is to be disposed of by the deciding Judge and not by his successor. If, therefore, the successor in office of the deciding Judge, who has been transferred, disposes of the petition on remand, he does not act without jurisdiction: 2 W. R. 275 and 5 W. R. 124, Disting.

(d) Civil P. C (1908), O. 5, R. 19 - Declaration of due service need not be express - Omission to declare due service is only irregularity-It does not affect jurisdiction of Court regarding parties present before it.

The declaration of due service under O. 5, R. 19 in express terms is not imperative. The declaration may be implied in the proceedings. Para 18]

Assuming that an express declaration of due service is necessary under O. 5, R. 19, the omission to declare due service under the rule would be an irregularity on the basis of which the party adversely affected by the omission may ask for an opportunity to be heard. It would not affect the jurisdiction of the Court as regards parties that are present before the Court.

Ram Labhaya J .- This petition of revision is directed against the order of Mr. D. N. Hazarika Spl. Subordinate Judge, A. V. D., dated 13th March 1948, by which plaintiffs' application for restoration of their suit, which had been dismissed in default, was allowed and the suit restored. The petition was presented to Sir R. F. Lodge, the then Chief Justice of this Court on 1st June 1948. He was the only Judge of the Court at that time. No other Judge had been appointed till then. He heard the advocate for the petitioner and directed that a rule should issue calling upon the Court concerned to show cause why the order complained of in the petition be not set aside. Usual notices on the opposite parties were also ordered to issue. Further proceedings in the suit were stayed. The opposite parties have been served, the records have been received and the petition is now before us for hearing and disposal.

[2] The learned counsel for the opposite parties (plaintiffs) has raised two preliminary objections, both of a somewhat unusual character. The first objection is that on 1st June when the petition of revision was presented and received, this High Court was not properly constituted and the Chief Justice, therefore, had no jurisdiction either to receive the petition or to issue a rule on it. The objection is based on the language of S. 3, Assam High Court Order, 1948. This section provides that:

"As from 5th April 1948, (hereinaster referred to as 'the prescribed day'), there shall be a High Court for the Province of Assam which shall be a Court of record, and shall consist of a Chief Justice and such other Judges as the Governor General may from time to time, whether before or after the prescribed day, appoint in accordance with the provisions of S. 220 of the Act."

It is urged that the High Court, according to this section, must consist of a Chief Justice and such other Judges as the Governor-General may from time to time appoint. The Chief Justice alone could not constitute the High Court. The appointment of some other Judges was essential. The direction, it is argued, is mandatory and the High Court could not come into existence till in conformity with the direction the Governor General had appointed other Judges necessary to constitute the High Court. Our attention has already been drawn to the provisions contained in S. 220, Government of India Act, which also provides that every High Court shall be a Court of record and shall consist of a Chief Justice and such other Judges as the Governor General may from time to time deem it necessary to appoint. The learned counsel has relied on the language of the provisions of the two sections referred to above and has not produced any authority in support of the proposition he has put forward.

[3] We have carefully considered the argument addressed to us on this point and we think the objection is not sound. There was to be a High Court for this Province from 5th April 1948, the prescribed day. The Calcutta High Court, which formerly was exercising jurisdiction so far as this province was concerned was to cease to have that jurisdiction. The appointment of the Chief Justice was made before the prescribed day, but under the proviso to S. 3 it took effect from the prescribed day. The appointment of such other Judges as the Governor-General deemed necessary within the maximum limit was no doubt necessary. But both s. s, Assam High Court Order, 1948 and S. 220, Government of India Act, 1935 allow the Governor-General to make other appointments, from time to time. No time limit is placed on the exercise of jurisdiction vested in him in this respect. It cannot be said, therefore, that the Governor General was under an obligation to appoint Judges at once or at a time that they could function on the prescribed day or on any particular day. He is really the judge of the time when appoint.

ments of other Judges may be made. Besides, the possibility that the Governor General may take some time to make other appointments could not have been overlooked by the Legislature. If the intention had been that the Chief Justice should not exercise the powers which he as Chief Justice or as a single Judge of the High Court could exercise till these appointments were made an express provision to that effect should have appeared in the section. If the objection raised is accepted, the conclusions would be that the Chief Justice could not act at all till at least the appointment of a second Judge was made. This second appointment was made in August 1948. The result would be that the High Court could come into existence only in august though, according to the Assam High Court Order this province was to have a High Court from the prescribed day (5th April). The Calcutta High Court had ceased to exercise jurisdiction from that day. This result could not have been meant. The interpretation placed on the relevant section by the learned counsel leads to anomalous results. The Legislature could not have intended that the Chief Justice was not to exercise any jurisdiction even as Chief Justice or as a Single Judge till the appointment of other Judges. If this intention is attributed to the Legislature, it would be reading something into the section that it does not contain.

[4] The question, however, is not one of the first impression. It arose before a Division Bench of the Patna High Court in Emperor v. Sohrai Koeri reported in A. I. R. (25) 1938 Pat. 550: (40 Or. L. J. 41). A criminal case was argued before the learned Judges constituting the Bench. The hearing was concluded on 9th May and judgment was reserved. On 10th May news was received that Sir Courtney-Terrell C. J., of the Court had died in England. On 11th May, the objection was raised on behalf of the accused that there being no chief justice, the High Court was not properly constituted and therefore the Bench too had ceased to have jurisdiction to pronounce judgment in the case. The objection was based on Ol. 2, Letters Patent of the Patna High Court by which it was declared that the High Court shall consist of a chief justice and six other Judges. The Patna High Court was established under the Government of India Act, 1915. At the time the objection was raised in the Patna High Court, the Government of India Act, 1985, was in force. Clause 1 of S. 220 of the Act which enacts that every High Court shall consist of a Chief Justice and such other Judges as the Governor-General may from time to time deem it necessary to appoint was also considered. The Letters Patent of the Patna High Court did not provide for succession to the Chief Justice or other Judges if a vacancy occurred. But as the Letters Patent were subject to the legislative power of the Governor-General in Legislative Council, the situation arising from the happening of a vacancy was to be dealt with under S. 222, Government of India Act, 1935. This section lays down that if the office of the Chief Justice of the High Court becomes vacant, those duties shall, until some person appointed by His Majesty to the vacant office has entered on the duties thereof, or until the Chief Justice has resumed his duties, as the case may be, be performed by such one of the other Judges of the Court as the Governor. General may in his discretion think fit to appoint for the purpose. Even a temporary appointment by the Governor General would naturally take some time. The section, therefore, while taking note of the difficulty which may arise from the happening of a vacancy provides the remedy by laying down that the duties of the Chief Justice shall be performed by one of the other Judges whom the Governor-General may in his discretion think fit to appoint for the purpose. The implication is that the jurisdiction of the High Court would not be affected. The vacancy in the office of the Chief Justice arising from death or retirement would not affect the constitution of the Court. The jurisdiction of the other Judges also will not be affected. The duties of the Chief Justice could be performed by one of the other Judges appointed for the purpose by the Governor General. In the interval till the appointment is made no Judge of the High Court would be in a position to exercise the powers of the Chief Justice. But the Court will not loose its jurisdiction merely because there is a vacancy in the office of the Chief Justice. The office remains and therefore the constitution is not affected. By this process of the reasoning, the learned Judges of the Patna High Court came to the conclusion that where the office of a Chief Justice of a High Court remains vacant due to death of the Chief Justice or other cause, it cannot be said that till the vacancy is filled up there is no validly constituted High Court. Vacancy, in their opinion, did not mean total abolition of that office; it amounts merely to a suspension of the duties to be dis. charged by a Chief Justice. Other work and duties of the High Court could be carried on. If the High Court can remain properly constituted without a Chief Justice, it is obvious its constitution would not be affected if the Governor-General was not able to appoint other Judges of this Court when the Chief Justice was appointed. If the Chief Justice is the only judge of the High Court, he could perform the duties of the Chief Justice. He could also dispose of such judicial business of the Court as he was empowered to dispose of sitting singly, but the constitution of the Court could not be affected by delay in the appointment of other Judges required to be appointed under S. 220, Government of India Act or under S. 3, Assam High Court Order, 1948.

[4a] In Lalsingh v. Ghansham Singh, 9 ALL. 625: (1887 A. W. N. 154 (F.B.)), the contention raised was that the Allahabad High Court was not properly constituted in as much as the number of Puisne Judges was less than five. The Letters Patent of the High Court provided that the High Court was to consist of the Chief Justice and five Puisne Judges. The omission to appoint the fifth Judge was the basis of the argument that the High Court was improperly constituted and therefore could not exercise any jurisdiction till the appointment of a fifth Judge was made. The objection was overruled. Mahmood J. in the course of the argument observed as follows:

"The fact that His Majesty has omitted for several years to fill up a vacancy does not alter the constitution of the Court or make it illegal nor does it amount to altering Cl. 2 of the Letters Patent. If your argument is correct, supposing a Judge was to die, the whole working of the Court would be brought to a standstill until his successor could be appointed."

He even went further and remarked that even if the Crown was bound to fill up a vacancy within a specified time and acted illegally in not filling it up it did not follow that the constitution of the Court is vitiated so as to deprive the remaining Judges of all other jurisdiction.

[5] In Collector of Etah v. Golab Kunwar, A. I. R. (22) 1935 ALL. 822: (4 A. W. R. H. C. 79), the same question arose in another form. The objection to the constitution of the Court was on the ground that the provisions contained in cl. 4 of S. 101 of the then Government of India Act had been contravened. The clause referred to above provided that at least one third of the Judges of the High Court shall te barristers. It was argued that on the appointment of one of the Pusine Judges of that Court as the Chief Justice of the Lahore High Court, the constitution of the Allahabad High Court had broken down as no barrister Judge had been appointed in his place. Therefore the Chief Justice and other Judges lost all their jurisdiction to dispose of their judicial work. The contention was overruled. It was pointed out that if barrister Judge or a civilian Judge happens to die suddenly there is bound to be a vacancy and the Government would naturally take some time to make a suitable appointment. If in the interval the High Court were to be without any jurisdiction, some provision in the Government of India Act to that effect must have existed. If it does not exist it cannot be read into the Act. The ratio decidendi in all these cases is the same and we are in respectful agreement with the view taken in these cases. The result is that the vacancy in the office of the Chief Justice or in the office of a Judge necessary for the Court does not affect the constitution or the jurisdiction of the Court. The High Court retains its jurisdiction and its function can be carried even in the absence of a Chief Justice or other Judge or Judges necessary for the Court. In the absence of a Chief Justice it will not be possible for any one to perform his functions but the other Judges of the Court could continue their work and the High Court could function as such. Similarly a Chief Justice could perform his duties and also discharge his function as a single Judge in the absence of other Judges. The objection has got no force and is repelled.

[6] The second objection raised is that under R. 15 of Chap V relating to general rules of procedure (the Rules of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal), an application of revision must be presented direct to a Division Bench. In this case, the petition was presented to the Chief Justice alone and he issued the rule. The contention is that the presentation was invalid and the learned Chief Justice was not competent to issue the rule sitting singly. It is correct that the petition should have been presented to a Division Bench. But at the time the petition was put in there was only one Judge of this Court functioning. No Division Bench could have been constituted. The petition in those circumstances could have been received only by the office for formal presentation before a Division Bench later. That procedure would have avoided technical objection. The presentation of the petition to a single Judge and the issue of a rule by him, however, cannot be fatal to the petition. It is now before a Division Bench. It can be taken as formally presented now and the issue of a further rule can be dispensed with as the parties are before the Court and the record of the case is also available. There is thus no difficulty in the disposal of the petition. The learned counsel has pointed out that the petition, if taken as presented now will be barred by time. There is no period of limitation provided for petitions of revision and if there had been any, this could be a very fit case for the condonation of delay as the petitioner is not guilty of any laches or negligence. The petition was actually put in at a time when no objection on the score of limitation could have been taken. The objection is overruled.

[8] Plaintiffs (opposite parties 1-4) instituted a suit for recovery of Rs. 70,000 by the sale of the mortgaged property against the representatives of the mortgagors and other persons interested in the equity of redemption on 2nd January 1941. It took about six months to get written statement from the defendants. On 14th November 1941, an interim order staying further proceedings, in the suit was issued by the Calcutta High Court. This was vacated on 19th June 1942. In pursuance of another order by the High Court, a commission for the examination of a woman was issued. It was received. back unexecuted on 14th December 1942. On 18th December 1942, the suit was fixed for peremptory hearing on 9th January 1943. The order was communicated to the counsel for the plaintiffs on 21st December 1942. The plaintiffs got the information about the order on 29th December 1942. They had already left for their native place in the district of Arah in Bihar in November 1942. For reasons given in their application for adjournment of the case presented on 9th January, they applied for adjourment through their counsel. The adjournment was refused. The coursel then withdrew from the case as he had no further instructions and the suit was dismissed for default on that date. On 8th February 1943, plaintiffs applied for restoration of the suit under 0.9, R.9. They explained their inability to arrange for the prosecution of the suit on 9th January 1949, by stating that when the date for hearing was fixed, they were in Arah District in Bibar. Further, before getting information about the date of hearing, plaintiffs 1 and 4 had fixed the dates for the marriages of their sons. These marriages were to be celebrated on 16th and 19th January 1943, respectively. They could not, therefore, arrange to produce evidence on 9th January and then go back to their native district in Bihar in time to arrange for the celebration of marriages. Plaintiff 2 who was ill, had sent a medical certificate which was presented to the Court when the request for the adjournment of the case was made on plaintiffs' behalf. Plaintiff 3 was said to be a chronic invalid.

[9] On 29th March 1943, Mr. I. Rasul, who had dismissed the suit for default, ordered its restoration. He was inclined to the view that no sufficient cause prevented the plaintiffs from appearing in Court on 9th January, but in view of the statement of defendant 1, in para. 8 of the written statement and for the ends of justice, he agreed to set aside the order of dismissal of the suit and directed it to be restored to the file.

[10] Defendant 1 challenged the correctness of the order by a revision petition in the High Court at Fort William. The case came before a Division Bench of the High Court. The learned Judges held that the order of restoration was passed

"under a vague mixture of reasons, partly for reasons which are for consideration under O 9, R. 9 of the Code, and partly for reasons which would justify action under S. 151, and the parties have been put into some difficulties."

In these circumstances they held that instead of their diposing of the case on the merits, it was more suitable that the case should go back for a proper order to be passed by the Court below. The learned Judges laid down that the Court could not restore the case under its inherent powers under S. 151 of the Code, if it found that there was no sufficient cause for restoration within the meaning of o. 9, R. 9. The case was, therefore, remanded to the lower Court for disposal of the application under 0. 9 R. 9 on the evidence already on the record. The Court was further directed to come to a clear finding one way or the other whether it considered or did not consider that there was sufficient cause for non-appearance on 9th January and to restore the case or reject the application accordingly.

[11] On remand, the case again came before Mr. I. Rasul. He rejected the petition under O. 9, R. 9 holding that sufficient cause was not shown for non-appearance of the plaintiffs on 9th January. Plaintiffs preferred an appeal againt this order to the High Court. It was held in appeal that the learned Judge had not heard the parties or their pleader before disposing of the case after remand. The order rejecting the application was set aside. The learned Judge was directed to dispose of the application under O. 9, R. 9 according to law and in the light of observations made in previous order of remand. He was also directed to hear the pleader of the parties or parties themselves before disposing of finally the application for restoration of the suit.

[12] When this case was received back, Mr. Rasul had been transferred and the petition was disposed of by Mr. D. N. Hazarika, Spl. Sub-Judge, his successor in office. He felt satisfied that there was sufficient cause for the non-appearance of the plaintiffs on the date of hearing and setting aside the dismissal of the suit ordered its restoration on 13th March 1948. The plaintiff petitioners were directed to pay Rs. 50 to the opposite party as costs within a month from the date of the order.

[14] The first contention raised by the learned counsel for the petitioner is that Mr. D. N. Hazarika had no jurisdiction to hear and dispose of the petition. He contended that the case had been remanded for disposal by Mr. Rasul, who had dismissed the suit for default and had later restored it. His order being vague it had to be set aside. It is urged that considering the reasons on which the order of Mr. Rasul dated 29th March 1943 was set aside the intention of the High Court was that Mr. Rasul alone should dispose of the petition by a proper order. We have been taken through the whole of the order and its substance has been reproduced above. The main reason why this order was set aside was that it was not clear whether in the view of the Judge sufficient cause had been shown for non-appearance on 9th January 1943 or not. There were observations in the order of the learned Sub-Judge which indicated that he was making use of his inherent jurisdiction under S. 151. Since the order was not clear, the case was remanded. But in the last paragraph of the order, which embodies the directions of the Court, it was said that the case is remanded to the 'lower Court' for disposal of the application on the merits and on the evidence already on record. We are not prepared to read in this order any direction that the case was to be disposed of by Mr. Rasul and not by his successor.

(15) The second order of remand merely directs that parties must be heard before the disposal of the case. In all other respects, the previous order of remand was allowed to remain in tact and was to be followed. In these circumstances, the contention has got no force.

[16] The learned counsel has relied on two authorities viz. Bhoyro Lal v. Mokoond Lal, 2 Suther 275 and Bhyrub v. Khettur Mohun, 5 Suther 124, in support of his contention. These cases have no application to the facts of the case before us. In both these cases, the remand orders directed the Judges of the Court below to give their reasons for their decisions which they had omitted to state. There was to be no rehearing of the matter. In the present case, the direction in the order of remand was that the application be disposed of according to law after hearing the parties. These authorities, therefore, do not assist the petitioner in any way.

[17] The second contention raised is that the order of the special Sub-Judge is without jurisdiction in asmuch as all defendants were not properly served. It is admitted that the petitioner was served, appeared, and was heard. But, it is contended that service in the case of defendants 9-12 had not been duly effected and therefore the Court could not dispose of the petition in their absence It appears that after the last order of remand, substituted service was effected on these defendants The process-server's report was verified by an affidavit. This is not denied. The learned counsel points out that after the verification of the report by the process server, the Court should have declared that the summons had been duly served under 0 5, R. 19. The failure on the part of the Court to record an order declaring that service had been duly effected deprived it of all jurisdiction to dispose of the petition. He has not cited any authority in support of this proposition. It is a question whether declaration of due service under R. 19 must be in express terms. There is a conflict of authority on the point. But even if it is assumed for purpose of argument that an express declaration of due service is necessary, the omission to declare due service under the rule would be an irregularity on the basis of which the party adversely affected by the omission may ask for an opportunity to be heard. It would not affect the jurisdiction of the Court as regards parties that are present before the Court. The learned counsel for the petitioner could not cite any authority in support of the proposition that the order of the Court below would be wholly without jurisdiction merely because there was no declaration of due service in respect of some defendants who are not challenging the order and against whom the order has already become final It is worthy of note that defendants, on whom substituted service was effected, included a representative of a mortgagor and some mortgagees. They did not contest the petition for restoration of the suit at any stage. They have been served on this petition and have not appeared. It is clear that they are not feeling aggrieved by the order. The petitioner cannot take advantage of the irregularity, if any, as it is not possible to hold that the order of the Court below was without jurisdiction as contended by his learned counsel even as regards parties who were present and were heard.

tion of due service in express terms is imperative. We are inclined to the view taken by Oudh Chief Court, Harcharan v. Md. Azizullah, A. I. R. (19) 1932 Oudh 326: (141 I. C. 759) and the Lahore High Court, Tehal Singh v. Chainchal Singh, A. I. R. (21) 1934 Lah. 985. The declaration may be implied in the proceedings. Where such a declaration exists though by necessary implication, there would be no irregularity in the service and proceedings in the Court below will not be open to any objection. Now if Court had not been satisfied that the service on defendant dants 9 to 12 had been effected duly it would have ordered fresh service. This was not done. The implication, therefore, is obvious and densities the objection of all its force prives the objection of all its force. [19] The last contention is that sufficient cause for non-appearance was not made out and the order of the Special Sub-Judge was not sustainable as it took judicial notice of certain facts against the provisions contained in the Evidence Act and also relied on a medical certificate which had not been proved according to law. It is correct that the Court should not have taken judicial notice of the fact that railway travel at the time (January, 43) was uncertain. This was a matter for proof. Similarly, the unproved medical certificate could not be considered as evidence. But even if the medical certificate is not taken into consideration and the uncertainities of railway travel in January 1943 are not presumed, the order is not liable to interference. The learned Judge came to a definite conclusion that one of the plaintiffs was a chronic invalid. Another was ill. There was oral evidence about his illness, which the learned Judge did not reject. The other two plaintiffs according to evidence, had left Assam before the middle of November 1942. They learned about the hearing on 29th December. They had already made arrangements for celebrating the marriages of their sons on 16th and 19th January 1943. In these circumstances, in his view, it was extremely difficult for them to attend the Court on 19th January and then go back to their native district and make arrangements for two marriages. We think he was right in taking this view of the matter. The case had been proceeding at a very slow pace. When leaving the jurisdiction of the Court, plaintiffs had no idea that the case will be fixed for a peremptory bearing so early. In view of the circumstances in which they found themselves, their request for adjournment was reasonable. Plaintiffs took some risk in applying for adjournment, without making arrangements for the prosecution of the case in the hope that they will get it. But for this, a suit in which such a huge sum is being claimed need not have been dismissed. They could have been ordered to pay costs. As held by the Subordinate Judge, there is no basis for the view that plaintiffs were absent wilfully or without any reasonable cause. It is possible to arrive at this finding without taking judicial notice of the conditions of railway travel at the time and without taking into consideration the medical certificate objected to by the learned Judgment.—This is a first appeal from the judgment and decree of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge, A. V. D., dated 22nd April 1946, by which he dismissed the plaintiff's suit with no order as to costs.

[2] The suit instituted by the plaintiff, Joygobinda Prasad Shah, against Dwarikaprosad Shah and 11 others, upon a registered mortgage. bond executed by the father of defendant 1 on 30th September 1929, whereby he mortgaged certain lands and houses in favour of the plaintiff as security for a loan of Rs. 8244-3-0 with interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum. During the subsistence of the mortgage, he transferred some of the mortgaged properties to defendants 2 to 12. Defendants 3 and 4 were in possession of some of the mortgaged houses built upon land belonging to the Railway, and defendants 6 to 12 were in possession of some of the remaining mortgaged property. In the mortgage bond, the property mortgaged was described by their dag and patta numbers in use before the last Re-settlement. At the last Resettlement, the old numbers and pattas were given new numbers as shown in the schedule attached to the plaint. The area comprised in the new numbers and pattas is also mentioned in the schedule. The plaintiff sought a decree for the sale of the mortgaged property for a sum of Rs. 6000 including interest then due and costs of the suit, with future interest from the date of the suit till payment.

[3] Defendants 1. 5, 8 and 9 did not appear and contest the suit. Defendants 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 10, 11 and 12 denied the plaintiff's claim and alleged that the bond in suit was insufficiently stamped and was ineffective as a mortgage bond for want of proper registration. They further alleged that the mortgagor, the deceased Ramkhelaun Shah, was not the karta of the joint family and that the debt in question was not incurred for the family necessity, nor was it for its benefit. They claimed to be bona fide purchasers of the land for value and without notice of the encumbrance, and also pleaded that the suit was time barred and not maintainable in the absence of the joinder of the coparceners of the joint family of the plaintiff.

[4] Upon the pleadings, the trial Court framed

the following issues:

"1. Is the suit by the plaintiff alone maintainable?

2. Is the suit time barred?

3. Is the mortgage bond invalid for improper registration and insufficiency of stamp?

4. Was the mortgage debt incurred for the use and benefit of the joint family or for any legal necessity of the family?

5. Who was the Karta of the family of Ramkhelaun Dwarikaprosad at the time of the mortgage in question?

6. Whether Ramkbelaun borrowed the sum of Rs. 8244-3-0 from the plaintiff and executed the mortgage bond on 30th September 1929?

7. Whether the lands and the houses mentioned in the Schedule were mortgaged?

8. Whether the defendants were bona fide purchasers for value and without notice of the mortgage? And whether the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for sale of the lands and the houses purchased by the defendants?

9. Whether the mortgaged lands have been properly or rather adequately described?

10. What relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to ?

[5] On all the issues, except Issue 1, the findings of the trial Court were in favour of the plaintiff. On Issue 1, the trial Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit holding that the plaintiff alone was not entitled to sue.

[6] Mr. Sen for the appellant has contended that the plaintiff appellant's suit was not liable to be dismissed for the reasons stated by the trial Court; assuming that the plaintiff's sons are members of the joint family of which the plaintiff is the karta, the trial Court should have given an opportunity to the plaintiff to join his sons as parties to the suit. We think the contention is well founded. This was a suit by a mortgagee under the provisions of O. 34, Civil P. C., for the sale of the mortgaged property. The mortgage bond was executed in favour of the plaintiff alone and he alone, therefore, was entitled to bring a suit for the sale of the mortgaged property. It appears from the evidence of the plaintiff that the father of defendant 1 was a member of a Mitakshara Hindu joint family and was the karta of his family; the family business consisted of liquor shops at Guijan and Ledo and a sundry shop at Guijan; the father of defendant 1 had dealings with the plaintiff and, as a result of the dealings between them, the father of defendant 1 became indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of Rs. 8244-3-0. It was in respect of this indebtedness that the father of defendant 1 executed the mortgage bond. It is true that this debt of Rs. 8000 odd was due to the firm of Rajkumar Shah Joygovinda Shah, of which the plaintiff was a partner. After the dissolution of the partnership, however, the father of defendant 1 acknowledged his liability in respect of the debt to the plaintiff and executed the mortgage bond in his favour.

Court that the sons of the plaintiff were necessary parties to the suit, cannot be sustained in view of the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Kishan Prasad v. Har Narain Singh, 33 ALL. 272: (9 I. C. 739). The head-note to the decision, which is in conformity with their Lordships' judgment, reads as

"Where a joint family business has to be carried on in the interests of the joint family as a whole, the managing members may properly be entrusted with the power of making contracts, giving receipts, and compromising or discharging claims ordinarily incidental to the business; and where they are so entrusted and empowered, they are entitled as the sole managers of the family business, to make in their own names contracts in the course of that business, and to maintain suits brought to enforce those contracts without joining in the suit with them either as plaintiffs or defendants the other members of the family."

[8] There is no doubt from the facts of this case that after the dissolution of the plaintiff's partnership with the firm of Rajkumar Shab, the plaintiff was carrying on a joint family business in the interests of the joint family as a whole and was competent to obtain a mortgage bond from the father of defendant 1 as security for the debt acknowledged by him as being due to the plaintiff alone.

[9] In a later decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sheo Shankar Ram v. Mt. Jaddo Kunwar, 36 ALL. 383: (A. I. R. (1) 1914 P. C. 136), their Lordships of the Privy Council affirmed the decision of the Allahabad

High Court observing

"that the plaintiffs who sued to redeem a mortgage after foreclosure on the plea that they had not been parties to the mortgage suit, were properly and effectively represented in the suit by the managing members of the Hindu joint family, of which the plaintiffs were also members, and that in such a case, the Court was not bound to set aside the execution proceedings where substantial justice had been done merely because every existing member of the family was not formally a party to the suit."

Their Lordships also observed they saw no reason to dissent from the Indian decisions which showed that there were occasions, including foreclosure actions, when the managers of a Hindu joint family so effectively represented all the other members that the family as a whole was bound, and were of opinion that it was clear on the facts of this case; and on the findings of the Court upon them, that it was a case where that principle ought to be applied. There was not the slightest ground for suggesting that the managers of the joint family did not act in every way in the interests of the family itself and no question arose under S. 85, T. P. Act, (IV [4] of 1882), because the mortgagee had no notice of the plaintiff's interests.

[10] We cannot see how in the case before us the interest of the plaintiff's sons are in any way affected by the plaintiff alone having brought the suit for sale of the mortgaged property. It is a question of fact in each case whether the karta effectively represents the other members of the joint family, and we can find nothing in the facts of this case from which it can be inferred that the father did not represent the sons. The sons have not sought to be made parties to the suit.

"In the case of a Hindu family where all have rights, it is impossible to allow each member of the family to litigate the same point over and over again, and each infant to wait till he comes of age and then bring an action, or bring an action by his guardian before; and in each of these cases, therefore, the Court looks to Expln. 6 of S. 11, Civil P. C., to see whether or not the leading member of the family has been acting either on behalf of minors in their interest, or if they are majors, with the assent of the majors."

As we have observed, the plaintiff's sons, if they have any interest in the mortgage security, are properly represented by their father, the plaintiff.

[12] The decision of the Patna High Court in Hit Lal Mahton v. Jaboo Mahton, 3 Pat. 81: (A.I.R. (11) 1924 Pat. 458) is directly in point. In that case, it was held:

"Where a mortgage bond is executed in favour of two members of a joint Hindu family to secure money advanced from joint family funds, the mortgagees named in the bond are entitled to sue to enforce the bond without joining the other members of the family as parties."

Dawson Miller C. J. in delivering the judgment of the Division Bench, observed:

"The mortgagors entered into the transaction with the mortgagees in the name of the latter alone, treating them as the other contracting party. If, at the due date, the mortgagors had tendered the principal sum advanced together with any interest remaining due to the plaintiffs as mortgagees, it is conceded that the latter could have given a valid acquittance binding upon the other members of the family who were interested in the mortgage. It must be presumed that in entering into the transaction, they were authorized to do so on behalf of all the members of the family, and if they could grant a valid discharge to the mortgagors on payment of the principal sum, I can see no reason why they should not be presumed to have implied authority to enforce payment by a suit. The question appears to me to be one of authority and, if they were authorised to enter into the transaction on behalf of the family, I think it must be taken that they were equally authorised to institute a suit to enforce it."

Courts have taken the view that a mortgage suit brought by or against the manager of a joint Hindu family without impleading the other members of the family, does not fail on account of non-joinder. The Calcutta High Court, however, dissents from this view, but we think that, in view of the pronouncements of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the cases to which we have referred, the view of the Patna, Allahabad and Madras High Courts appears to be the better view.

[14] Mr. Barua for respondent 2 did not support the judgment and decree of the trial Court for the reasons stated by it, but urged another ground for the first time before us, namely, that as the partners of the dissolved firm of Rajkumar Shah Joygovind Shah have not been made parties to the suit, the suit was liable to be dismissed. We think there is no substance in this ground. It was the plaintiff's case that the debt due to the firm of Rajkumar Shah, of which he was a partner, was acknowledged by the father of defendant 1 as being due to him alone upon the dissolution of that firm. This was a question of fact which should have been agitated in the trial Court. Indeed we find that the plaintiff was not even questioned on this point. It was next contended that respondent 2 being in possession of the mortgaged houses which stood on the land belonging to the Railway and which the mortgagor had no right to mortgage, the houses should be regarded in law as chattels, and a suit for the sale of chattels was time-barred at the date of institution of the suit. Again, this point was not raised before the trial Court, and no authority has been cited to us in support of it.

that the provisions of the Assam Money lenders Act apply to the transaction in suit and that the decree-holder was in no case entitled to a decree for an amount exceeding twice the principal amount due. As we propose to set aside the judgment and decree of the trial Court on the issue of the maintainability of the suit and remand the appeal to the trial Court to enable it to pass the usual preliminary mortgage decree after notice to the advocate of the parties, it will be open to Mr. Barua to raise this point before the trial Court and obtain a decision thereon, before the preliminary decree is passed.

[16] Mr. Gupta for the respondent 12 raised only two points before us. Firstly, that respondent 12 was a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of the encumbrance, and secondly, that no mortgage decree could be passed in this suit because the properties mentioned in the schedule are not proved to be identical with the properties mentioned in the mortgage deed.

[17] As to the first contention, there is a finding of fact of the trial Court that respondent 12 had knowledge of the encumbrance. The learned Judge's finding is based upon the evidence of one Lakshmichand Agarwalla a witness examined on behalf of defendants 6 and 7, from whom respondent 12 purchased some of the mortgaged properties. It is clear from the evidence of Lakshmichand that he and the mortgagor went to Babu Prafulla Chandra Bagchi, an advocate, and one Rajani Chakravarty, a petition writer and sought the advice of the advocate in the matter of the sale of the property in suit. The advocate asked the witness toenquire from the Registration Office if there was any encumbrance, but the witness did not go to the Registration Office, nor did he make any enquiry to satisfy himself in this behalf. We think the trial Court was right in saying that the case of respondent 12 is no better than the case of defendants 6 and 7 who like other respondents except 2 and 12 have not contested the appeal.

[18] As to the identity of the mortgaged property with the property as mentioned in the schedule, we do not think there is any difficulty in passing a preliminary mortgage decree involving property mentioned in the mortgage bond; nor do we think there is any difficulty in passing a preliminary mortgage decree merely because the mortgaged property consists of a half undivided share of the property mentioned in the mortgage deed and that out of the half undivided share some portion of it has been sold to respondent 12, as is contended by his advocate. If and when the property is sold after the usual preliminary mortgage decree is passed, the sale will doubtless be limited to the half undivided share of the mortgaged property and the auctionpurchaser will get joint possession with the transferees of the mortgagor or those claiming under him. The question of the transferees of the mortgagor or those claiming under him retaining what has been given to them under the pattas issued to them by the Revenue authorities, will properly arise in a suit for partition, which may hereafter be instituted by the auction-purchaser The question of equities in favour of the transferees arising out of the grant of pattas to them by the Revenue authorities will be a matter for decision in a partition suit.

ment and decree of the trial Court is set aside and the appeal is remanded to the trial Court to pass a usual preliminary mortgage decree after notice to respondents 2 and 12. As we have observed, the learned advocate for respondent 12 who has raised the question of the applicability of the Assam Money-lenders Act before us, will be at liberty to agitate this point before the trial Court, before it passes a preliminary mortgage decree. The dispute as to the identity of the property will be decided by the trial Court if and when the mortgaged property is put to sale.

According to the proviso to S. 33, all that the plaintiff is required to do is that he should satisfy the Court that he requires the : land for his homestead or for cultivation in the manners stated in the proviso. The word 'requires' in the proviso is not used as synonymous with "needs". The emphasis is really on a bona fide demand for building a homestead or for cultivation. Judgment. — This appeal arises out of an ejectment suit which was dismissed by the trial Court. The order was affirmed in appeal. Plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

[2] The only live issue which requires determination at this stage of the case is whether the defendant is liable to ejectment. The trial Court found that the defendant had been in possession of the property for about 27 years before suit. Plaintiff could eject him only if he could satisfy the Court that he required the land for building his homestead or for cultivation by himself or by members of his family or by hired servants or labourers according to the proviso to S. 33 of the (Temporarily-Settled Districts) Tenancy Act. The learned Judge inspected the present homestead of the plaintiff and found that plaintiff had lands on the East and West of it. He had two other vacant homesteads also. On his own showing he had about 8 to 10 kears of land though, according to P. W. 3, the area owned by him would measure about 20 kears of land. On these facts, the learned Judge held that he wasnot satisfied that plaintiff requires the land for his homestead. He further found that plaintiff was living in his present homestead with three other co-sharers and might be finding it inconvenient, but more inconvenience and hardship would be caused to defendant 1 if he was evicted from the disputed land. In consequence, the finding arrived at was that defendant 1 was not liable to ejectment. The learned Subordinate Judge in appeal could not find any reason to differ from the view taken by the trial Court on the basis of evidence and local inspection.

[3] It appears to me that the proviso to S. 39 has been completely misunderstood by the Courts below. The learned Munsif went to see the existing homestead of the plaintiff and observed that besides the homestead occupied by him, he had other homesteads. He had also other land and though there were co-sharers occupying the homesteads on the land where his homestead is now situate, inconvenience that may result from it would be much less than that caused to defendant by his eviction. The point obviously has been decided more on a balance of convenience. The possible inconvenience or hardship to the defendant seems to have influenced the decision to a considerable extent. The local inquiry appears to have been confined to the plaintiff's needs for residential accommodation. The allegation of the plaintiff that he required the land for cultivation entirely escaped the attention of the Courts below.

stated in the proviso. The plaintiff did state in his plaint and also in his deposition in Court that he wanted it for both the purposes. The words "requires the land" which occur in the proviso have been the subject-matter of interpretation in several decisions of this Court, and it has been held that the word "requires" is not used as synonymous with "needs." The emphasis is really on a bona fide demand for building a homestead or for cultivation. What a plaintiff has to satisfy the Court about is that he is honestly wanting the land for his own use as required by the proviso. The idea is not to permit the eviction of a tenant in order to bring in another tenant or to enhance the rent. This ulterior purpose is to be excluded. His own right to eject a tenant, who has not acquired occupancy rights, is curtailed only to this extent that he may not eject a tenant who has been in possession for more than 10 years unless the purpose of ejectment is the building of a homestead for himself or for cultivation by himself as described in the section. The emphasis is, therefore, on his bona fides. There is no limit placed on his requirements. A plaintiff may have land in possession and he may be wanting more land. He is to satisfy the Court that he wants it for his own cultivation. If he can satisfy the Court on that point, he could have as much land for his own cultivation as he can manage. Similar consideration will govern where ejectment is prayed for in order to build a homestead though so far as residential accommodation is concerned, the question may be somewhat on a different footing so far as proof goes. In order to satisfy the Court that he requires the land for building a homestead, a plaintiff may have to bring out the circumstances which go to indicate that he has reasons for acting in the manner that be proposes to do. A man already owning half a dozen residential houses may not require another one. On the other hand, if an existing house is not suitable for some reason, the building of another house would certainly be reasonable as in this case. These are some points which bear on the question of bona fides though no bard and fast rule can be laid on the subject. The learned Munsiff has been influenced in this case by the fact that there are two other vacant homesteads and there will be inconvenience to the defendant if he is evicted. Plaintiff may have his own reasons for preferring a particular land for his homestead and it cannot be said such reasons do not exist in this case. The choice lies with him. If a homestead is needed, his selection of land is a matter which should rest with him. If another house is not required and circumstances indicate that the object of the ejectment suit is not what appears to be on the face of it, the position would be very different. But if the demand is bona fide and there are no adequate reasons for holding otherwise in the case plaintiff's freedom to select the site of his own house may not be restricted. The consideration of defendant's inconvenience is not relevant at all. If plaintiff is asking for ejectment bona fide, the fact that it will cause inconvenience to the defendant can be no reason for refusing the relief to the plaintiff. In fact, in all cases where ejectment is ordered, inconvenience is caused. If that were a relevant consideration, no ejectment decree would be possible. The learned Subordinate Judge in appeal has merely agreed with the finding of the Court below. He has given no other reasons beyond those stated in the trial Court's order. .

[5] Again the perusal of the judgments shows that the case has been examined only from the view point of plaintiff's requirements for residential accommodation. His case was that he wanted to cultivate the land also. There is no finding on that point. Plaintiff's bona fides might have been doubted if the case had been that the plaintiff wanted the entire 7 bighas of land for residential purposes. That, however, was not the case. He wanted the land for a homestead as well as for cultivation. He made a statement to that effect. He is suppported by one witness. Against that we have got the statement of the defendant alone; plaintiff purchased the land in 1939. Sometime after that he instituted a suit for ejectment and rent. He got a decree for rent, but his prayer for ejectment was not granted as a valid notice of ejectment had not been served on the defendant. This is the second suit for ejectment. His plea that he purchased the land for his own cultivation cannot easily be doubted considering his conduct subsequent to his purchase.

(6) On the evidence on the record I see no reason to doubt plaintiff's bona fides that he wants the land for his own purposes. The Courts below have approached the case from a very wrong point of view as shown above. They were influenced by a consideration of hardship that ejectment may cause to defendant. The finding, therefore, is not sustainable in law particularly in view of the fact that the real basis of the plaintiff's claim was not at all examined.

[7] Mr. Ghose has also claimed occupancy rights under clause (b) of S. 13 of the Act. The Courts below concurrently found that plaintiff had been in possession for about 27 years, but was not entitled to occupancy rights as possession had not covered the full period of 30 years. Mr. Ghose has tried to place the case under clause (b) of this section. He claims that defendant has got his homestead on the land and Twelve years' continuous possession, therefore, was enough for confirming the occupancy rights on him. It is obvious that this view of the case was not presented to the Court below. The fact that defendant had been in possession for more than 12 years was there in his favour and if it had been pointed out to the Court below, that the defendant was not liable to ejectment, the point would have been considered. It is clear that clause (b) has not been relied on at all at any previous stage of the litigation. In these circumstances, this is an entirely new contention which I do not allow at this stage of the litigation.

[8] As regards the plaintiff's allegation that he wants the land for his own cultivation, I have already found that it is not possible on the evidence on the record to give a finding against him. The appeal, in these circumstances, must succeed. It is allowed and the plaintiff is granted a decree for ejectment of the defendants in terms of the prayer contained in the plaint. Parties shall bear their own costs throughout.

Judgment.— This is a second appeal from the judgment and decree of the learned Additional Sub-Judge, A. V. D. Dibrugarh, dated sist July 1947, by which he set aside the judgment and decree of the trial Court which had decreed the plaintiff's suit for Rs. 466-8-0 with proportionate costs.

[2] The facts material to the appeal are these: The defendant respondent rented the houses in suit from the plaintiff appellant from 1st october 1942 at a monthly rent of Rs. 15; at the date of the suit in 1946, there was a sum of Rs. 510 due to the appellant as rent from 1st October 1942 to 31st July 1945. The respondent denied that there was a relationship of landlord and tenant between the appellant and himself. His case was that in 1942, when the threat of Japanese invasion was extending to Assam, the appellant entered into negotiations with him in his capacity as manager of the Charali Tea Estate, for the sale of the houses for a sum of Rs. 775, and Gouri Dutta Agarwalla, acting as agent of the appellant, received a sum of as 75 from him; Agarwalla passed a receipt for the money on the appellant's behalf on 19th August 1942. In pursuance of these negotiations, the Charali Tea Estate took possession of the land and the houses; the proper person, therefore, liable to be sued was the Charali Tea Estate, and not the respondent.

the following issues:

(1) Whether the suit is maintainable in the present form? And whether the suit is bad for non-joind-r of Charali Tea Estate as defendant? (2) Is the claim barred by limitation? (3) Is the rate of rent unreasonable and excessive? (4) Whether the defendant is liable for the plaintiff's claim? It so, to what extent? (5) To what relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?

[4] On issue 1, the trial Court held that having regard to Ex. 1, a letter written by the respondent to the appellant, the suit brought against the respondent in his personal capacity was maintainable and that it was not necessary for the appellant to implead the Charali Tea Estate.

[5] On the second issue, the trial Court came to the conclusion that a part of the claim was time-barred, namely, the claim from 1st october 1942 to 27th January 1943; the rest of the claim was within time. On issue 3, it decided that Rs. 15 p. m. was reasonable rent. On issue 4, it held that the defendant was personally liable to pay the rent at the rate of Rs. 15 p. m. In the result, it passed a decree for Rs. 466-8-0, with proportionate costs.

that the main question to be determined in the appeal was—whether there was a contract of sale between Gouri Dutta Agarwalla as the agent of the appellant on the one hand, and the respondent, as the agent of the Charali Tea Estate, on the other, or whether the house in question was rented by the respondent. It took the view that the determination of this question depended on the evidence of Gouri Dutta Agarwalla (P. W. 1) and the circumstances of the case, which failed to establish a relationship of landlord and tenant between the appellant and the respondent. In this view, it set aside the judgment and decree of the trial Court, and dismissed the appellant's suit with costs.

[7] We think the lower appellate Court has erred in law on the facts established in this case that there was a contract of sale of the property in suit between the appellant's agent on the one hand and the respondent acting as agent of the Charali Tea Estate.

[8] Mr. Barooah who appeared for the respondent, has conceded that he does not rely upon S. 53A, Transfer of Property Act, and further conceded that there were negotiations only for the sale of the property between the appellant through his agent, Gouri Dutt Agarwalla, and the Charali T. E., through its agent, the respondent; that until the appellant's agent had obtained authority from the appellant to sell the property in suit, the agreement for sale could not be given effect to.

[9] We think, Ex. 1, written by the defendant on 23rd September 1942, establishes beyond all doubt that pending receipt of authority from the appellant to sell the property, the property in suit was to remain in the possession of the respondent as a tenant. The translation of Ex. 1, which is not in dispute, is as follows:

"Gouri Babu,

With this letter, I am sending a specimen copy of amukhtarnamah. It will do well if it is written in this manner; please send this to your brother by registered post. I have asked you to send by registered post, so that it may not be lost. Send it to-day; delay is harmful to us.

Another thing; the shop house is lying vacant. The building materials of the house are being removed by others at their sweet will. There is want of space in our small shop house. If you will so permit, we want to remove our shop to your brother's house. So long it is not registered, I am agreeable to pay you rent. If you agree, please drop a line to the bearer of this letter, the amount you will demand as rent.

I hope you will please do this act of kindness to me.

Yours, Sd/-Bibhuti Prosad Singh."

[10] It is the case of the appellant that he sent a reply to the respondent agreeing to the respondent's occupation of the house in suit on payment of Rs. 15, P. M., as rent. At the trial, the appellant called upon the respondent to produce the reply to Ex. 1. The respondent failed to produce it, whereupon the plaintiff tendered a copy of the reply to Ex. 1., in evidence. The copy was admitted by the trial Court in the absence of any objection as to its admissibility.

[11] It is plain from the judgment of the trial Court that it was influenced by Exs. 1 and 2 in coming to the conclusion that pending the receipt of authority to sell the property, the respondent was to remain in occupation as a tenant of the appellant. The lower appellate Court in its judgment expressed the view that Ex. 2, ought not to have been admitted in evidence at the trial. Mr. Barooah for the respondent urged before us that the view of the lower appellate Court was right, and that if Ex. 2 were omitted from consideration, there was nothing to prove relationship of landlord and tenant between the appellant and the respondent.

[12] It is true that Agarwalla has stated in his evidence that Ex. 2 is a copy of a copy of the original letter written by the appellant to the respondent in reply to the respondent's letter, Ex. 1. But a copy of a copy is admissible in evidence if it has been compared with the original or a copy of the original taken out by means of a mechanical process. No question was put to Agarwalla at the trial suggesting that the copy tendered in evidence was not a copy taken. out by such process. Had the objection been taken at the trial, the plaintiff might have produced the copy taken out by such process. In the absence of any objection taken in this behalf at the trial, we do not think the lower appellate Court was right in saying that the trial Court was in error in admitting Ex. 2. In our view, the two documents, Exs. 1 and 2, disclose a contract of tenancy whereby the respondent agreed to pay rent to the appellant pending the completion of the sale on obtaining the required authority from the appellant.

[13] It was next contended by Mr. Barooah for the respondent that assuming that there was a contract of tenancy, the rent was not fixed and that the reasonable rent in this case is not Rs. 15 P. M. but Rs. 5 P. M. Apart from the fact that by Ex. 2 the appellant intimated to the respondent that the rent would be Rs. 15 a month, to which the respondent raised no objection, we think, in the circumstances of this case, the trial Court was not unreasonable in fixing Rs. 15 a month as reasonable rent.

[14] In this view, we set aside the judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court and restore that of the trial Court, with costs throughout.

A mortgagee decree-holder purchasing the mortgaged property in execution of his mortgage decree is entitled to invoke S. 9 (2), in a suit by him against a prior usu-fructuary mortgagee of the same property, for declaration of title and possession, and claim that by virtue of S. 9 (2) the prior mortgage stands extinguished.

Annotation: ('45-Com.) T. P. Act, S. 58, N. 35 and

S. K. Ghose - for Appellant.

M. N. Roy - for Respondents.

Ram Labhaya J.—This is an appeal from the judgment and decree of the Additional District Judge, Cachar, dated 25th November 1946 by which he affirmed the order of the Subordinate Judge dated 5th June 1945 granting plaintiff a decree declaring his title to and granting khas possession of the suit land by eviction of the defendants therefrom.

[2] The land in suit belonged to Atan Chouba. On 11th July 1926, he mortgaged it to Abantan, defendant 3. The mortgage consideration was Rs. 300 and the mortgage was for a period of three years. Possession was, according to the recitals contained in the document, handed over to the mortgagee, who was to continue to enjoy and possess the land on payment of revenue every year. The relevant portion of the deed of mortgage is reproduced below:

Itake Rs. 300 in cash from you by mortgaging the lands for a period of 3 years. From today you continue to enjoy and possess the lands as per schedule below on payment of revenue every year. I shall redeem the lands by paying your money within the period mentioned; until the amount is paid, the said lands will remain in your possession. I shall not be able to transfer, or gift or mortgage the said land until the amount is paid, I have not sold or gifted or mortgaged the property to anyone. I shall be punished according to law if that is found out. I have no objection to the Ejara being registered according to law. Finis 11th July 1926."

[3] The parties described the document as an Ejara. It is agreed before us that the document embodies a mortgage notwithstanding the fact that it is described as an Ejara.

[4] On 6th May 1927, Atan Chouba executed a simple mortgage in favour of plaintiff's father. The consideration for the mortgage was for Rs. 100. Plaintiffs sued on the mortgage for sale of the property. They got a decree and purchased the property in execution sale on 1st February 1937. Their case is that they also obtained delivery of possession through Court on 17th March 1938 and after obtaining possession they settled the land on tenants. Defendant 1, who claimed to have purchased the rights of Abantan, the prior mortgages, instituted proceedings under s. 145, Cr. P. C., against them and succeeded in getting possession through the Oriminal Court. Plaintiffs have sued for a declaration of title and khas possession of the land.

[5] The plaintiffs have averred in their plaint that the mortgage in favour of defendant 3 whose right defendant 1 claimed to have acquired, had been redeemed before their mortgage. It was mortgaged to them on this representation. Defendant 1, it is claimed, had then no subsisting right. Another ground of claim put forward was that the mortgage if not redeemed has been extinguished by operation of the law as contained in S. 9 (2), Assam Money lenders' (Amendment) Act. 1943.

[6] Defendant 1 resisted the suit. The Courts below have come to the conclusion that defendant 1 has stepped into the shoes of the prior mortgagee. His mortgage was never redeemed as alleged in the plaint but that it stood extinguished by operation of the provisions of law contained in S. 9 (2), Assam Money-lenders' (Amendment) Act.

[7] Defendant 1 has appealed to this Court. His learned counsel urges that plaintiffs could not invoke the aid of s. 9 (2) of the said Act in this suit as framed. He also contends that the mortgage in favour of the defendants not being usufructuary, s. 9 (2) had no application.

[8] I see no force in the first contention. Plaintiffs had purchased the property in the course of the execution of their decree for sale. The rights of the mortgagor were thus acquired by the plaintiff. The sale of the property no doubt would be subject to the rights of the prior mortgagee if his rights were subsisting. Plaintiffs' case was that either that prior mortgage had been redeemed before his mortgage or it has been extinguished by operation of law and defendant 1 has, therefore, no subsisting rights. Now, it is not disputed that plaintiffs purchased the property in execution sale and they stepped into the shoes of the mortgagor. If the prior mortgage has been extinguished, he can claim possession on that basis. If on the other hand, the mortgage is still subsisting, he must redeem the prior mortgage in order to obtain possession of the property. Section 9 (2) lays down that a usufructuary mortgage the consideration for which does not exceed Rs. 500 if made before the Act as in this case shall be extinguished on the expiry of a period of 12 years from the date of its execution. If the mortgage is usufructuary, it would stand extinguished on 11th July 1938, and defendant 1 will have no right to remain in possession of the property. If a mortgagor claims possession of the property on the ground that the mortgage has become extinct by reason of the expiry of the period of time laid down for it in S. 9 (2), he could sue for title and possession. This suit is based on the right which S. 9 (2) gives to the mortgagor whom the plaintiffs admittedly represents. This provision of the law deals with substantive rights and not with procedure. It lays down that a moregage of the kind referred to therein would automatically stand discharged on the expiry of a period of 12 years. If, therefore, S 9 (2) applies, the mort. gagor will be entitled to sue for possession without payment of any money and if he also asks for a declaration of title, he would not be offending against the letter or the spirit of the Act. I have no hesitation in repelling this contention.

[9] The second contention raised is that the mortgage on which defendant 1 relies was not usufructuary in nature and therefore the provisions contained in S. 9 (2), Assam Money Lenders (Amendment) Act, 1943, are not attracted. This contention must prevail though on grounds wholly different from those on which the learned counsel has based it. The relevant part of the mortgage deed has been reproduced above. It provided that the mortgage was for a period of three years and that from the date of the execution of the deed, the mortgagee was to enjoy and possess the lands on payment of revenue every year. The further provision is in the following terms—

"I shall redeem the lands by paying your money within the period mentioned; until the amount is paid, the said lands will remain in your possession."

This is a clear undertaking to pay the money within three years. Where there is an express undertaking to pay money contained in a deed of mortgage, even though the mortgage is with possession, it is not an out and out a usufructuary mortgage. It partakes of the character of a simple mortgage also and is thus converted into an anomalous mortgage being a simple cum-usufructuary mortgage. An undertaking or a promise to pay money or rather the personal covenant is found in this document side by side with the right of the mortgagee to enjoy and possess the lands on payment of land revenue Wherever there is a personal covenant in a mortgage, it implies that the mortgagee has the right to bring the property to sale. The mortgage, in these circumstances, cannot be treated as purely usufructuary. This view of the law finds support from Qadir Parast Khan v. Mehr Nur Mahomed, A. I R. (22) 1935 Lah. 103: (16 Lab. 612). In this case, the mortgage deed provided that the mortgage money would be paid on the 1st of Poh, Sambat 1984, corresponding to 15th December 1927 when the land would be redeemed. It was held that the mort. gage though partly usufructuary contained an express promise on the part of the mortgagor to pay the sum on a particular date and to redeem the land on that date. Taken as a whole the mortgage, therefore, was an anomalous one.

[10] In the present case there is similarly an express promise to pay the money not on a specified date but within a specified period. This distinction is without a difference. The principle of the Lahore case: (A. I. R. (22) 1935 Lah. 103: 16 Lah. 612) therefore, fully applies to this case. It was further held in that case that "usually a personal covenant to pay is held to have the effect of implying a right of sale."

[11] In Mahomed Saced v. Habdul Alim,
A. I. R. (34) 1947 Lah. 40: (I. L. R. (1946) Lah.
805), a Full Bench of the Lahore High Court held that the mortgage deed before them contained a personal covenant. Having found this, they held that

"it was a settled proposition of law that if a deed of mortgage contains a personal covenant to pay the principal mortgage debt or interest by the mortgagor such a covenant implies the right of sale unless there is some specific terms to the contrary."

[12] Other cases which support the Lahore case may now be examined. In (1) Hikmat-ullah Khan v. Imamali, 12 ALL 203 : (1890 A. W. N. 87), land was mortgaged for a terms of four years. The mortgage money was to carry interest. The mortgagee was put in possession of the property. It was further stipulated that the mortgagee will pay Government revenue and after defraying the village expense, whatever profit will remain will be credited towards the yearly interest and if there was any further balance it was to be credited towards principal In case of any deficiency, the mortgagor was to make it good from his pocket and on his paying the whole of the money, principal and interest, at the time of the expiry of the term, the mortgaged property was to be redeemed. It was held that the instrument could not be regarded as strictly falling within the definition of cl. (d) of S. 58, T. P. Act as it was lacking in a stipulation in terms that the mortgages is to remain in possession until payment of the mortgage money. The learned Judges, in these circumstances decided to apply the principal enunciated in S. 98, T. P. Act.

[13] (2) In Chhatilal v Bindeshwari Prasad, 8 Pat 16 (A I R (16) 1929 Pat 605), a zarpesbgi deed executed for a term of years but which did not authorise the mortgagee to retain possession until repayment of the mortgage money was held to contain an implied covenant on the part of the mortgagor to pay the money even though the bond did not contain an express promise to repay. The transaction was held not to be usufructuary mortgage within the meaning of 8 58 (d), T. P Act. It was held that in such a case the mortgagee was entitled on the expiry of the term to sue for the mortgage money irrespective of whether the security has been rendered insufficient or the mortgagee has lost possession of the mortgaged property.

[14] (3) A Division Bench of the Bombay High Court considered the question in Dattam. bhat v. Krishnabhat, 34 Bom 462. (7 I. C. 446). The m rtgage provided that the mortgage money shall be repaid within two years. The recital in the mortgage deed was as follows "I shall repay your money in two years from today." The mortgage was with possession. The mortgagee was to cultivate the land and enjoy it in lieu of interest. It was held that it was not a case of a purely usufructuary mortgage but a case in which the mortgage money was to become payable by the mortgagor and therefore in the absence of a contract to the contrary, the mortgagee had the right under S. 67, T. P. Act, to an order that the property be sold.

[15. (4) The facts in K. Gurukal v. Kalimuthu Anavi, 27 Mad 526 (F B.) are identical with the facts of this case. The relevant portion of the mortgage deed was as follows:

"Thereafter, on (naming a date) on paying (the amount advanced) we shall redeem our land. If on the date so fixed the amount be not paid and the land recovered back, in whatever year we may pay (the amount advanced) on (naming the date) of any year then you shall deliver back our lands to us."

It was held that the mortgage deed contained a promise by the mortgagor to pay on the date named and this entitled the mortgagee to a decree for the mortgage money under cl. (a) of s. 68, T. P. Act and to a decree for sale under s. 67, the right to cause the mortgaged property to be sold in default of payment being implied within the meaning of s. 68 (b). The learned Judges found that the mortgage was a combination of simple and usufructuary mortgage within the meaning of s. 98, T. P. Act, and therefore the mortgagee was entited to bring the property to sale for recovery of his money.

[16] A discordant note, however, has been struck in a Division Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court reported in Bhut Nath v. Gopal Prosud, A. I. R. (27) 1940 Cal. 436: (193 I. C. 26) The mortgage in this case was with possession and the stipulation was that the mortgagee should remain in possession till the sum advanced was paid and enjoy the usufruct in lieu of interest. The mortgage bond further mentioned a period after which the mortgagor undertook to redeem the property on payment of the principal money. Relying on a previous case decided by the Court Luchmeshar Singh v. Dukhmochan Jha, 24 Cal. 677 the learned Judges held that the provision of a term in a usufructuary mortgage was contemplated by S 62 (b), T. P Act. The undertaking on the part of the mortgagor to redeem the property after the fixed term was held not to entitle the mortgagee to demand the money after the expiry of the due date. The covenant in the mortgage that the mortgagee would go on bolding and enjoying the property even after the default by the mortgagor was taken as indicating that the mortgages could not sue for recovery of the money by sale of the property.

[17] Clause (b) of s. 62, T. P. Act, as it stands covers all the classes of a usufructuary mortgage as defined in S. 58 (d) which are not included in cl. (a). It recognises that the mortgagee may be given possession and the right to pay himself from rents and profits or any part thereof for a term fixed in the deed of mortgage. Cases covered by cl. (b) are generally cases in which the mortgagee pays bimself out of the property mortgaged or any part thereof. The arrangement contemplated by this section is conceivable without a personal covenant. Where, however, a document embodies in express terms or by necessary implication a personal covenant or an undertaking to pay the mortgage money, the case would be taken out of the ambit of S. 58, cl. (d). The determining factor in each case would be the terms of the document itself.

[18] In the Calcutta case there was an undertaking by the mortgagor to redeem the property on payment of the principal money after the expiry of a term. This undertaking or obligation created a corresponding right on the mortgagee. If the mortgagor was bound by the terms of the mortgage to pay the principal sum and redeem the mortgage on a given date, the breach on his part would give the right to the mortgagee to recover the money. There can be no obligation without a corresponding right. The learned Judges held that though the undertaking to redeem on payment of the principal money was there in the mortgage, the deed did not say that the mortgagee will be entitled to demand the money on that date. This need not be stated expressly. A personal covenant does imply that the mortgagee has the right to bring the property to sale on default. The condition in the document allowing the mortgagee to continue in possession even after the default till the amount is paid does not deprive the mortgagee of the right to demand money when the breach of the obligation to pay occurs. There would be no point in an undertaking if it is not capable of enforcement. It can be enforced only if there is a corresponding right to sue in the mortgagee. The view taken in this case conflicts with the view taken in the cases discussed above.

[19] The Patna case referred to above represent the extreme view. It was held that where mortgage is redeemable after a term, there is an implied personal covenant. It is not necessary for the purposes of this case to go so far. In the case before us, there is a personal covenant contained in the document and the necessary implication of the covenant is that it gives rise to a corresponding right in the mortgages to recover the amount by sale of the property if it is not paid within the period specified.

case of the Madras High Court provided that the mortgage will be redeemed on a certain date and if it was not redeemed on that date, it could be redeemed on a fixed date in any subsequent year. In spite of this, it was held that there was a personal covenant contained in the deed. It is clear that the view taken in the Calcutta case is opposed to all other cases discussed above. We find ourselves in respectful agreement with the majority view and hold that the mortgage in this case is not purely a usufructuary mortgage containing as it does a personal covenant. It can be appropriately described only as an anomalous mortgage.

[21] Mr. Ghose has relied on Towahir Ali v. Md. Moniruddin, 53 C. W. N. 96, in support of his contention. This case is obviously distinguishable. Besides, my learned brother did not intend to lay down any rule of general application in that case. It may also be remarked that his observations as to the requirements of a usu-fructuary mortgage are obiter.

[22] In view of our finding that the mortgage deed does not fall within the purview of S. 9 (2), Assam Money-lenders' (Amendment) Act, it must be found that the mortgage is still alive and has not been extinguished by the expiry of a period of 12 years from the date of its execution. The plaintiff, in these circumstances, would not be entitled to a decree for possession against

[23] The mortgagor has the immediate right to redeem the property. Plaintiff, in these circumstances, may remove the encumbrance on the property by paying off the mortgage money due to defendant 1. Without this payment, he cannot demand possession of the property as against defendant 1. The decree in plaintiffs' favour therefore must be modified accordingly.

[24] We, therefore, order that on deposit of Rs. 300 due to defendant 1 on his mortgage in Court, plaintiff will become the owner of the property and will be entitled to possession. The appeal has succeeded partially. In view of the somewhat complicated nature of questions involved in the case, it is ordered that parties shall bear their own costs throughout.

The test for determining whether a person has got a right of appeal is whether any part of the decree affects his interest adversely. If the answer to the question is in the affirmative, he will have a right to appeal. It is a question of fact to be determined in each case according to its peculiar circumstances. Where existence of this right is in doubt, the benefit ought to go to the appellant: 62 Cal. 701 and A. I. R. (13) 1926 Cal. 1113, Rel. on. [Para 6]

Two brothers A and B constituted a joint Hindu family. A transferred the family lands to C by a registered sale-deed. Subsequently B transferred his share to D. D brought a suit for declaration of title and joint possession of suit land purchased by him against A, B and C. The defence raised was common to all the three defendants and was that B had no right to transfer his share to plaintiff as it had already been transferred to C. The suit was decreed on appeals. B alone appealed:

Held that as the two transfers to C and D could not stand together, the transferors A and B could not be regarded as persons having no interest in the controversy. The finding one way or the other will have effect on their interests. B had, therefore, as much right of appeal as C had against the decision and therefore appeal by B alone was competent: A. I. R. S. K. Ghose-for Appellant.

B. C. Barua-for Respondents.

Ram Labhaya J .- This appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration of title to and for joint possession of the suit land. The suit was instituted under the following circumstances:

[2] Plaintiff purchased half share in the land in dispute from Surendra, defendant 3, by a registered sale deed on 3rd March 1944. He states that he was informed about a week later that Surendra's elder brother Jugalkishore had sold the entire land including Surendra's share to Bajua, defendant 1, on 25th February 1944. Plaintiff claims that defendant 2 had no right to sell the share of defendant 3 and he is, therefore, entitled to the relief he has claimed.

[3] Defendant 1 the transferee from defendant 2 and both the brothers defendants 2 and 3 have resisted the suit. They have pleaded that the sale in plaintiff's favour was voidable at the instance of defendant 3 as it was brought about by the exercise of undue influence. They further contend that defendant 3 was bound by the sale of the property in favour of defendant 1 as that sale had been made by defendant 2 as a karta of the joint family of defendants 2 and 3 for family necessity. On the date that defendant 3 had sold the property to the plaintiff he had no rights in it. Both these pleas prevailed with the trial Judge. He therefore declined to grant plaintiff a declaration of title and a decree for joint possession, and instead passed a decree in his fayour for a sum of Rs. 700 (against defendants 2 and 3) which represented the consideration he had paid to defendant 3. This sum carried interest at the rate of 12 % per annum. Plaintiff was not satisfied with this decree. He appealed.

[4] The learned Additional Judge, A. V. D., reversed the order of the trial Court and granted plaintiff a decree in terms of the prayer contained in his plaint holding that though defendants 2 and 3 were members of a joint Hindu family defendant 2 had never purported to act as karts and the transfer made by him in favour of defendant 1 was not justified by valid necessity. Defendant 3 alone has appealed to this Court.

[5] A preliminary objection has been raised by the learned counsel for the respondent. He points out that defendant 3 has got no right of appeal. The reason that he has given in support of this contention is that defendant 3, according to his own showing has got no subsisting interest in the property. His defence is that he is bound by the sale in favour of defendant 1. The property, therefore, vests in defendant 1, who is not appealing. The decree, it is argued, can have no adverse effect on the interest of defendant 3 in these circumstances. He has relied on Chandrika Baksh Singh v. Indar Bikram Singh, 43 I. A. 179; (A. I. R. (3) 1916 P. C. 14) and Nandlal v. Naresh Chandra, A. I. R. (4) 1917 Pat. 585: (41 I. C. 468).

[6] The contention raised is not sound in our opinion. The test for determining whether a person has got a right of appeal is whether any part of the decree affects his interest adversely. If the answer to the question is in the affirmative, he will have a right of appeal As held in Harachandra Das v. Bhola Nath Das, 62 cal. 701: (61 c. L. J. 353), it is a question of fact to be determined in each case according to its peculiar circumstances. Where the existence of this right is in doubt, the benefit ought to go to the appellant: vide Salimuddin Ahmmad v. Rahim Sheik, A. I. R. (13) 1926 Cal. 1113:

[7] Defendant 3 was undoubtedly a contesting defendant. The defences raised were in fact common to all the three defendants. The main plea was that defendant 3 had no right to transfer his share of the property to the plaintiff as it had already been validly transferred to defendant 1. The learned Judge in appeal has found against the defendants on this point. He has passed a decree in plaintiff's favour and granted him joint possession with defendant 1. All the three defendants are adversely affected. All or any one of them could appeal. The right of defendant 3 to contest the suit cannot be denied. If he had the right to contest the suit on a certain plea, he cannot be deprived of that right if the plea does not prevail in the trial Court or in the Court of first appeal.

[8] The learned counsel has not been able to cite any authority which will cover the circumstances of this case. The Privy Council decision, Chandrika Baksh Singh v. Indar Bikram Singh, 43 I. A. 179: (A. I. R. (3) 1916 P. C. 14) which he has relied on is distinguishable and affords no guidance for the purposes of this case. It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that a decree obtained by a plaintiff against three defendants declaring plaintiff's title to immovable property cannot be reversed upon an appeal by one of the defendants who admits that he has no title to the property. The learned Subordinate Judge had found in that case that Raja Indar Bikram Singh had no title to the property. The correctness of this finding was not disputed in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh. Their Lordships, in these circumstances, observed that "it should have been apparent to the Judges of that Court who were hearing the appeal that, as Raja Indar Bikram Singh had failed to prove that he was, even remotely, concerned in the title to Mahagawan and in the right to the proprietary possession of that taluka, he had no title to protect and no interest which could give him a right to contest the declaration of title which Babu Chandrika Baksh Singh had obtained, and that the appeal to that Court should be dismissed."

[9] The case of defendant 3 in the appeal before us is very different. He had a ½ share in the property. There have been two transfers so far as the share of defendant 3 is concerned. Plaintiff is the transferee of the share from defendant 3. Defendant 1 is the transferee of the share of both the brothers. The two transfers cannot stand together. The transferors in these circumstances cannot be regarded as persons who have got no interest in the controversy. The finding one way or the other will have effect on their interests.

[10] Nandlal v. Naresh Chandra, A. I. R. (4) 1917 Pat. 585: (41 I. C. 468), is also distinguishable on facts. In this case plaintiff's claim or a declaration of title to property was disallowed. A proforma defendant, to whom plaintiffs had agreed to sell the property, wanted to appeal from the decree. It was held that he had no right of appeal and was not a necessary party to the suit. The agreement of sale, it was held, did not create any right in the property and he could not be held to have been adversely affected. This case has nothing in common with the facts of the present case and as held above, the question has got to be decided with reference to the peculiar circumstances of the case before us.

[11] No other authority has been cited before us. We are of opinion that defendant 3 has got as much right of appeal as defendant 1 had against the decision given by the learned Additional Judge and even if there were some doubt, it would be safer to give the benefit to him. We hold, therefore, that the appeal is competent.

[12] On the merits, the only question to be determined is whether the sale in favour of defendant 1 was made by defendant 2 as karta of the family and the sale is supported by family necessity.

[13] It is admitted that when the father of defendants 2 and 3 died, defendant 3 was a minor. The father had left ancestral property. The two brothers lived together and defendant 2 was looking after the family property and managing its affairs.

[14] Both the Courts were agreed that in these circumstances the two brothers formed a joint Hindu family. But the learned Additional Judge was of the view that the mere existence of a joint Hindu family did not necessarily raise the presumption that the elder member of the two was the karta of the family. He observed that in previous mortgage deeds of the family property executed in 1932, defendant 2 did not purport to act as karta of the joint Hindu family. The mortgage deeds were executed by him on his own behalf and as guardian of his minor brother who though a minor was made to attest these documents. He further pointed out that even in the sale-deed in favour of defendant 1, defendant 2 did not describe himself as the karta of the family. He also referred to another sale deed relating to the joint family property which was executed by defendant 2 in favour of defendant 1 on 27th January 1944. Even in this document defendant 2 did not describe himself as karta. The conclusion drawn from this evidence was that he was not a karta. This inference is not legitimate. The family is admittedly joint. The members are joint in mess. The property is held jointly. It was being managed by defendant 2. Defendant 3 was in the Air Force. His wives were living with defendant 2. It is obvious that defendant 2 was managing the family affairs as a karta. The de facto exercise of the powers of a karta is apparent. In law he had the authority to function as a karta. This authority had never been challenged or disputed by defendant 3, even after the attainment of majority by him. The mortgage deeds and the sale-deeds executed by defendant 2 relate to the family property. In the first two documents the minor is shown as a party to the documents and is represented by defendant 2, who described himself as guardian. But this does not take away from him his capacity as karta. An elder brother who is the karta in a joint Hindu family has also the right to manage the property of the minor members of the family. His description of himself as a guardian therefore is not inconsistent with his status as a karta of the family. In fact, after the death of the father and during the minority of defendant 3, defendant 2 could not help acting as karta. The failure, therefore, to describe bimself as karta in his dealings with the joint family property is not sufficient to show that he ceased to act as karta when there is absolutely no suggestion that there has been any partition or disruption of the joint family. The learned counsel for the plaintiff-respondent has made no serious attempt to support this part of the judgment of the learned Judge. He has, however, urged that the sale in favour of defendant 1 was not for valid necessity and therefore it is not binding on defendant 3, whose representative the plaintiff is. Assuming that plaintiff has got the right to challenge the transfer, we have now to see whether the transferee has succeeded in showing that there was necessity for the sale in his favour. The sale consideration was Rs. 1500. It is conceded that on the date of the sale in favour of defendant 1, a mortgage debt of Rs 500 binding on the family was due to Karamat, defendant 4. Similarly, a sum of Rs. 300 was due to the plaintiff. These sums were paid off from the sale consideration. The learned counsel urges that defendant 2 had sold some family property for as. 800 on 27th January only about a month before the transfer in question. These debts should have been paid off from the consideration of that sale and if these liabilities were not then discharged, it cannot be said that there was necessity for a further transfer. The argument loses sight of the fact that the transferee so far as the transaction in dispute is concerned, had not to enquire as to what had happened to the money that defendant 2 got by a previous sale. That sale may be questionable or the money realised from that sale may not have been spent on a family purpose. On the date of the sale in question, the liabilities to the extent of Rs. 800 existed and even if these liabilities are attributable to mismanagement on the part of the Manager, they constitute a valid necessity as there is no suggestion or proof that the transferee (defendant 1) contributed to this mismanagement. The main purpose of the transfer, therefore, was a valid necessity of the family. The balance of the consideration has been invested in property acquired for the family and it has not been · pressed that this investment was not for family benefit Defendant 3, therefore, was bound by the sale and plaintiff, as his representative, cannot challenge it successfully.

[15] The result is that the appeal is allowed. The order of the learned Additional Judge is reversed in favour of all the defendants as the point on which appellant succeeds was raised by all the three defendants and it is further ordered that the order of the trial Judge be restored. Parties shall bear their own costs throughout.

Thadani Ag. C. J.—I agree.

K.S. Appeal allowed.

Deputy Commissioner, Goalpara - Peti. tioner v. Upendra Saran Sanyal and others-Opposite Party.

on 4th August 1949.

(a) Contempt of Courts Act (1926), S. 2 - Person criticised must be Court - Sub-Deputy Collector acting under Assam Land and Revenue Regulation. S. 142, imposing fine Appeal pending against his order-Public meeting held condemning his action —No contempt of Court.

Sub-Deputy Collector wrote to the Secretary of a Ladies' Clun that he had to inspect the records of the Club in his official oa: acity and that he would inspect the same the next day. Next day he visited the Clut premises and finding the Secretary of the Club absent. he ordered in her absence to puy a fine of Rs. 10 under S. 142, Assam Land and Revenue Regulation. An appeal was filed against this order in the Court of the Deputy Commissioner. While this appeal was pending a public meeting was held in which the action taken by the Sub-D-puty Collector was criticised. This meeting was convened by a public notice issued over the signatures of the eleven persons. On an allegation that the contents of the notice and the speeches delivered at the meeting constituted contempt or Court :

Held (1) that having regard to the relevant provisions of the Rules framed under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, neither the enquiry and report called by the Deputy Commissioner on the application of the Samiti from the Sub Deputy Collector nor his action taken or purporting to have been taken under Ss 141 and 142 of the Regulation were proceedings of a judicial nature;

(2) that having regard to the relevant provisions of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, the Deputy Commissioner was not a Court in which the appeal preferred against the order of the Sub Deputy Collector was pending;

(3) that whatever was done with respect to the public notice and said in the meeting by the eleven persons could not be regarded as contempt of Court. [Para 17]

(b) Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (1886). Ss. 141, 142 and 147 - Non-judicial proceeding cannot be regarded as judicial proceeding because there is statutory provision for right of appeal.

There is no justification for the proposition that a non-judicial proceeding taken by the Sub Deputy Collector under Ss. 141-142 must be regarded as a judicial proceeding merely because there is a statutory provision under S. 147 for a right of appeal from an order made in a non-judicial proceeding. The character of the original proceeding is not changed, notwithstanding the statutory right of appeal against an order made in a non-judicial proceeding. [Para 16]

(c) Contempt of Courts Act (1926), S. 2-In absence of definition of 'Court' in Act, that word is to be interpreted in its general sense,

The word "Court" has not been defined in the Contempt of Courts Act. In the absence of any definition of the word in that Act, the word has got to be interpreted in its general sense: A. I. R. (22) 1935 Mad. 673 and A.I.R. (27) 1940 Cal. 286, Rel. on. [Para 25]

Thadani Ag. C. J. - On 23rd April 1949, the Deputy Commissioner of Goalpara, Shri K. C. Barua, addressed a letter to the Registrar (Judicial) of this Court, in these terms :

"I have the honour to bring the following facts to your kind notice for taking necessary actions as the Hon'ble Court deems fit. The facts appear to me to constitute an offence under Contempt of Courts Act, 1926, as well as misconduct of certain pleaders and Advocates practising in Dhubri Court under the Legal Practitioners Act, 1879. The facts are briefly as follows:

In the course of an enquiry under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation by the Sadar S. D. C. Mr. D. Sarma, one Miss Sumati Das Gupta, Secretary, Ladies, Club, was asked to produce certain records of the Club and attend his enquiry personally. On her failure to do so, a daily fine of Rs. 10 was imposed on her under S.142, Assam Land and Revenue Regulation on 23rd March 1949 until the papers would be produced. The next day a Distress Warrant was issued and a teapoy was attached and sold for Rs. 10. On 25th March 1949, an appeal was filed by Mr. U. N. Sanyal, B.L. and Mr. J.N. Chatterjee, M. A. B. L., two practising pleaders of Dhubri Bar, before me as Deputy Commissioner. On 26th March 1949, while the appeal was pending in my Court, the said two pleaders, along with others, convened a public meeting condemning the actions of the S. D. C. for imposing a fine on a lady. A printed leaflet, dated 25th March 1949, for convening the meeting on 26th was circulated with the names of the said two pleaders and Mr. Ramani Kanta Bose, B. L. who is also a pleader of the local Bar (now said to have been enrolled as an Advocate in the Hon'ble High Court) and a few other pleaders and gentlemen of the town as conveners. A copy of the notice is enclosed herewith. The notice does not contain the name of the press. The notice itself condemns the actions of the authorities as unjust, illegal and unseemly. Mr. Ramani Kanta Bose delivered a speech attacking the actions of the S. D. C. in violent language and declaring the orders of the S. D. C. to be ultra vires and illegal. Mr. Sanyal and Mr. Chatterjee were present at the meeting. As the appeal against the order which was thus condemned by Mr. R. K. Bose and others was pending in my Court at the time when the notice was circulated and the speeches made, I consider the three gentlemen mentioned above to have committed an offence under the Contempt of Courts Act, 1926. Further the three gentlemen, who are members of the legal profession, appear to be guilty of misconduct under the Legal Practitioners Act, 1879. I would, therefore, request you to please place the matter before the Hon'ble High Court for favour of taking necessary actions against the offending persons as the Hon'ble High Court deems fit.

The appeal has since been disposed of holding the orders of the S. D. C. to be legal but modifying the order by reducing the amount of fine and allowing a week's time to produce the papers asked for."

[2] On receipt of this letter, the Deputy Com. missioner was required by this Court to furnish verified contents of the speech which Mr. R. K. Bose was alleged to have made, together with a verified copy of the translation of the notice. This requisition was complied with by the Deputy Commissioner on 23rd May 1949. On 3rd June 1949, this Court issued a Rule calling upon (1) Sri Upendra Saran Sanyal, (2) Sri Ramani Kanta Basu, (3) Sri Satyapriya Basu, (4) Sri Banshidhar Agarwalla, (5) Hemendra Chandra Dasgupta, (6) Syed Ahmed Ali, (7) Sri Jatindra Nath Chattopadhya, (8) Sri Chintaharan Pal, (9) Sri Surendra Mohan Sen, (10) Sri Amal Kanta Ganguli, and (11) Sri Rathindra Kumar Gos. wami, to show cause why they should not be dealt with for contempt of Court. The Rule came up for hearing on 4th July 1949. (After reproducing the notice convening the public meeting referred to in the Deputy Commissioner's letter of reference and the report, dated 23rd May 1949, of the speeches alleged to have been delivered at the public meeting and made by the Inspector of C. I. D., his Lordship proceeded.)

[3] The facts culminating in the public meeting of 26th March 1949, may now be stated. In 1936, a club called The Ladies' Club was formed at Dhubri and housed on a plot of land granted to the Club free of land-revenue by the Government of Assam. The club-house was built from public subscriptions. On 10th February 1949, an Association called The Dhubri Mahila Samiti applied to the Deputy Commissioner, Goalpara, Mr. K. C. Barua, for a plot of land at Dhubri for housing the Samiti. The Deputy Commissioner endorsed the application on 15th February 1949, in these terms:

"S. D. C., Mr. D. Sarma, will please report. He will also please examine if there be any records as to how and under what conditions the present Ladies' Club building was handed over, and report."

[4] On 28th February 1949, Sri Sarma, the S. D. C., wrote the following letter to the Secretary of the Ladies' Club:

"I have the honour to request you to be so good as to furnish me the following informations about the Club: (1) How and when it has been given and for what purpose? (2) The conditions, if there he any, to be fulfilled and observed. (3) How it has been utilised at present? (4) Rules for enrolment of members of the Club. (5) The number of enrolled members at present. If it is not utilised for the purpose for which it has been given, what objection there may be if it is resumed by the Government? I would request you to treat this as urgent, and to send the reply at a very early date. We have had to take prompt action on the subject mainly due to some letter received from the Government."

[5] On 5th March 1949, Sri Sarma wrote a reminder to the Secretary, Ladies' Club, Dhubri, and the Secretary, Miss Dasgupta, replied to the S. D. C's. letter on 8th March 1949. [After reproducing the reply the judgment proceeded.] The S. D. C. sent the following reply to the Secretary on 21st March 1949:

"I have received your letter under reference on 14th March 1949, and to say that full informations required have not been found in the letter. However, I would like to inspect the records of the club on 23rd March 1949 at about 9 A. M. It will be good of you if you please arrange for the inspection and attend it."

On the same day, the S. D. C. wrote the following letter to the Chief Secretary of the Dhubri

Mahila Samiti:

"With reference to your letter of 8th February 1949, to the address of the Hon'ble Minister, Finance and Revenue, I have to say that there is a plot of reserve land with a decent building for the Ladies' Club at this town. I would request you to kindly let me know why your Samiti requires another plot of land; so far I see that there is sufficient land in the Reserve Dag wherein you may erect houses etc., for the implementation of the weaving and other activities of your Samiti.

I propose to inspect the records of the Ladies' Club at 9 A. M. on 23rd March 1949. It will be pleasant privilege for me if I find to hear more about your activities and difficulties about it there."

Contrasted with the official tone of the letter addressed to the Secretary, Ladies' Club, Dhubri, the tone of the letter addressed to the Chief Secretary of the Samiti may be regarded as almost subservient, having regard to the concluding 2 lines:

"It will be pleasant privilege for me if I find to here more about your activities and difficulties about it there."

[6] On the following day, 22nd March 1949, the Secretary of the the Ladies' Club, Dhubri, replied to the S. D. C's. letter, dated 21st March

1949. The reply reads:

"With reference to your letter of today's date, I would like to say that I have made an engagement with Mrs. L. Roy tomorrow morning. Thus I am affraid, it will not be possible for me to see you at 8 A. M. at the time of inspection. Moreover, this Club is not a Government institution. So, I find it irregular to have the records inspected by a Sub-Deputy Collector, Sadar. I would like to let you know later when and whether the records may be opened to be inspected by the Government officer." The S. D. C. then addressed the Secretary, Ladies' Club, Dhubri, on 22nd March 1949, as follows:

"With reference to your letter of today's date, I have the pleasure to say that on official capacity as Sub-Deputy Collector, Sadar, I have to inspect the records of the Ladies' Club here. It will not take a long time. If the time at 9 A. M. does not suit you, I shall go to inspect it at 8 A. M. I hope you will please arrange for it. I do not understand why a Secretary of a public institution cannot have the authority to show the records of it for the inspection of a Government officer."

[7] On 23rd March 1949, the S. D. C. went to the Ladies' Club at 8 A. M. and after calling out the lady Secretary's name thrice, to which there was no response, he made an order fining her Rs. 10 under S. 142, Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, and made a further order that the Secretary was liable to pay a recurring fine of Rs. 10 a day so long as she did not appear before him in his Court with all the relevant papers of the Club. This order was communicated by the S. D. C. to the Secretary, Ladies' Club, Dhubri, on the same day. On 25th March 1949, an appeal was preferred to the Deputy Commissioner, against the order of the S. D. C., dated the 23rd March 1949. While the appeal was pending befere the Deputy Commissioner, the eleven respondents called a public meeting for 26th March 1949, by a public notice issued on 25th March 1949. On 26th March 1949, a meeting in pursuance of the public notice, was held, at which certain speeches were delivered. The public notice, dated ,25th March 1949, convening the meeting for 26th March 1949, and the alleged speeches delivered at the meeting are the subject-matter of the present proceedings.

[8] Messrs. Mookerji and Ghose for the respondents have urged a number of grounds against the reference made by the Deputy Commissioner, but we propose to dispose of the reference upon the short ground that having regard to the relevant provisions of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, the Deputy Commissioner of Goalpara was not a Court in which the appeal preferred against the order of the S. D. C., Dhubri, dated 23rd March 1949, was pending.

[9] It will be recalled that the Deputy Commissioner, Goalpara, had endorsed the application of the Samiti, dated 10th February 1949, to the following effect:

"S. D. C. Mr. Sarma will please report. He will also please examine if there be any records as to how and under what conditions the present Ladies' Club building was handed over and report."

[10] We will now proceed to examine the provisions of the Regulation in relation to the report and examination called for by the Deputy Commissioner. Section 129, Assam Land and Revenue Regulation reads as follows:

"129. (1) Subject to any rules which the Provincial Government may make in this behalf, a Deputy Commissioner or Subdivisional Officer may refer any case to any Revenue Officer subordinate to him for investigation and report, or, if that officer has power to dispose of the case, for disposal.

(2) Subject as aforesaid, a Deputy Commissioner may direct that any Revenue Officer subordinate to him shall, without such reference, deal with any case or class of cases arising within any specified area, and either investigate and report on the case or class of cases, or, if he has power, dispose of it himself.

(3) A subordinate Revenue Officer shall submit his report on any case referred to him under this section for report to the officer referring it, or otherwise as may be directed in the order of reference; and the officer receiving the report may, if he has power to dispose of the case, dispose of the same, or may return it for further investigation to the officer submitting the report or may hold the investigation himself."

[11] We think what the S. D. C. was required to do when the D. C. referred to him the application made by the Samiti, was, firstly, to report as to the availability of the plot of land measuring about half a bigha, bounded on the north: by Municipal Latrine; south: holding of Sit. N. N. Guha occupied by the District Congress Office; east : D. K. Road; and west: dead Gadadhar river; and secondly, to examine the records with a view to ascertaining the conditions upon which the Ladies' Club building was handed over to the Club. Under sub-s. (3) of S. 129 of the Regulation, the S. D. C. had to submit his report to the Deputy Commissioner. It is common. ground that no such report was submitted to the Deputy Commissioner.

[12] Chapter VIII of the Regulation containing Ss. 141 and 142 deals with "Procedure". Sections 141 and 142 of the Regulation read as follows:

"141. (1) The Provincial Government and any officer mentioned in S. 140 may summon any person whose attendance they consider necessary for the purposes of any investigation or other business before them conducted under this Regulation.

(2) All persons so summoned shall be bound to attend either in person or by authorised agent as such officer may direct; and to state the truth upon any subject respecting which they are examined; and to produce such documents and other things as may be required."

"142 If any person fails to comply within the time fixed by a notice served on him with any requisition made upon him under S. 141, the officer making the requisition may impose upon him such daily fine as he thinks fit, not exceeding fifty rupees, until the requisition is complied with :

Provided that, whenever the amount levied under an order under this section passed by an officer other than the Commissioner or the Provincial Government exceeds five hundred rupees, the Deputy Commissioner shall report the case to the Commissioner, or, if there is no Commissioner, to the Provincial Government, and no further levy in respect of the fine shall be made otherwise than by authority of the Commissioner or Provincial Government as the case may be."

(13) Chapter VII, Assam Land and Revenue Manual contains Rules framed under Ss. 129, 152 and 155 (b) and (c) relating to procedure, the mode of serving processes, and process-fees. Rule 181 is in these terms:

"181. The provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, and of enactments amending the same, relating to the trial of suits, the evidence and examination of witnesses, procuring the attendance of witnesses, and the production of documents, shall apply to all proceedings of a judicial nature, other than appeals, held before a Deputy Commissioner or other Revenue Officer or a Sectlement Officer duly empowered to hold such proceedings.

For the purposes of this rule, the following proceedings under the Land and Revenue Regulation shall be regarded as proceedings of a judicial nature :

(a) Proceedings in connection with boundary disputes (S. 23); (b) Proceedings in connection with disputes relating to the record of rights (Ss. 41 and 42); (c) Resumption proceedings (S 43); (d) Proceedings in connection with applications for mutation and registration of names (Ss. 53 and 54); (e) Proceedings in connection with applications for resistration of talukdari and other similar tenures (S. 56); (f) Proceedings in connection with applications for separate accounts (S. 65); (g) Proceedings arising out of the attachment or sale of moveable or immoveable property, or of applications to set aside sale, under Chap. V; (b) Proceedings in connection with the partition or union of estates under Chap. VI; (i) Any other proceedings expressly declared by rules issued under the provisions of the Land and Revenue Regulation to be judicial proceed. ings."

and the R. 183 itself reads:

"In proceedings other than those mentioned in R. 181, witnesses shall not be examined on oath, and a memorandum only of their evidence shall be recorded. Such memorandum shall be written and signed by the Revenue Officer who examines the witnesses, and may be written in the language of the Court, or in English, if the revenue officer is sufficiently acquainted with English."

on the application of the Samiti from the S.D.C. nor his action taken or purporting to have been taken under Ss. 141 and 142 of the Regulation were proceedings of a judicial nature. Clauses (a) to (h) of R. 181 enumerate what are judicial proceedings. The language of cl. (1) justifies the conclusion that in so far as R. 181 deals with the category of judicial proceedings under the Regu. lation, it is exhaustive, that is to say, if no other proceedings are expressly declared by the rules framed under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation to be judicial proceedings, they are not to be regarded as judicial proceedings. Rule 183 tends to support this view. It refers to proceedings other than those mentioned in R. 181 as "executive procedure," in other words, proceedings of an executive nature.

[15] The learned Advocate General for the Deputy Commissioner conceded that the enquiry and report called for by the Deputy Commissioner cannot be regarded as judicial proceedings within the meaning of the Land and Revenue Regulation. But he contended that when in the course of the enquiry and report, the S. D. C. decided to have recourse to S. 141 of the Regulation and proceeded to pass an order under S. 142 of the Regulation, the order so passed was passed in a judicial proceeding. We do not think we can give weight to this contention, having regard to the provisions of R. 181 framed under the Regulation, which does not include proceedings under S. 141 or S. 142 of the Regulation in the category of judicial proceedings. Indeed the note to R. 183

"In virtue of S. 141, cl. (2), witnesses may be punished for giving false evidence even though they have not been examined on cath."

The note tends to suggest that although proceedings under S. 141 are not judicial proceedings, nevertheless persons giving false evidence can be punished under that section. We think the concession made by the learned Advocate-General, namely, that the enquiry and report called from the S.D.C. was not judicial proceedings must be extended to proceedings taken or purported to have been taken by the S. D. C. under SS. 141 and 142 of the Regulation. We do not wish to say in this order anything about the legality or otherwise of the proceedings alleged to have been taken by the S. D. C. under Ss. 141 and 142 of the Regulation in view of the pendency of an application in revision against the order of the Deputy Commissioner passed in appeal against the order of the S. D. C., dated 23rd March 1949.

[16] The learned Advocate-General next contended that, assuming the proceedings taken by the S. D. C. under Ss. 141 and 142 of the Regulation were not judicial proceedings, as soon as an appeal was preferred to the Deputy Commissioner under the Regulation in pursuance of S. 147 of the Regulation, the Deputy Commissioner became a Court, and anything said or done during the pendency of the appeal before the Deputy Commissioner which had the tendency to interfere with the course of justice, constituted contempt of the Court, which this Court was competent to punish. We can find no justification for the proposition that a non-judicial proceeding must be regarded as a judicial proceeding merely because there is a statutory provision for a right of appeal from an order made in a non-judicial proceeding. On the contrary, we think there is ample justification for maintaining the character of the original proceeding, notwithstanding the statutory right of appeal against an order made in non-judicial proceedings. For instance, an order passed by a customs officer under the Sea Customs Act, unquestionably an order passed in non-judicial proceedings, does not become an order passed in judicial proceedings when, in pursuance of a right of appeal under the Sea Customs Act, an appeal is preferred to the Chief Customs Authority. The learned Advocate-General was unable to cite any authority in support of his contention that an original non-judicial proceeding can be regarded as a judicial proceedings upon appeal made to a prescribed revenue authority under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation. The learned Advocate-General very properly conceded that if the proceedings in appeal before the Deputy Commissioner in this case are to be regarded as non judicial proceedings the question of our interference under the Contempt of Courts Act does not arise.

[17] In the view we take of the nature of the proceedings before the Deputy Commissioner, namely, that they were not judicial proceedings, whatever was said and done by the respondents on 25th or 26th March 1949, cannot be regarded as contempt of Court. We heard this reference for more than 8 days from every conceivable point of view, including the motive underlying the reference. Happily it is not necessary to refer to the motives of the parties concerned in this case. The facts are nauseating enough without probing into questions of motives.

[18] In the result, we reject the reference and discharge the rule issued against the respondents. The reference will be returned to the Deputy Commissioner.

[19] Ram Labhaya J .- I entirely agree with learned the Chief Justice. I wish however to add a few words.

[20] The crucial question in the case is whether the publication of the notice dated 25th March 1949 and the speeches delivered at the meeting amount to contempt of a 'Court' within the meaning of the expression as used in the contempt of Courts Act. Under S 2 (1) of the Act this Court has the same power to punish contempts of Courts subordinate to it as it has of punishing contempts of its own authority. The learned counsel for the opposite parties urges that the Sub-Deputy Collector and the Deputy Commissioner, the appellate authority, both were not Courts within the meaning of the Act when they purported to act under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation. (After recapitulating the facts culminating in the allegation that the contents of the notice and the speeches delivered constitute contempt of Court, his Lordship proceeded.] The character of the proceedings detailed above is in question. It is to be determined whether the proceedings held by the Sub-Deputy Collector on the original side and by the Deputy Commissioner on the appellate side are proceedings before a 'Court' within the meaning of the expression which may be assigned to it under the Contempt of Courts Act.

[21] The learned Advocate-General could not refer us to any provision of the Regulation which would cover the application of the Samiti made to the Deputy Commissioner. The order for enquiry and report does not refer to any provision of the law. We do not find it possible to place this order under any provision of the Regulation. The enquiry by the Sub Deputy Collector would, therefore, be not covered by the Regulation. He did not appear to have started any formal proceedings on receiving the application with the Deputy Commissioner's endorsement. It was for the first time on 22nd March after the Secretary of the Ladies' Club had objected to the inspection of the records as something irregular that the Sub-Deputy Collector informed her that he would inspect the records in his official capacity. Even in this letter no reference was made to S. 142 of the Regulation or to the consequence of disobedience. The proceedings so far give no indication as to their nature and the learned Advocate-General could not help conceding that the enquiry by the Sub-Deputy Collector was not under any Chapter of the Regulation. He stated that it was certainly not under 8. 48 of the Regulation, which deals with resumption of certain lands which are wholly or partially revenue free.

[22] The proceedings are again admittedly non-judicial even if the Sub-Deputy Collector's bona fide believed that he was acting under the Regulation. Chapter VII, Land Revenue Manual contains rules framed under 8s. 129, 152 and 155 (b) and (c). Rule 181 provides that the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code and all enactments amending the same relating to the trial of suits, evidence and examination of witnesses, procuring the attendance of witnesses and of production of documents shall apply to all proceedings of a judicial nature other than appeal before a Deputy Commissioner or other officer or a Settlement Officer duly empowered to hold such proceedings. The proceedings enumerated in different clauses of the section do not include the present proceedings. This is conceded by the learned Advocate-General. According to the scheme of the Regulation, proceedings under it are either judicial, viz., those mentioned in R. 181 or non-judicial, viz., those not covered by R. 181. The non-judicial proceedings are dealt under R. 183. But it is necessary that even those proceedings to which B. 183 applies should be under the Regulation. The description of the nature of the proceedings not covered by R. 181 as given on the margin of the rules is "Executive Proceedings". The Regulation does not create any revenue Courts as distinct from Revenue Officers. It makes, however a distinction between proceedings which are described as judicial and all others which do not fall under that category. In proceedings which are nonjudicial, the witnesses are not to be examined on oath and a memo of their evidence alone is to be recorded. The proceedings in the present case do not fall under any of the two categories.

to refer any case to a Revenue Officer subordinate to him for investigation and report. This power is conferred on him by S. 129 of the Regulation. Now, it cannot be contended that S. 129 could be utilised by a Deputy Commissioner even when he is not acting under the Regulation. He can order his subordinate Revenue Officer to investigate and report on matters which come before him in his capacity as a Revenue Officer acting under the Regulation. The Deputy Commissioner when directing the Sub-Deputy Collector to enquire and report did not purport to act under this section.

[24] Section 142 of the Regulation punishes failure to comply with a notice served on a person with any requisition made upon him under S. 141. The officer making the requisition may impose upon him such daily fine as thinks fit, not exceeding Rs. 50 until the requisition is complied with. When the amount levied under an order under this section passed by an Officer other than the Commissioner or the Provincial Government exceeds Rs. 500, the case has to be reported to the Commissioner, or if there is no Commissioner to the Provincial Government. Non-compliance is punishable only if the requisition is covered by S. 141. Under this section the Provincial Government and any other officer mentioned in S. 140 may summon any person whose attendance they consider necessary for the purposes of any investigation or other business before them to be conducted under the Regulation. Persons so summoned are bound to attend either in person or by authorised agent. they are bound to state the truth and to produce such documents as may be required of them. This section gives the necessary power to Officers acting under the Regulation when their proceed. ings are not covered by R. 181. It is obvious, however, that the requisition under S. 141 can be made only for purposes of investigation or other business under the Regulation. The proceedings in this case were initiated by an application to the Deputy Commissioner. The Sub-Deputy Collector was merely to report after enquiry. He had not to pass any final orders. The application was not under the Regulation. Similarly, the enquiry that followed was not covered by any provision of the Regulation. No requisition under S. 141 could be issued, and in these circumstances the powers given to Revenue Officers by S. 142 could not be invoked on the failure of the Secretary, Ladies' Club, to comply with the requisition.

[25] It is at last clear that the Sub-Deputy Collector was not performing any judicial function when he directed the Secretary, Ladies' club, to appear at the club and place club's records before him for inspection. The enquiry was not under any law. There was thus no procedure prescribed for it. The procedure which governs Courts, Civil, Criminal or Revenue, did not apply to his enquiry. His resort to S. 142 of the Regulation when he encountered resistance in the course of his enquiry was unauthorised. He had no jurisdiction to avail himself of its provisions. It would not be possible to describe him as a Court in these circumstances. The word 'Court' has not been defined in the Contempt of Courts Act. There is no definition of it even in the Code of Criminal Procedure. The definition of the word 'Court' as given in the Evidence Act would include all Judges, Magistrates and all persons except arbitrators legally authorised to take evidence. This definition is for purpose of the Evidence Act which did not apply to the enquiry which the Sub-Deputy Collector was making in this case. In the absence of any definition of the word in the Contempt of Courts Act, the word has got to be interpreted in' its general sense. In Haricharan v. Kaushi Charan, 44 C. W. N. 530: (A. I. R. (27) 1940 Cal. 286: 41 Cr. L. J. 662), the question arose whether a Debt Settlement Board was a Court within the meaning of S. 195, Criminal P. C. Decisions bearing on the question of the general attributes of a Court were examined in this case and a summary of these attributes given by Curgenven J. in Mahabaleswarappa v. Gopalaswami Mudaliar, 58 Mad. 954 at pp. 966, 967: (A. I. R.

(22) 1935 Mad. 673: 36 Cr. L. J. 895), was adopted as laying down correctly the attributes by which it may be possible to distinguish a Court from other officers exercising non-judicial functions. The observations of Curgenven J. are as follows:

"To summarise the effect of these decisions it would seem that we have to look, not the source of a tribunal's authority, or to any peculiarity in the method adopted of creating it, (though it is undoubtedly a consideration that it derives its powers mediataly or immediately from the Crown) but to the general character of its powers and activities. If it has power to regulate legal rights by the delivery of definitive judgments, and to enforce its orders by legal sanctions, and if its procedure is judicial in character, in such matters as the taking of evidence and the administration of the oath, then it is a Court."

[26] The learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court observed further that particular emphasis should also be laid upon what they considered to be "an essential feature of all Courts, viz., that the tribunal in question must be one in which justice is judicially administered, and which is empowered to arrive at an independent judicial decision on legal evidence." The application of these tests to the case before them yielded the result that a Debt Settlement Board was not a Court.

[27] I am in respectful agreement with the statement of law contained in this case as to the general attributes of a Court. If the test laid down above is applied, there can be no question that the proceedings in the original as well as in the appellate stage were not in a Court, The Sub-Deputy Collector had merely to make a report in an executive or in an administrative matter. His enquiry was not covered even by the Regulation. He had no power to regulate legal rights by delivery of definitive judgment. His procedure even if he were treated as a Revenue Officer acting under the Regulation was admittedly non-judicial in character as these proceedings were not covered by B. 181 and were, therefore, expressly taken out of the category of judicial proceedings. He had admittedly no power to administer oath. He had no power to arrive at an independent judicial decision on legal evidence. The proceedings before him, therefore, were not in a Court. When he resorted to S. 142 punishing the defaulter on the failure of the Secretary to comply with his order, he no doubt purported to act under the Regulation, though he had no jurisdiction to do so. Even when taking action as such, he was not clothed with the authority of a Court and his proceedings were not judicial in character.

[28] The proceeding before the appellate authority, viz., the Deputy Commissioner, was also not a proceedings in a Court. If the Sub-Deputy Collector had not taken action under S. 142 of the Regulation, he would merely have reported to the Deputy Commissioner. report would have been merely an executive or administrative act of an Executive Officer. The appellate jurisdiction of the Deputy Commissioner sprang or arose from the fact that the Sub-Deputy Collector had at one stage of the proceedings purported to act under the Regulation. When he took action under the Regulation, his orders became appealable and the appeal lay to the Deputy Commissioner. The Deputy Commissioner, therefore, was acting under the Regulation in entertaining and disposing of the appeal against the order of conviction of the Secretary of the Ladies' Club. As a Revenue Officer exercising appellate jurisdiction in a matter which according to the Regulation was not a judicial proceeding even he could not be regarded as a Court. He also did not possess those attributes which go to make a Court. The mere fact that he exercised appellate jurisdiction would not convert him into a Court. In Sashi Bhusan v. Ful Khan, 44 C. W. N. 763: (A. I. R. (27) 1940 Cal. 454; 41 Cr. L. J. 951), it was held that like Debt Settlement Boards, an appellate Officer also is not a 'Court' within the meaning of S. 195, Criminal P. C. In that case, the learned Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court when considering whether the Deb-Settlement Tribunal was a 'Court' or not, observed as follows:

"There is an old definition and yet a comprehensive one by great authority; it is that of Sir Edward Coke in his treatise Coke on Littleton, 58-a, where he says 'a Court is a place where justice is judicially ministered."

With this dictum in view he held that the functions of the Debt Settlement Tribunals on the original as well as appellate side, however admirable their purposes, did not come within this wider definition. They were held not to be Courts.

[29] Against this view the learned Advocate. General has cited only Advocate. General v. Maung Chit Maung, A. I. R. (27) 1940 Rang. 68: (41 Cr. L. J. 470). But this authority does not help him. The question in this case was whether a Sub-Divisional Magistrate when holding an inquiry under S. 176, Criminal P. C., was acting as a Court for the purposes of S. 2, Contempt of Courts Act. It was held that the word 'Court' was used in the Contempt of Courts Act in the same wider sense in which it was used in S. 195, Criminal P. C. The meaning given to the word 'Court' for purposes of that section was held to include a tribunal empowered to deal with a particular matter and authorised to receive evidence bearing on that matter in order to arrive at a determination. Giving this wider sense to the word, the learned Judges of the Rangoon High Court held that a Magistrate holding an enquiry into the cause of death who must come to a finding as to what caused that death and who caused it comes within that definition. For the purposes of his enquiry he has authority to receive evidence. The enquiry, therefore, was held to be covered by the expression 'judicial proceedings' as defined in the Criminal Procedure Code. It is the judicial character of the proceedings that was the basis of the decision. In this case, the proceedings of the Sub-Deputy Collector were admittedly not judicial. His action under S. 142 was in excess of his authority. The Rangoon case, therefore, is distinguishable.

[30] In these circumstances it is clear that the proceedings, both original and appellate, with which we are concerned in this case, were not before a Court and the Contempt of Courts Act, therefore, has no application.

Miss S. Das Gupta-Petitioner v. Deputy Commissioner, Goalpara-Opposite Party.

Bevenue Revn. No. 36 (R) of 1949, Decided on 4th August 1949.

(a) Assam Revenue Tribunal (Transfer of Powers) Act (IV [4] of 1948), S. 3 — Enquiry before SubDeputy Collector not coming under S. 141 or S. 142 of Assam Land and Revenue Regulation — SubDeputy Collector acting or purporting to act under those sections—Case is revenue case within S. 3.

If the Sub Deputy Collector acted or purported to act under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation with reference to an enquiry, even though the enquiry itself does not come within the purview of the Regulation, the Sub-Deputy Collector, in so far as he acted or purported to act under the provisions of S. 141 or S. 142, acts as a Revenue Officer in a revenue case within the meaning of S. 3. [Para 3]

(b) Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (1886), S. 151 – Jurisdiction under – Revisional jurisdiction under section is now exercisable by High Court —Assam Revenue Tribunal Act (II [2] of 1946), Ss. 5, 6 and Schedule — Assam Revenue Tribunal (Transfer of Powers) Act (IV [4] of 1948), S. 3 and Schedule.

Section 151 does not find place in col. 3 of the Schedule to the Notification No. RL 12/46/8 dated 8th May 1948. The plain meaning of the omission of S. 151, of the Regulation from col. 3 of the Schedule is that the revisional jurisdiction of the Commissioner has not been transferred to the Development Commissioner. Item N . 6 in the 3rd column of the schedule to Assam Act II [2] of 1946, under the head "jurisdiction" includes revision under S. 151. which means that in all revenue cases after 28th May 1946, the day on which Act II [2] of 1946, received the assent of the Governor, revision under S. 151, lay to the Tribunal. The jurisdiction and powers of the Revenue Tribunal appointed under Act II (2) of 1946, have been transferred partly to the H gh Court and partly to certain authorities appointed by the Provincial Government. In col. 3 of Sch. A of Act IV [4] of 1948 under the head "Jurisdiction" the revisional jurisdiction of the Provincial Government vested in the Provincial Government immediately before the 1st day of April 1937, was transferred to the High Court under sub-s. (2) of S. 3, Assam Act IV [4] of 1948. Between 1946 and 6th April 1948, the day on which Assam Act IV [4] of 1948, received the assent of the Governor, the revisional jurisdiction of the Provincial Government under S. 151 of the Regulation was exercised by the Revenue Tribunal under S. 5 of Assam Act II [2] of 1946, and by Assam Act IV [4] of 1948, the jurisdiction exercised by the Revenue Tribunal up to 6th April, 1948, was transferred to the High Court to the extent mentioned in Sch. A. Thus the revisional powers under S. 151 of the Regulation, are now exercisable by the High Court.

(c) Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (1886) Ss. 140, 141—Revenue Officer cannot regard private house or club as his Court.

Section 140 cannot be interpreted as meaning that a Revenue Officer described in S. 140 or S. 141, can, in virtue of his presence in a house or club on official business, regard the house or club as his Court. Nor can it be said that having regard to the multifarious duties which a Revenue Officer has to perform under widely different conditions and circumstances, his right to enter a place, whether it be a house or a club, at any time of the day or night, and to regard it as a Court, ought to be recognised. S. K. Ghose, P. K. Gupta and J. C. Sen -

for Petitioner.

K. R. Barman, Government Advocate - for the Crown.

Judgment. —This is a petition under S. 151, Assam Land and Revenue Regulation against the following order passed by the Deputy Commissioner, Goalpara, dated 19th April 1949:

"Orders passed. The S. D. C.'s orders held to be legal. But the appellant is given one week's time from the date of the order to produce the necessary records before the S. D. C., failing which, a daily fine of Re. 1/-under S. 142, A. L. R. Manual shall be imposed upon the appellant and the order of the learned S. D. C. is modified to that extent."

The order passed by the S. D. C. was an order fining the petitioner a sum of Rs. 10, under S. 142, Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, and declaring that the petitioner was liable to pay a recurring fine of Rs. 10, a day for so long as she did not appear before him in his Court with all the relevant papers of the club called the Dhubri Ladies Club.

[2] The facts leading to this petition are stated at some length in our judgment in original Criminal Misc. Case No. 1 of 1949 (Deputy Commissioner, Goalpara v. Sri Upendra Saran Sanyal, (A. I. R. (37) 1950 Assam 26).

[3] Mr. Barman for the Deputy Commissioner has contended that this Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the application in view of 8. 3, Assam Act IV [4] of 1948, called the Assam Revenue Tribunal (Transfer of Powers) Act, 1948, which says:

"3. (1). Subject to the provisions of sub-s. (3), of this section, the Assam High Court shall exercise such jurisdiction to entertain appeals and revise decisions in revenue cases as was vested in the Provincial Government immediately before the first day of April 1937, under any law for the time being in force."

Mr. Barmin's contention is that the subject. matter of the petition before us is not a revenue case inasmuch as the S. D. C. was merely asked to make a report and examine some records in connection with a petition made to the Deputy Commissioner by the Mahila Samiti for securing housing accommodation; that as the enquiry and examination which the S. D. C. was required to make upon the application of the Mahila Samiti was not within the purview of the Regulation, it cannot be regarded as a revenue case. The short answer to this contention is that the subject-matter of the revision petition before us is not the enquiry and examination called for by the Deputy Commissioner from the Sub Deputy Collector but an order of the Sub-Deputy Collector by which he fined the petitioner a sum of Rs. 10 acting or purporting to act under the provisions of Ss. 141 and 142 of the Regulation. If the S. D. C. acted or purported to act under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation with reference to an enquiry, even though the enquiry itself does not come within the purview of the Regulation, the S. D. C., in so far as he acted or purported to act under the provisions of Ss. 141 or S. 142 of the Regulation, acted as a Revenue Officer in a revenue case within the meaning of S. 3, Assam Act IV [4] of 1948.

[4] It was next contended by Mr. Barman that assuming that the subject matter of the petition is a revenue case, the proper authority before which the revision petition should have been filed is not the High Court but the Development Commissioner, and he has drawn our attention to Notification No. RL. 12/46/8, dated 8th May 1948, which is in these terms:

"In exercise of the powers conferred by S. 3, Assam Commissioner's (Transfer of Powers) Act, 1947 (Assam Act XII [12] of 1947), the Governor of Assam is pleased to transfer the powers hitherto exercised by, and the jurisdiction vested in the Commissioner of Division. Assam, under the provisions of the Acts, Rules and Regulations, specified in columns 2 and 3 of the Schedule attached hereto to the authority or authorities mentioned in column 4 thereof."

It is clear from the contents of column 3 that the powers which were before 8th May 1948, exercised by a Commissioner of a Division under 8s. 69A, 69 (b), 90, 123 and 140, Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, were transferred to the Development Commissioner. Sections 141 and 142 are not included in column 3. Under S. 141, the Provincial Government and any officer mentioned in S. 140 may summon any person whose attendance is considered necessary for the purpose of any investigation or other business before them conducted under the Regulation. Sections 141 and 142 of the Regulation read as follows:

"141. (1) The Provincial Government and any officer mentioned in S. 140 may summon any person whose attendance they consider necessary for the purposes of any investigation or other business before them conducted under this Regulation.

(2) All persons so summoned shall be bound to attend either in person or by authorised agent as such officer may direct;

and to state the truth upon any subject respecting which they are examined;

and to produce such documents and other things as may be required.

142. If any person fails to comply within the time fixed by a notice served on him with any requisition made upon him under S. 141, the officer making the requisition may impose upon him such daily fine as he thinks fit, not exceeding fifty rupees, until the requisition is complled with:

Provided that, whenever the amount levied under an order under this section passed by an officer other than the Commissioner or the Provincial Government exceeds five hundred rupees, the Deputy Commissioner shall report the case to the Commissioner, or. if there is no Commissioner, to the Provincial Government, and no further levy in respect of the fine shall be made otherwise than by authority of the Commissioner or Provincial Government as the case may be."

"(a) to the (Tribunal appointed under S. 296, Government of India Act, 1935) from any original or appellate order passed by a Commissioner; (b) to the (Tribunal appointed under S. 296, Government of India Act, 1935) from any order, original or appellate, passed by a Deputy Commissioner of a district not included in any division of a Commissioner or by a Settlement Officer in any such district; (c) to the Commissioner from orders, original or appellate, passed by a Deputy Commissioner, Settlement Officer or Survey Officer; (d) to the Deputy Commissioner, from orders passed by a Sub Divisional Officer, an Assistant Commissioner, or Extra Assistant Commissioner; and from orders, original or appellate, passed by a Survey Officer, in a district not Included in any division of a Commissioner; (e) to a Settlement Officer, from orders passed by an Assistant Settlement Officer; (f) to a Survey Officer, from orders passed by an Assistant Survey Officer:

Provided that no appeal shall lie against the following orders:

(g) orders of an Assistant Settlement Officer or Assistant Survey Officer under Ss. 21 and 22; (h) orders of a Survey Officer or Settlement Officer

(I) under Ss. 21, 22 and 24;

(2) apportioning the expenses of erecting and repairing boundary-marks in accordance with rules made. under S. 27;

(i) orders of a Survey Officer, Settlement Officer, or Deputy Commissioner, original or appellate, imposing or confirming a fine not exceeding fifty rupees; (j) orders of a Commissioner imposing a fine not exceeding one hundred rupees; (k) any decision given in accordance with an award of arbitrators appointed under S. 143, except in the case of fraud or collusion; (l) orders under S. 148, admitting an appeal after the period of limitation has expired; (m) orders expressly declared by this Regulation to be final subject to the provisions of S. 151."

[7] It was in pursuance of the provisions of S. 147 of the Regulation that an appeal was preferred to the Deputy Commissioner against the order of the S. D. C., dated 28rd March 1949. The revisional jurisdiction under the Regulation is conferred by S. 151 of the Regulation which is in these terms:

"The Tribunal appointed under S. 298, Government of India Act, 1985, a Commissioner, a Deputy Commissioner, a Settlement Officer, and a Survey Officer may call for the proceedings, held by any officer subordinate to it or him, as the case may be, and pass such orders thereon as it or he, as the case may be, thinks fit."

[8] Section 151 does not find place in col. 3, of the Schedule to which we have referred. The plain meaning of the omission of S. 151 of the Regulation from col. 3 of the Schedule is that the revisional jurisdiction of the Commissioner has not been transferred to the Development Commissioner. Indeed S. 5 (1), Assam Revenue Tribunal Act, 1946, (Assam Act II [2] of 1946) provides that:

"(I) The Tribunal shall exercise such jurisdiction to entertain appeals and revise decisions in revenue cases as was vested in the Provincial Government immediately before 1st April 1937 under any law for the time being in force. (2). In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing provision, the Tribunal shall have jurisdiction to entertain appeals and revise decisions:

(a) in all revenue cases arising under the provisions of the enactments specified in the Schedule, in which such jurisdiction was vested in the Provincial Government immediately before 1st Δpril 1937, and

(b) in all cases specified in S. 9. (3) save as expressly provided in any enactment for the time being in force, the Provincial Government may, by notification in the official Gazette, direct by general or special order that the Tribunal shall also have jurisdiction to entertain and decide appeals and applications for revision in any case in which the Provincial Government has or may have jurisdiction to entertain and decide such appeals and applications. The Provincial Government may at any time, by like notification, cancel any direction by it under this sub-section."

Section 6 of the same Act, namely Act II [2] of 1946, says:

"In the exercise of the jurisdiction conferred by S. 5 in any case, the Tribunal shall have and may exercise all the powers which the Provincial Government had or could have exercised in such case."

Assam Act II [2] of 1946, under the head "jurisdiction," includes revision under S. 151, which means that in all revenue cases after 28th May 1946, the day on which Act II [2] of 1946 received the assent of the Governor, revision under S. 151 lay to the Tribunal. The jurisdiction and powers of the Revenue Tribunal appointed under Act II [2] of 1946 have been transferred partly to the High Court and partly to certain authorities appointed by the Provincial Government. We have already referred to S. 3 of Assam Act IV [4] of 1948 dealing with the transfer of powers of the Assam Revenue Tribunal, Sub-sec. (2) of S. 3 says:

"In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing provision, the Assam High Court shall have jurisdiction to entertain appeals and revise decisions in all revenue cases arising under the provisions of the enactments specified in Sch. A in which such jurisdiction was vested in the Provincial Government immediately before first day of April 1987."

[10] In Col. 3 of Sch. A of Act IV [4] of 1948, under the head "Jurisdiction", the revisional jurisdiction of the Provincial Government ves. ted in the Provincial Government immediately before 1st April 1937, was transferred to the High Court under sub s. (2) of S. 3 of Assam Act IV [4] of 1948 Between 1946 and 6th April 1948, the day on which Assam Act IV [4] of 1948 received the assent of the Governor, the revisional jurisdiction of the Provincial Government under S. 151 of the Regulation was exercised by the Revenue Tribunal under S. 5 of Assam Act II [2] of 1946, and by Assam Act IV [4] of 1948, the jurisdiction exercised by the Revenue Tribunal up to 8th (6th ?) April 1948, was transferred to the High Court to the extent mentioned in Sch. A. As we have already said, item No. 5 in col 3 of the Sch. A to Assam Act IV [4] of 1948, contains the powers in revision under S 151 of the Regulation. It follows from the various enactments to which we have referred that the revisional powers under S. 151 of the Regulation are now exercisable by the High Court. We have, therefore, by jurisdiction to entertain this petition.

[11] As to the merits of the petition, it is contended on behalf of the petitioner by Mr. Ghose that the action of the S. D. C. in going to the Ladies' Club on the morning of 23rd March 1949 at 8 A. M. with a view to examine the records of the Club, was unwarranted by the provisions of Ss. 141 and 142 of the Regulation under which the S. D. C. acted or purported to act. It is urged that under S. 141, the S. D. C. must issue a summons to a person whose attendance is required for the purpose of any investigation or other business conducted under the Regulation, and that when a person is so summoned, he shall be bound to attend either in person or by authorised agent, and to state the truth upon any subject respecting which he may be examined, and to produce such documents and other things as may be required; in the absence of a summons, the Revenue Officer prescribed under S. 141, is powerless to act under S. 142 of the Regulation.

that the word "summon" used in S. 141 of the Regulation has not the same meaning as the word "summons" used in the Code of Civil Procedure; that if proceedings under S. 141 are not to be regarded as judicial proceedings, R. 181 of the Regulation, which says that the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, and of enactments amending the same, relating to procuring the attendance of witnesses and the production of documents, shall apply to all proceedings of a judicial nature, has no application to action taken under S. 141 or S. 142 of the Regulation, and that a requisition in writing howsoever informal calling upon a person to attend amounts to sufficient compliance with the provisions of S. 141 of the Regulation. Assuming for the sake of argument that the word 'summon' used in S. 141 is not to be given the same meaning as the word "summon" used in the Code of Civil Procedure, because proceedings under S. 141 are not judicial proceedings the question arises whether the S. D. C. acted or purported to act in the matter of an investigation or other business conducted under the Regulation.

[13] Mr. Barman frankly admitted that apart from the official routine which enables a Deputy Commissioner to ask the S. D. C. to report on an application such as was made by the Samiti in this case, there is no provision in the Regulation which authorises a S. D. C. to initiate proceedings under S. 141 of the Regulation.

[14] In our view, the report called for by the Deputy Commissioner was a report upon the availability of accommodation, as indicated by the Samiti in its application, which made no reference whatsoever to the grant of land to the Ladies' Club. As to the terms and conditions upon which the land was granted to the Ladies' Club, they must be matters of record and all that the S. D. C. was required by the order of the Deputy Commissioner to do was to refer to the office records relating to the grant of land to the Ladies' Club and to report to the Deputy Commissioner accordingly. In the course of arguments it was suggested by Mr. Barman that the office records relating to the grant of land to the Ladies' Club were not traceable and that that was the reason why the S. D. C. called upon the Secretary of the Ladies' Club to produce the relevant papers before him. Even so, we do not think the S. D. C. was well advised in visiting the Ladies' Club for that purpose; he should have been content to stay in his office and require the Secretary of the Ladies' Club to produce the relevant papers before him during the prescribed office hours. We cannot accept the interpretation of S. 140 of the Regulation as put by Mr. Barman, that a Revenue Officer described in S. 140 or S. 141 of the Regulation can, in virtue of his presence in a house or club, on official business, regard the house or club as his Court. Nor can we accept the position that having regard to the multifarious duties which a Revenue Officer has to perform under widely different conditions and circumstances, his right to enter a place, whether it be a house or a club, at any time of the day or night, and to regard it as a Court, ought to be recognised. We think, acceptance of this position would amount to adding a rider to the well-established right of a man to regard his house as his castle. The rider would have to be in these words:

"The house of an Assamese is his castle subject to the right of a Revenue Officer to enter it at any time of the day or night and to use it as his Court."

The learned Advocate General who appeared in the contempt proceedings, arising out of the same matter frankly stated that he regarded as indiscreet the visit of the S. D. C. to the Ladies' Club at about 8 A. M. on the morning of 23rd March 1949, when Miss Das Gapta had informed him that she would not be able to be present at the inspection owing to a previous engagement.

on the facts of this case, be properly attributed to a sense of injured pride when he found that Miss Das Gupta preferred keeping a prior engagement to meeting him at the Ladies' Club on the morning of 23rd March 1949. It is on this assumption that we can reconcile the S. D. C.'s rejoinder to Miss Das Gupta's letter that he would visit the Club at 8 A. M., if she had to keep a prior engagement at 9 A. M. Assuming that the action of the S. D. C. on the morning of 23rd March 1949 was inspired by executive zeal only. We do not think, executive zeal can be regarded as a virtue when it seeks to use so unceremoniously a private club as a court-house.

[16] We are satisfied that the facts of this case justify our interference with the order of the Deputy Commissioner passed in appeal from the order of the S. D. C., which we regard as a fit one to be set aside.

[17] We accordingly set aside the order of the Deputy Commissioner, dated 19th April 1949 and order that the fine, if recovered, be refunded to the petitioner.

Dighola Ahom and others — Appellants v. The King.

Criminal Appeal No. 19 of 1949, Decided on 22nd July 1949.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 297 — Misdirection —Accused charged under S. 366, Penal Code—Investigation of previous offence of abduction pending — Some accused concerned in previous offence — Jury linding accused guilty of offence under S. 365, Penal Code and acquitting them of offence under S. 366 — Judge in his charge to jury directing them to infer from conduct of accused and circumstances if they had requisite intention contemplated under S. 365 — No opportunity given to accuse d to explain inference—Judge held misdirected jury — Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 342.

The accused were charged and tried for an offence under S. 366, Penal Code pending the investigation of a previous offence of abduction in which some of the accused were concerned. The jury unanimously brought a verdict of guilty against the accused under S. 365, Penal Code, an offence with which they were not charged, while acquitting them of the charge under S 366. In his charge to the jury, the Sessions Judge directed them to infer from the conduct of the accused and the circumstances of the case whether the accused had the requisite intention as contemplated under S. 365. The Judge, however, did not give an opportunity to the accused, as he was required to do under S. 342, to explain this inference:

Held that, by his reference to the terms of S. 365 in his charge to the jury merely on the strength of an equivocal inference upon which he invited the jury to consider the application of S. 365 when there was no charge against the accused under that section, the Sessions Judge misdirected the jury in law in the absence of an explanation from the accused in their examination under S. 342, Criminal P. C. [Para 12]

(b) Penal Code (1860), S. 362 — Section does not define offence — Abduction becomes offence when accompanied by certain intentions.

Section 362 merely defines what "abduction" is. It does not define an offence. Abduction becomes an offence only when it is accompanied by one of the three intentions described in Ss. 364, 365 and 366, Penal Code.

(d) Criminal P. C. Where in a case in which the acoused were charged under S. 366, Penal Code, it was attempted to prove that the girl was compelled to go from her house with the intent specified in S. 366 and there was no doubt that if this fact could be proved it would constitute an offence under S. 366:

Held, that the question of the applicability of S. 365 did not arise and the accused could not be convicted of the offence under that section. [Para 16]

J. C. Sen for H. K. Lahiri-for Appellants

J. C. Sen for H. K. Lahiri-for Appellants. B. C. Barua, Govt. Advocate (Jr.)-for the Crown.

Judgment. — This is an appeal by 5 persons one Dighola Ahom, Bhanu Ahom. Gopal Ahom, Dehiram Ahom, and Someswar Ahom. who were tried along with 4 others by the learned Sessions Judge, Lower Assam Division, with the aid of a Jury for offences under Ss. 147, 825 and 866, Penal Code. The jury brought a unanimous verdict of not guilty of any offence against 4 accused persons, but brought a verdict, of guilty against the 5 appellants under S. 865, Penal Code., an offence with which they were not charged, while acquitting them of the charges under S. 866, Penal Code, and 147, Penal Code. The appellant Bhanu was in addition found guilty under S. 325, Penal Code. The learned Sessions Judge agreed with the unanimous verdict of the Jury against the 5 appellants and sentenced each of them to rigorous imprisonment for 2 years under S. 365, Penal Code, and further sentenced the appellant Bhanu under S 325, Penal Code., to rigorous imprisonment for 6 months, the sentences to run concurrently.

[2] The case for the prosecution was that some time before the present occurrence which took place on 1st February 1948, Mt. Kapahi, a girl of 17 years of age and a daughter of one Kalai Bora, was forcibly dragged to the house of one Cheru by the appellants Bhanu and Dighala and one Gerela in order that she might be compelled to marry Cheru. After living for a while with Cheru who forced her live with him as his wife, she managed to escape and return to her father, and made a statement before a Magistrate.

[3] On 1st February 1948, at about 2 P. M. her younger brother called Kaneswar asked her to take a jug of water to the field. No sooner had Mt. Kapahi left the house with the waterjug than the appellant Dighala Ahom and a brother of the appellant Dehiram seized her by the arm; almost immediately the other appellants and some others, about 16 in number, came armed with spears, lathis and daos and took away the girl by force; in the course of the abduction, the appellant Bhanu is alleged to have in jured the father of the abducted girl. In the first information report lodged by the father of the girl, he stated that the motive for the abduction was revenge.

[4] It is the prosecution case that the abducted girl was first taken to the house of appellant Mahidhar Ahom and thence to the house of appellant Someswar; in the house of Someswar her thuria (ear-rings) were removed by the appellant Dehiram, a brother of the appellant Someswar; in the house of Someswar, the appellant Bhanu bit ber on the mouth with a fist and dislocated her teeth; after sunset she was taken to a jungle in the bari of appellant Someswar and his brother, Dehi, later she was taken to the house of one Indiram, outside the house of Indiram; in a bari of bamboo clumps, the appellants Dehi, Gopal and Bhanu raped her; the following morning she managed to escape to the house of one Paniram, from where Paniram's son, Gandhiram, took her to father's house, where she narrated the story to her parents and implicated the appellants and others; her father then lodged the first information report at the Gabour Police Station.

preliminary enquiry, committed the appellants and their companions to the Court of Sessions to stand their trial under Ss. 147, 866 and 825, Penal Code.

[6] Mr. Sen who appears for the appellants, has contended that the verdict of guilty brought by the Jury under 8, 365, Penal Code and accepted by the learned Sessions Judge, was a verdict which the jury was incompetent to bring in view of the summing up of the learned Sessions Judge which, except for a passing reference to the terms of S. 365, Penal Code was a summing up with reference to the charge under S. 366, Penal Code. For instance, the learned Sessions Judge has stated in his charge to the jury:

"You are to Infer from the conduct of the culprits and the circumstances of the case whether the culprits had the requisite intention as contemplated under S. 366, Penal Code. In the ejahar, it was stated that there had been a previous case pending about the abduction of the girl, Mt. Kapahi, and that the girl, Mt. Kapahi, was abducted this time while she was in Jimma (custody) of Kolai with the permission of the Magistrate, and that some of the accused were accused in that previous case. That the occurrence of this case was committed by them because some of the accused in the previous case were arrested by police and in order to take revenge for the previous case."

"Since after the removal of the girl, Mt. Kapahi, to Mahidhar's house, as I have already stated we have the evidence of no other except the girl herself. She says that from Mahidhar's house she was taken to Someswar's house by Dighala, Bhanu, Someswar, Dehi, Gopal and Mahidhar. That Gopal and Dehi dragged her by the hands and Bhanu and Dighala pushed her from behind. That there at Someswar's house, Dehi snatched of her thurias from her wearing, and that the three women accused pressed her when the thurias were snatched off from her ears. But her father, Kolai, gives evidence that after the girl escaped and returned home, she reported to him that at Someswar's house her thurias were taken by Someswar...."

passages to point out that in the entire evidence of the girl, which the learned Sessions Judge placed before the jury, there is no reference whatsoever to her having ever been secretly and wrongfully confined. Indeed it appears that apart from a passing reference to 8. 365, Penal Code under the heading "The Law", there is nothing to show that the learned Sessions Judge had in mind the particulars which constitute an offence under S. 365, Penal Code. It is true that in the last paragraph of his charge to the jury, the learned Sessions Judge has stated:

"Therefore, on the evidence placed before you, you are to consider whether she was abducted with the requisite intention as contemplated under S. 866, Penal Code, or with intent to cause her to be wrongfully confined secretly so that her evidence might be shut out in the previous case of abduction, which was still under investigation. I have placed the law and the evidence of the case and you are to decide whether any of the accused persons could be held guilty under any of the sections of the Indian Penal Code I have explained above."

[9] We are unable to find from the evidence on record, even so much as a suggestion, that the girl was secretly and wrongfully confined.

[9] In connection with this aspect of the case, we are constrained to observe that having regard to the examination of the appellants under the provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C., the learned Judge was not justified in referring to the particular inference upon which he invited the jury to act. If the learned Judge thought that the particular inference was an adequate piece of evidence to enable the jury to consider their verdict in relation to an offence under S. 365, Penal Code, he should have given an opportunity to the appellants, as he was required to do under the provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C., to explain this piece of evidence, the more so when the appellants were not charged with an offence under S. 365, Penal Code.

[10] In the committing Magistrate's Court, the examination of the appellants was in these terms:

"Q. What is your defence?

A. I did not commit any offence. I cannot say anything.

I was out for cutting thatch, I know nothing.

I was at Jorhat."

[11] At the trial in the Court of Session, the learned Judge put the following questions to the appellant:

'Q. Have you heard the depositions of the witnesses?

A. Yes, I have heard.

Q. You may say what you have got to say.?

A. I did not drag the girl. I am not guilty."

[12] By his reference to the terms of S. 365, Penal Code in his charge to the jury, merely on the strength of an equivocal inference upon which he invited the jury to consider the application of S. 865, Penal Code when there was no charge against the appellants under that section, the learned Judge, we think, misdirected the jury in law, in the absence of an explanation from the appellants in their examination under 8. 842, Criminal P. C. It was not the prosecution case that the intention of the appellants in abducting the girl was secretly and wrongfully to confine her. The learned Judge should have warned the jury that there was no direct evidence as to the intention required for a conviction under S. 365, Penal Code. His giving prominence to the particular inference without making any reference to the absence of any direct evidence on the point, amounts on the facts of this case, particularly the failure to comply with the provisions of S. 842, Oriminal P. C., to misdirection and has resulted in the erroneous verdict, a verdict which we regard as against the weight of evidence.

[18] Mr. Barua who appears for the prosecu-

s. 365, Penal Code was justified in view of the provisions of S. 238, Criminal P. C. Section 238, Criminal P. O., is in these terms:

"(1) When a person is charged with an offence consisting of several particulars, a combination of some only of which constitutes a complete minor offence, and such combination is proved, but the remaining particulars are not proved, he may be convicted of the minor offence, though he was not charged with it.

(2) When a person is charged with an offence and facts are proved which reduce it to a minor offence, he may be convicted of the minor offence, although he is not charged with it.

(2-A) When a person is charged with an offence, he may be convicted of an attempt to commit such offence although the attempt is not separately charged.

(3) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorise a conviction of any offence referred to in S. 198 or S. 199 when no complaint has been made as required by that section."

[14] The several particulars which constitute an offence under S. 366, Penal Code are these: (1) that a woman was compelled by force or deceitful means to go from any place, (2) that she was so compelled or induced with intent that she may be compelled or knowing it to be likely that she will be compelled to marry any person against her will, or in order that she may be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse or know. ing it to be likely that she will be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse. Section 862, Penal Oode, merely defines what 'abduction' is. It does not define an offence. Abduction becomes an offence only when it is accompanied by one of the 8 intentions described in 8s. 364, 365 and 366, Penal Code.

[15] Section 238 (1), Criminal P. C. applies when a person is charged with an offence consisting of several particulars, a combination of some only of which constitutes a complete minor offence, and when such combination is proved, but the remaining particulars are not proved, he may be convicted of the minor offence, though he was not charged with it. Section 238 (1), therefore, in terms has no application to a case when the offence charged under S. 366, Penal Code is sought to be reduced to one under S. 365, Penal Code. If any part of S. 238, Criminal P. C., applies to such a case, it is S. 238 (2), which is in these terms:

Illustration (b) to S. 238, Criminal P. C., elucidates the meaning of sub.s. (2) of S 238, Criminal P. C. We have already observed that we are unable to take the view that facts have been proved in this case which reduce the offence charged under S. 366, Penal Code to one under S. 365, Penal Code.

[16] Mr. Barua next contended that Ss. 236 and 237, Oriminal P. C., applied to the facts of the case. Section 236, Criminal P. C., reads as follows:

"If a single act or series of acts is of such a nature that it is doubtful which of several offences the facts which can be proved will constitute, the accused may be charged with having committed all or any of such offences, and any number of such charges may be tried at once; or he may be charged in the alternative with having committed some one of the said offences."

Section 237, Criminal P. C., says:

"(1) If, in the case mentioned in S. 236, the accused is charged with one offence, and it appears in evidence that he committed a different offence for which he might have been charged under the provisions of that section, he may be convicted of the offence which he is shown to have committed, although he was not charged with it."

Section 236, Criminal P. C., applies only when it is doubtful which of several offences upon the facts which can be proved will be constituted. In this case, it was attempted to prove that the girl was compelled by force to go from her house with the intent specified in S. 366, Penal Code. There is no doubt that if this fact could be proved, it would constitute an offenec under S. 366, Penal Code. The question, therefore, of the applicability of S. 365, Penal Code, did not arise.

[17] Mr. Barua has referred us to a decision of the Calcutta High Court reported in Queen Empress v. Sita Nath, 22 cal. 1006. It is true that the decision in that case supports the view that where a charge had been framed against an accused person under S. 366, Penal Code and the charge fails, the Court could convict the accused person under S. 365, Penal Code in the absence of a formal charge having been framed against him. Macpherson J. observed:

"But the object of the outrage was, we consider, not to violate the complainant's person but to prevent her from prosecuting the complaint which she had made, to bring her under the influence of the person who had abducted her and to keep her away from the influence of those who might compel her to go on with the complaint and for that purpose it was necessary to keep

ber in confinement

It is true that wrongful confinement is not an essential feature of the commission of an offence under S. 366, but it must often be involved in it, and the whole case for the prosecution is not only that there was abduction but confinement withthe view to force the complainant to illicit intercourse."

[18] With great respect, the words in S. 365, Penal Code are not 'confinement or wrongful confinement' but 'secret and wrongful confinement., Macpherson J., did not say under which sub-section of S. 238, Criminal P. C., such a case would fall, but Banerjee J, apparently applied sub-s. (2) of S. 238, Criminal P. C., to the facts of that case. He observed:

"Now S 238, Criminal P. C., Para. 2, says: "When a person is charged with an offence and facts are proved which reduce it to a minor offence, he may be convicted of the minor offence, although he is not charged with it."

[19] Assuming sub-s. (2) of S. 238, Criminal P. C., applies to the facts before us, we are of the view that facts have not been proved in this case which reduce the offence charged under S. 366, Penal Code to one under S. 365, Penal Code. Indeed I am more inclined to the view that when the two intentions as described in S. 365 can be proved by direct or inferential evidence, an accused person ought to be charged with both offences under S. 235 Criminal P. C., and that Ss. 236, 237 and 238, Criminal P. C., have no application. If the intention described in S. 366, Penal Code, fails and that described in S. 365, Penal Code is established, an accused person can be convicted under S. 365, Penal Code, provided a charge is framed against him under S. 365, Penal Code in accordance with the provisions of S. 235, Criminal P. C. But we leave this question open for a decision upon a more appropriate occasion.

in respect of the conviction and sentence passed on the appellants under S. 365, Penal Code. They are acquitted of the offence under S. 365, Penal Code. So far as the conviction and sentence passed upon the appellant Bhanu under S. 325. Penal Code, is concerned, we see no reason to interfere. The conviction and sentence passed upon Bhanu under S. 325, Penal Code are con-

Second Appeal No. 35-A of 1948, Decided on 23rd June 1949.

(a) Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (1886), S. 82 — Sale under S. 91 of Regulation — Ss. 81 and 82 cannot govern such sale — Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (I [1] of 1886), Ss. 81 and 91.

Sections 81 and 82 cannot govern sales made or ordered under S. 91 of the Regulation. It is not, therefore, necessary for a person who is affected by a sale under S. 91 to institute a suit for having the sale annulled by the Civil Court under the provisions of S. 82 if he can show that the sale is a nullity. [Para 9]

(b) Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (1886), S. 91—Sale of land under section — Circumstances not justifying sale — Revenue Officer not authorised to order sale—Objections to sale not raised before Revenue Officer by defendant whose interests were affected by sale — Appeal by defendant to Revenue Tribunal—Tribunal ordering sale to be set aside on defendant depositing certain amount—Suit by auction-purchaser for possession—Orders of Revenue authorities held were without jurisdiction and sale was nullity Defendant held could challenge orders in collateral proceedings—Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (I [1] of 1886), S. 151.

The land in suit was sold for recovery of arrears of land revenue under S. 91. The circumstances which justify action under S. 91 did not exist when the sale was ord-red; nor was the Revenue Officer authorised in law to order the sale. The defendant whose interests were affected by the sale, without raising any objections to the sale in the Court of the Revenue Officer, appealed to the Revenue Tribunal which ordered that the sale would be set aside on defendant depositing a sum equal to the purchase money, though the defendant was not in arrears so far as the land revenue was concerned. The land in suit was also not a defaulting estate or part of it. In a suit by the auction purchaser of the laud for possession thereof:

Held that the orders of the Revenue authorities were without jurisdiction and the sale on the basis of which the plaintiff claimed title to the property was a nullity in law. The Revenue Tribunal could not validate a sale which was void under S. 151 and the mere fact that the defendant was a party to the proceedings before that Tribunal would not make its order binding on him. It was therefore open to the defendant to challenge the order of the Revenue Officer as well as of the Revenue Tribunal in collateral proceedings on the ground that they had no jurisdiction to pass the orders that they did: A I. Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of title to and khas possession of the land in suit measuring 33 B. 2 K. 15 Ls., covered by periodic patta No. 19 of 1927-28 of Pankialgaon, Mouza Marangi.

[3] The land in suit originally belonged to Juran, father of defendant 1. He sold it by a registered sale deed to the father of defen. dents 2.4 on 14th September 1933. Juran died soon after the sale. His son defendant 1 who was in possession of the land instituted a suit to establish his title against defendants 2-4. His attempt did not succeed. The suit was dismissed. He, however, continued to remain in possession of the property and thus forced defendants 2-4 to institute a suit against him for obtaining necessary redress on the basis of the sale deed which had been executed in favour of their father. The suit was for a declaration of title and khas possession. It was decreed after contest on 21st October 1941. Before defendants 2-4 could obtain delivery of possession in exeoution of the decree passed in their favour, the land in suit was sold under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation for recovery of arrears of land revenue due from defendants 2-4. It is worthy of note that the arrears for which the land was sold were arrears due from defendants 2.4 in respect of land other than the land in suit. The sale, therefore, was under 8 91, Land and Revenue Regulation. Kankeswar Bargohain, father of the plaintiffs in the present case, purchased the land at the revenue sale. The revenue authorities could only give him symbolical possession and referred him to the civil Court for obtaining actual possession. This they could not deliver on account of resistance by defendant 1 who was in possession. It is in pursuance of this direction that plaintiffs instituted the suit which gave rise to this appeal.

- [4] Defendant 1, who has contested the suit, was aware of the sale of the land by the revenue authorities. He did not apply to the officer ordering the sale for baving the sale set aside but petitioned or appealed to the Revenue Tribunal against the order confirming the sale. The Tribunal found that the Bakijai officer (the Revenue Officer who ordered the sale) in ordering the sale of the land in suit acted in utter disregard of the provisions contained in S. 91 of the Regulation. It also expressed the view that the entire sale proceedings had been "vitiated by an utter disregard of the spirit as well as the letter of the law." In spite of taking this view of the matter, the Tribunal acting under S. 151, Land and Revenue Regulation directed that the sale be set aside on condition of the petitioner depositing a sum equal to the purchase money and any other payments made in respect of revenue, etc.
- [5] Defendant 1 who alone is resisting the suit, pleaded that the sale was a nullity. It conferred no rights on the plaintiffs. He also claimed title on the basis of adverse possession extending over more than 12 years. The learned Munsiff of Golaghat found that defendant had not acquired title on the strength of adverse possession. He, however, found that the sale was a nullity as it had been ordered by an officer who had no jurisdiction to sell the property. In this view of the matter be dismissed the suit. In appeal the learned Additional Subordinate Judge, A. V. D., by his order dated 26th April reversed the order of the Trial Judge and decreed the claim holding that defendant 1 being a party to the order passed by the Revenue Tribunal was bound by it and was precluded from challenging. its correctness.
- (6) Defendant 1 has appealed to this Court. His learned counsel has frankly stated that he has got no case so far as plea of adverse possession is concerned. He, however, urges that the alleged sale, which is the foundation of plaintiff's title, has no existence in law and therefore it conferred no title of any description on the plaintiff. He has also urged that plaintiff is precluded from instituting this suit for khas possession as he is a representative of defendants 2.4 who had already obtained a decree against defendant 1 and had failed to execute it within the time allowed to them by law.

[7] The facts bearing on the first contention raised by the learned counsel for the appellant have been fully stated above. The sale of the land by the Bakijai officer (Revenue Officer) was admittedly under S. 91 of the Land and Revenue Regulation. This section authorises the Deputy Commissioner to recover arrears by the sale of the estate of a defaulter, if such arrears are found to be irrecoverable by any of the processes described in sections which precede S. 91. It is admitted that no attempt had been made to recover arrears from the defaulter by means of processes described in sections other than S 91. It was possible under S. 70 to sell the estate in respect of which arrears were due. Moveable property could have been proceeded against.

[8] These methods were not availed of. In these circumstances, sale of the property in respect of which arrears were not due was not possible under S. 91. The officer who is authorised to recover arrears of revenue under S. 91 by sale of the property other than that in respect of which arrears are due is the Deputy Commissioner. The officer who ordered the sale in this case was not the Deputy Commissioner. It is also admitted that he had not been vested by the Provincial Government with powers to order sale of property under S. 91. He obviously had no jurisdiction to order the sale. The learned counsel for the respondent agrees that the sale was not ordered or held by an officer who had juris. diction in the matter. He also concedes that the sale, in the circumstances, of this case would be nullity. He, however, answers this contention by relying on S. 82 of the Land and Revenue Regulation. He argues that a sale for arrears of revenue could be annulled by a civil Court on certain grounds only and if defendant 1 was aggrieved by the order of the Revenue Tribunal, he should have instituted a suit under S. 82. No such suit having been instituted by him, the sale even if irregular or illegal would be binding and this would be particularly so as defendant 1 being a party to the order of the Reuenue Tribunal is bound by it. He points out, further, that the order of the Revenue Tribunal was passed under S. 151 of the Regulation and that section gives very wide and unrestricted powers to the Tribunal.

[9] I have given my careful consideration to the argument advanced. I do not think it can prevail. As examination of the scheme of Chap. V of the Land & Revenue Regulation would show that under S. 70 a Depute Commissioner may sell certain estates by auction if arrears have accrued in respect of them. Sections 71 to 78 lay down the procedure for the sale by the Deputy Commissioner. Under S. 78A "any person either owning such estate or a part thereof or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before such sale, may apply on or before the thirtieth day from the date of sale to have the sale set aside on depositing in the Deputy Commissioner's Court."

Certain sums of money as laid down in the sec. tion. Under S. 79, an application for setting aside a sale within 60 days of the sale could be made to the Commissioner, or (where there is no Commissioner) to the Provincial Government on the ground of some material irregularity or mistake in publishing or conducting it. If the sale is not set aside under the provisions of S. 78A or 79, it becomes final after the expiry of the period of time laid down in S. 80. But the finality is subject to the provisions of Ss. 81 and 82. Section 81 empowers the Provincial Government on an application made to it at any time within one year of the date of sale becoming final under S. 80 to set it aside on grounds of hardship or injustice. Section 82 authorises a civil Court to annul a sale for arrears of revenue if the sale is contrary to the provisions of the Regulation and on proof that the plaintiff has sustained substantial injury by reason of the neglect of those provisions. It is clear that these sections lay down the procedure for conducting the sale of an estate with respect to which arrears have accrued and for having that sale set aside. Reading Ss. 81 and 82 together, it is also clear that the sale of a defaulting estate which becomes provisionally final under S. 80 can be set aside under Ss. 81 and 82. There is no doubt that S. 82 permits the civil Court to annul such a sale. The question, however, is whether S. 82 will also govern sales made or ordered under S. 91, Land and Revenue Regulation. There is nothing in S. 82 which could suggest even remotely that sales under S. 91 could also be covered by it. The express direction contained in S. 91 with regard to procedure is that the Deputy Commissioner may proceed against any of the other property of the defaulter situated within his district according to law for the time being in force for the attachment and sale of immoveable property under the decree of a civil Court. There can be no manner of doubt that the procedure for the sale of a defaulting estate is different from procedure which would be adopted where an estate is to be sold under S. 91 for arrears due from its owner though the arrears are due with respect to some other estate. The procedure which will govern the attachment and sale of immovable property other than the defaulting estate is the procedure provided in the Civil Procedure Code for the attachment and sale of immovable property under a decree of the civil Court. It is again obvious that the two sets of procedure are very different. Under the Civil Procedure Code the Provincial Government will have no special power to set aside a sale within one year of date on the ground of hardship or injustice. According to the procedure provided in the Civil Procedure Code a separate suit for setting aside the sale like the one provided for by S. 82 would not lie. Sections 81 and 82, therefore, could not govern sales made or ordered under S. 91 of the Regulation. In these circumstances, it would not be necessary for defendant 1 to institute a suit for having the sale annulled by the civil Court under the provisions of S. 82 if he can show that the sale is a nullity.

[10] It has been found that the circumstances which justify action under S. 91 did not exist when the sale of the property in suit was ordered; nor was the Officer concerned authorised in law to order the sale. The learned counsel has also agreed that the sale is without jurisdiction. The only question that remains to be determined therefore is whether the order of the Revenue Tribunal has any binding force. An appeal to the Revenue Tribunal would be competent if an application for setting aside the sale had been made and had been refused or disallowed. The learned counsel for plaintiff respondent is unable to point to any such application. It follows, therefore, that no objections were raised to the sale in the Court of the Officer under whose order the property was sold. In these circumstances the appellate jurisdiction of the Revenue Tribunal could not be invoked. There was no order by the Deputy Commissioner refusing to set aside the sale. An appeal against the order directing sale would not be competent in view of the procedure laid down in the Civil Procedure Code. But, even if an appeal was competent the defect of jurisdiction could not be cured. The order of the Revenue Tribunal also suffers from the same defect which vitiates the order of the Bakijai Officer (Revenue Officer) who ordered the sale. The Revenue Tribunal could not validate a sale which was void ab initio leven under 8. 151 of the Regulation. The defect of jurisdiction could not cure, much less could the Revenue Tribunal order that the sale would be set aside on defendant 1 depositing a certain sum of money. Defendant 1 was not in arrears so far as land revenue was concerned. The land in suit was also not a defaulting estate or part of it. This condition too was ultra vires of the Revenue Tribunal. In these circumstances the mere fact that defendant 1 was a party to the proceedings before the Revenue Tribunal would not make the order binding on him. It will be open to him to challenge the order of the Revenue Officer as well as of the Revenue Tribunal in collateral proceedings on the ground that they had no jurisdiction to pass the orders that they did. This view of the law finds support from a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court reported in Tajmul Ali v. Kamala Ranjan, A. I. R. (23) 1936 Cal. 138: (161 I. C. 744). The learned Judges held that an order made by a Court which has no jurisdiction to deal with the subject matter of the suit has no binding effect on the person who is effected by the order. It is absolutely void and is open to challenge in collateral proceedings. I am in full agreement with this view and hold that the orders of the Revenue authorities are without jurisdiction and the sale on the basis of which the plaintiff claims title to the property is a nullity in law.

[11] The suit, therefore, must fail on this ground alone. It is not necessary to consider the second contention raised by the learned counsel for the appellant. This appeal is, therefore, allowed, the order of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge is reversed and that of the trial Court restored. I shall leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

THADANI AG. C. J. AND RAM LABHAYA J.

Province of Assam—Petitioner—Appellant v. Lakhi Nayak and others—Accused—Respondents.

Criminal Revn. No. 18 of 1949, Decided on 18th July 1949, from order of Political Officer, Sadiya Frontier Tract, D/- 11th June 1948.

(a) Assam Frontier (Administration of Justice) Regulation (I [1] of 1945), S. 26—"In other cases"—Words do not cover appeals against orders of acquittal.

The words "in other cases" in S. 26, cannot be considered to cover appeals against orders of acquittal. If the words are held to include orders of acquittal any one dissatisfied with the order will have the right of appeal. The result will be that while a party dissatisfied with an order of acquittal will have a right of appeal, it will be questionable whether the Government can exercise that right. It is obvious that this result could not have been contemplated. It would be a gross violation of the salutary principle which finds statutory recognition in S. 417, Crimins, P. C. It could not have, therefore, been intended that instead of the Goveroment having the right of appeal in suitable cases against orders of acquittal, a party considering himself adversely affected by the order may appeal from that order as of right.

(b) Assam Frontier (Administration of Justice) Regulation (I [1] of 1945), S. 32 —Principle of S. 404, Criminal P. C., is binding on Courts acting under Regulation—No right of appeal against order of acquittal exists—Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 404.

The principle of S. 404, Criminal P. C. is binding on the Courts acting under the Regulation. There can be no right of appeal unless it is expressly provided for it either in the Criminal Procedure Code or in any other special law The right of appeal must be expressly conferred. It cannot be extended by a process of inferential reasoning. Where it is not given by the law, it does not exist. The Regulation contains no provision for an appeal against an order of acquittal. In these circumstances no right of appeal against orders of acquittal can be said to exist either in the Government or in any one else. Section 32 of the Regulation cannot be utilised to extend the jurisdiction of the appellate or the revisional authorities under the Regulation [Para 11] Annotation: (46-Com.) Cr. P. C., S. 404, N. 4.

(c) Assam Frontier (Administration of Justice) Regulation (I [1] of 1945) S. 28 - Section does not give right of appeal against orders of acquittal—High Court cannot set aside order of acquittal under section.

Section 28 deals with cases of conviction only as distinguished from those of acquittal. It does not give any right of appeal even to the Government against orders of acquittal. It would not be conceivable that in these circomstances, it would permit anyone feeling aggrieved by the order to move the High Court for its reversal in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction. It is for this reason that the revisional jurisdiction is as circumscribed as the appellate jurisdiction. The Court may draw on its revisional jurisdiction in cases of conviction where no appeal lies to it. But it has no power to pass any order or to give any direction except such as affects the sentence or conviction. A sentence may be enhanced, reduced or cancelled; a conviction may be set aside and a retrial ordered. These are the only orders which can be passed under the section. There is thus no power in the High Court to set aside an order of acquittal under the section. [Para 13]

(d) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 439—Applicability— Section does not apply to cases covered by Assam Frontier (Administration of Justice) Regulation (I [1] of 1945) — Assam Frontier (Administration of Justice) Regulation (I [1] of 1945), Ss. 28 and 32.

High Court cannot have recourse to its revisional jurisdiction under the Code of Criminal Procedure when exercising jurisdiction in a case under the Regulation. Such a course of action would involve a clear contravention of the provisions of Ss 28 and 32 of the Regulation. The revisional powers of the High Court under S. 28 of the Regulation are very limited and contain no provision for interference with orders of acquittal and S. 32 of the Regulation affords no justification for extending the jurisdiction either appellate or revisional of the High Court. Such a course cannot be regarded as consistent with the Regulation. S. 439, therefore, has no application to cases covered by the Regulation.

[Para 15] Annotation: ('46-Com.) Cri. P. C., S. 439, N. 8.

R. K. Barman Govt. Advocate (Sr.) -for Petitioners. B. N. Choudhary -for Accused.

Ram Labhaya J.—This is a revision petition against the order of the Political Officer, Sadiya Frontier Tract, dated 11th June 1948 by which he acquitted the three accused who are respondents in this petition and who were tried under a charge of murder for intentionally causing the death of Mt. Niang, a Khasi lady.

[2] Mt. Niarg was murdered in the early hours of the morning of 12th June 1947. Metilda, who was living with the deceased as her adopted daughter, was in her room on the night of the occurrence. She reported at 6 A. M that Lakhi Bangali and Ekadasi, respondents 1 and 2, had committed burglary by breaking open the house and had caused grievious hurt to Mt. Niang, who was alive till then. She died later.

[3] On 18th June 1947, Metilda took Jogendra K. Chaudhury, Officer in Charge, Sadiya Police Station, to the house and pointed out a hole in the wooden post. From this some ornaments and cash were recovered. She also pointed out the blood stained aao which was also concealed in the room behind that post.

[4] On 19th June 1947, Metilda, accused, was produced before Mr. B. M. Roy, Magistrate, 1st Class, who after satisfying himself that M. tildawanted to confess voluntarily recorded her confes-ion. She revealed that Lakhi, accused, met her at 12 noon on the day preceding that of murder and they both decided to kitl Mt. Niang in the course of the following night. Atabout 1 A M. he (Lakhi) came and knocked atthe door which was opened by her. He entered the room. The deceased was sleeping. Ekadasi, ac. cused, who came with Lakhi, did not entered the house. He remained outside in the compound all the time. She and Lakhi both caused injuries to the deceased as a result of which she died. She then informed Lakhi as to where cash and ornaments were. Lakhi took his share and left the house together with Ekadashi. She concealed her share of the stolen property in a hole in the wooden post inside the house.

[5] Ekadashi was wearing a blood stained shirt on 13th June when he was in the bajat. This was seized and sent to the Chemical Examiner, who reported that traces of human blood had been found on it.

[6] The confession made by Metilda before the Magistrate was retracted at the trial. All the three accused pleaded not guilty. No defence evidence was produced. The learned Political Officer, who tried the case, came to the conclusion, in these circumstances, that the recovery of ornaments and cash from the wooden post was an inconclusive circumstance. His finding was that nothing had been proved which would connect the accused with the murder. He thought Metilda mentally deficient. He described her as a "crack." He regarded it as improbable that she herself should have participated in the murder and caused injuries which she had confessed to have caused when making her confessional statement. In consequence he acquitted all the accused.

[7] The correctness of the finding arrived at by the Political Officer is assailed by the learned Government Advocate and the revisional jurisdiction of the Court is invoked for setting aside the order of acquittal and ordering a retrial either under S. 28 of the Regulation, I [1] of 1945. [The Assam Frontier (Administration of Justice) Regulation 1945] or under S. 439, Criminal P. C.

[8] The first question that arises for consideration is whether this revision petition is competent. In order to answer this question, it is necessary toexamine the Scheme of the Regulation (I [1] of 1945) under which the trial was held. Sections 24. to 26 of the Regulation deal with appeals. Any party aggrieved by a decision of a village authority may appeal within seven days to the Assistant Political Officer, who, on receipt of such appeal shall try the case de novo. From every original decision of the Assistant Political Officer an appeal lies to the Political Officer. Section 26 of the Regulation provides for appeals to the Governor. It is only in case of sentences of three years' imprisonment and upwards, and sentences of death or transportation that an appeal lies to the Governor. In other cases there is no right of appeal, but the Governor may entertain an appeal at his discretion. Section 28 confers on the Governor powers of revision. Under this section, the Governor or the Political Officer may call for proceedings of any officer subordinate to him and reduce, enhance or cancel any sentence passed, or remand the case for retrial, but they cannot punish any offence by a centence exceed. ing that warranted by law. It is under this section that interference with the order of the Political Officer is sought.

[9] The powers of the Governor under Ss. 26 and 28 of the Regulation are now exercisable by the High Court.

[10] It is clear that the Regulation contains no provision for appeals against orders of acquittal. Section 26 provides for appeals against convictions. It lays down that an appeal shall lie to the Governor against sentences of three years' imprisonment and upwards, and sentences of death or transportation. There is no right of appeal in other cases, but the Governor may entertain an appeal at his discretion. It is obvious that Part 1 of the section authorises appeals against sentence of three years' imprisonment and upwards and sentences of death or transportation. Clause 2 necessarily refers to orders of convictions which are not covered by the preceding clause. It provides that:

"In other cases there shall be no right of appeal but the Governor may entertain an appeal at his discretion."

The reason for the interpretation given above is obvious. Certain orders of conviction resulting in sentences passed by the Political Officer are not covered by cl. 1 of s. 26. They had to be provided for this clause merely covers these cases. By no stretch of imagination can the words "in other cases" be considered to cover appeals against orders of acquittal. The reasons for this view are also apparent. Under the Criminal Procedure Code the right of appeal against orders of acquittal has been conferred only on the Government in order that interested parties may not indulge in vindictive prosecution. This right is not enjoyed by a private party to the case who may feel aggrieved by an order of acquittal. If, therefore, it had been intended that there should be a right of appeal against orders of acquittal, the right would have been conferred on the Government only in conformity with the principle on which S. 417, Criminal P. C., bas been founded. The right could not have conceivably been given to any one else. To confer the right on the Government alone, it would have been necessary to enact an express provision on the lines of s. 417, Criminal P. C. Such a course would have been found necessary in order to maintain the essential distinction between orders of acquittal and orders of conviction. If the words "in other cases" which find place in S. 26 of the Regulation are held to include orders of acquittal, anyone dissatisfied with the order will have the right of appeal The result will be that while a party dissatisfied with an order of acquittal will have a right of appeal, it will be questionable whether the Government can exercise that right. It is obvious that this result could not have been contemplated It would be a gross violation of the salutary principle which finds satutory recognition in S. 417, Criminl P. C. It could not have, therefore, been intended that instead of the Government having the right of appeal in suitable cases against orders of acquittal, a party considering himself adversely affected by the order may appeal from that order as of right.

[11] Section 32 of the Regulation directs that the Governor and the Political Officers exercising the jurisdiction under the Regulation shall be guided in regard to procedure by the principles of the Code of Criminal Procedure, so far as they are applicable to the circumstances of the Tracts (to which the Regulation applies) and consistent with the provisions of this Regulation. Section 404, Criminal P. C. lays down that "No appeal shall lie from any judgment or order of a Criminal Court except as provided for by this Code or by any other law for the time being in force."

The principle of this section is binding on the Courts acting under the R-gulation. There can be no right of appeal unless it is expressly provided for it either in the Criminal Procedure Code or in any other special law. The right of appeal must be expressly conferred. It cannot be extended by a process of inferential reasoning. Where it is not given by the law, it does not exist. The Regulation contains no provision for an appeal against an order of acquittal. In these circumstances, no right of appeal against orders of acquittal can be said to exist either in the Government or in anyone else. Section 32 of the Regulation cannot be utilised to extend the jurisdiction of the appellate or the revisional authorities under the Regulation. All that it lays down is that the Courts and Officers acting under the Regulation shall be guided in regard to their procedure by the principles of the Code of Criminal Procedure which are consistent with the provisions of the Regulation. They cannot enlarge their jurisdiction by reference to the provisions contained in the Criminal Procedure Code as doing so would not be consistent with the express provision of the Regulation. These observations apply in particular to powers to hear and dispose of appeals and revision petitions.

[12] The learned Government Advocate does not claim that the Government have any right of appeal against the order of acquittal. He was conscious of this lacuna in the law as contained in the Regulation and has, therefore, tried to invoke the revisional jurisdiction of the Court under S. 28 of the Regulation and in the alternative under S. 439, Criminal P. C.

[13] We do not think it is open to this Court to interfere with an order of acquittal in revision either. Under 8. 28 of the Regulation, this Court may call for the record of the proceedings of any subordinate officer and may reduce, enhance or cancel any sentence passed, or it may remand a case for re-trial, but it cannot pass any sentence not warranted by law. The powers given to the Court to enhance, reduce or cancel a sentence can only be exercised in cases which have ended in conviction. In some cases of conviction, it may be found necessary to order a retrial. This contingency is also provided for. The last clause indicates the maximum limit of sentence that may be imposed in a particular case. It is clear that like S. 26, this section also deals with cases of conviction only as distinguished from those of acquittal. This interpretation of the section is in consonance with the scheme of the Regulation. It does not give any right of appeal even to the Government against orders of acquittal. It would not be conceivable that, in these circumstances, it would permit anyone feeling aggrieved by the order to move the High Court for its reversal in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction. It is for this reason that the revisional jurisdiction is as circumscribed as the appellate jurisdiction. The Court may draw on its revisional jurisdiction in cases of conviction where no appeal lies to it. But it has no power to pass any order or to give any direction except such as affects the sentence or conviction. A sentence may be enhanced, reduced or cancelled; a conviction may be set aside and a retrial ordered. These are the only orders which can be passed under the section. There is thus no power in the High Court to set aside an order of acquittal under the section also.

within the limit set on it by the Regulation. The Court cannot utilise its powers of revision under S. 439, Criminal P. C. In the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction in cases tried under the Regulation, it shall no doubt be guided by suchprinciples as are recognised by the Code of Criminal Procedure but the jurisdiction itself cannot. be exceeded. Section 28 is exhaustive of the cases in which revisional jurisdiction may be exercised. It defines the limits of the revisional jurisdiction. Therefore the Court acting under it cannot pass any order not contemplated by it just as this Court cannot pass any order under S. 439, Criminal P. C., which is not expressly permitted by that section. The interpretation of S. 28 will be governed by exactly the same rules which have been applied in construing S. 26 and the result, therefore, cannot be different. In consequence it must be held that the revisional jurisdiction of the Court under the Regulation is as restricted as its appellate jurisdiction.

[15] The process of reasoning which has led to the above result indicates that this Court cannot have recourse to its revisional jurisdiction under the Code of Criminal Procedure when exercising jurisdiction in a case under the Regulation. Such a course of action would involve a clear contravention of the provisions of Ss. 28 and 32 of the Regulation. The High Court acting under S. 439, Criminal P. C., can set aside an order of acquittal as it is expressly authorised to exercise all its powers under S. 423, Criminal P. C., S. 423 empowers to it to set aside an order of acquittal. Clause 4 of S. 439, Criminal P. C., prohibits the conversion of an order of acquittal into one of conviction on revision in cases of acquittal. This power is expressly conferred on the High Court when acting under the Criminal Proceedure Code and one reason for this may be that an appeal against an order of acquittal, though expressly provided, can be preferred only by the Government. The revisional powers of this Court under S. 28 of the Regulation are very limited and contain no provision for interference with orders of acquittal and as stated above S. 32 of the Regulation affords no justification for extending the jurisdiction either appellate or revisional of the High Court. Such a course cannot be regarded as consistent with the Regulation. Section 439, Criminal P. C, therefore, cannot be utilised. It has no application to cases covered by the Regulation.

[16] The result of the foregoing discussion is that the order in question is not liable to interference either in appeal or in revision, even if it is found on examination to be wholly untenable. In the view of the law we take, it is not necessary to examine the merits of the order.

[17] In view of the interpretation we have placed on Ss. 26 and 28 of the Regulation it would appear that the Regulation is lacking in some essential provisions. The Officers entrusted with criminal jurisdiction under the Regulation are not bound by the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code. They have to be guided merely by the principles behind the statutory directions. They, therefore, enjoy wide powers they are not hampered in their work by elaborate rules of procedure which though they may tend to prolong cases semetime are intended to help the Courts in getting at the truth. The chances of their coming to a decision leading to a miscarriage of justice and thus bringing the administration of justice into disrepute are immeasurably greater. The necessity of the Government having the right of appeal against order of acquittal is obvious. The absence of a specific provision to that effect does not appear to us to be deliberate or intentional. Similarly, we think that it was not contemplated that the highest authority under the Regulation should have such restricted powers of revision as are now vested in it. As the law stands now revisional jurisdiction is available only in cases which have ended in conviction. These, however, are matters for the Governor of the province to consider.

On 23rd Novembar 1946 objections against the petition were put in by the appellant. The presiding officer of the Court not being present on that date his Sheristadar directed that the case be put up on 14th December in the presence of the parties' pleaders for orders. This direction was not intimated to the respondent who was not present that day. On 14th December the respondent and his counsel were absent. The petitlop was dismissed under O. 9, R. 8:

Held that the Sheristadar's direction not being the order of the Judge bad no binding force. The respondent was therefore under no obligation to appear on 14th December when his petition was dismissed in default and, therefore, the petition could not be dismissed for default: A. I. R. (21) 1934 Lah. 984 and A. I. R. (23) 1936 Lah. 1000, Rel. on. [Para 8]

Held further that the order of dismissal for default being patently illegal, the Illegality might well be regarded as mistake or error apparent on the face of the record and, therefore, could be reviewed. Even if the error be not regarded as apparent, it would certainly be a sufficient reason for review for the ground was undoubtedly analogous to a mistake or error apparent on the face of the record. But evidence bearing on the cause of non-apperance could not form a valid ground for review: A.I.R. (9) 1922 P. C. 112, Fcll.; A.I.R. (12) 1925 Bom. 521, Rel. on. [Paras 11, 13 and 14]

Ram Labhaya J.—This is an appeal from the order of the learned District Judge, A. V. D., dated 29th May 1947 by which he on review reversed his previous order dated 14th December 1946, dismissing in default a petition of Knmar Punyendra Narayan Deb, who is the respondent in this appeal.

[2] The respondent had applied under S. 4, Bengal Regulation, V [5] of 1799, praying that security be taken from Kumar Bhairabendra Narayan Deb, opposite party, (now appellant) against whom title Suit No. 42 of 1940 was pending in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Alipore.

[3] On 23rd November 1946 objections against the petition were put in by the appellant. The presiding officer of the Court (District Judge) was not present on that date. He was out on tour. His Sheristadar noted the fact that objection petition supported by an affidavit had been put in by opposite party No. 1 and then directed that the case be put up on 14th December in the presence of the pleaders 'for orders.' Petitioner's counsel evidently was not present when this order was written. His presence is not noted.

[4] On 14th December petitioner and his counsel were absent. Opposite party No. 1 only was present. The petition was dismissed under O. 9, R. 8, Civil P. C. On 25th February 1947, an aplication was put in on behalf of the petitioner for restoration of the proceedings. The petition does not show whether it was under O. 9, R. 9 or under O. 47, R. 1, Civil P. C. In the body of the petition the order of 14th December dismissing the petition in default was challenged on the ground that the petitioner was not bound to attend as there was no order from the Court for his appearance on that date. Besides this the petitioner alleged that there was sufficient cause for his non-appearance on that date, assuming that he was under an obligation to appear. The application for restoration was resisted.

application for restoration treated as one under o. 9, R. 9 could not succeed. It was put in more than 30 days after the order and therefore it was fime barred. He treated the petition as one under o. 47, R. 1 and found that there was sufficient cause for non appearance of the petitioner on 14th December. He also came to the conclusion that the order recorded by the Sheristadar on 23rd November was not binding on the petitioner and therefore he was not bound to attend on 14th December. On these findings he ordered the application to be restored. Opposite party No. 1 felt aggrieved by the order and has appealed to this Court.

[6] The learned counsel for the appellant contends that respondent's petition had been dismissed under O 9, R 8. Restoration was possible only under O. 9, B. 9 and O 47, R. 1 has absolutely no application to the facts of the case. He has relied on Mahadeo Gavind v. Lakshminarayan, 49 Bom. 839 : (A. I. R. (12) 1925 Bom. 521), in support of his contention. He has also urged that there was no valid ground for review and the Court below had no justification for considering whether there was sufficient cause for non-appearance on 14th December under O. 47, R. 1 as evidence bearing on this point could not be regarded as discovery of new and important matter or evidence within the meaning of O. 47, R. 1.

[7] The first contention raised by the learned counsel cannot prevail. It cannot be held as a general rule that an order purporting to have been passed under O. 9, R. 8 is not at all subject to review. No such proposition was laid down by their Lordships of the Bombay High Court in the case relied on by the learned counsel in support of his contention. In that case a suit was dismissed for plaintiff's default He applied for its restoration to the file. The application was made one day too late. This delay was excused by the trial Court which ordered the suit to be restored. When excusing the delay, the trial Judge observed that it was open to him to treat the application as one for review and there would be no difficulty about limitation in that case. The learned Judges of the High Court (Bombay) held that the application was barred by time under O. 9, R. 9 and an application for review was not comptent in view of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Chhajju Ram

v. Neki, 49 I. A. 144: 3 Lah. 127: (A. I. R. (9) 1922 P. C. 112) They observed that

"A plaintiff whose suit had been dismissed for want of appearance under O. 9, R 8 has no remedy by way of review, because the grounds on which a review can be granted are specified in O 47, R. 1. The words "any other sufficient reason" in sub s. (1) mean a reason sufficient on grounds at least analogous to those specified in the rule."

The cause for non-appearance could not be a sufficient reason within the meaning of O. 47, R. 1, nor could it be described as discovery of new and important matter or evidence or an error apparent on the face of the record. The order in that case was, therefore, held to be not open to review.

[8] This case is obviously distinguishable. The plaintiff was bound to appear and was admittedly absent. The order of dismissal of the suit for default was in these circumstances perfectly legal. Plaintiff could have the suit restored only on showing sufficient cause for his non-appearance. In the case before us the position is very different. On 23rd November the presiding officer of the Court was not present. His Sheristedar received objections from one of the opposite parties. The petitioner was not present. As the Judge was absent, was not bound to appear. The petition could not have been dismissed in default that day. The Sheristadar's direction that the case be put up on 14th December in the presence of parties' pleaders for orders, not being the order of the Judge, had no binding force. It had not been intimated! to the petitioner who was not admittedly present that day. He had no knowledge of the order and it was not binding on him. He was, evidently under no obligation to appear on 14th December when his petition was dismissed in default. The provisions of O. 9, R. 8 were, therefore, applied to the case under a misapprehension of the law or of facts or of both. In law there was no default at all as the petitioner was not bound to attend. It follows that the petition could not be dismissed for default.

[9] This view finds support from Hukum-chand v. Mani Shibrat Dass, A. I R. (21) 1934
Lah. 984: (155 I. C. 514) and also from Ghulam
Haidar v. Iqbal Nath. A. I. R. (23) 1936 Lah.
1000: (167 I. C. 520) In Ghulam Haidar v.
Iqbal Nath. A. I. R. (23) 1936 Lah. 1000: (167
I. C. 520), the order of the Reader had been signed by a Subordinate Judge who was not seized of the case. It was held that plaintiff was not bound to appear before the Judge when he fixed the next date of hearing and the suit, therefore, could not have been dismissed on his failure to appear on the next date.

[10] The learned counsel has not been able to show that the Sheristadar of the Court had any authority to adjourn the case to a future date in the absence of the Judge. No such power has been delegated to the Sheristadar under the Two things are, therefore, obvious. Plaintiff had no intimation that the case was to be put up for orders on 14th December. He was also not bound to appear on this date in the absence of any order from any competent authority. There was in these circumstances no default and O. 9, R. 8 had no application. Besides, it is also clear from the order of the Sheristadar that the case was to be put up in the presence of the parties' pleaders for orders of the Judge. The next date in the case viz., 14th December was therefore not for the hearing of the case. It was merely for taking orders of the Court. If the parties or any one of them did not appear on that date, another date should have been fixed and they should have been informed of this date. The Court should then have given orders as to the hearing of the matter in controversy or for taking such further steps that may have been considered necessary in the course of the proceed. ings. The order of dismissal of the petition in default, in these circumstances was illegal. Such an order may be reviewed if valid grounds for review exist. We have not been shown any authority against this view.

[11] The next question is whether there was any valid ground for the review of the order. It is obvious that the order was passed by some overeight. The learned Judge may not have noticed that the previous order was passed by his Sheristadar. He may not have realised that it had no binding force in law, as the order is petently illegal. The illegality may well be regarded as a mistake or error apparent on the face of the record.

390), it was held that :

"When there is a legal position clearly established by a well-known authority and by some unfortunate oversight the Judge has gone palpably wrong by the omission of those concerned to draw his attention to the authority, it may in a proper case be a ground coming within the category of an error apparent on the face of the record."

[18] In this case, the petitioner and his counsel were not present on 28rd November. The obvious legal course for the Judge was to intimate to them the next date when the case was to come up for hearing instead of dismissing it in default. This was not done. The omission was inadvertent and the order of dismissal wrong. The learned Judge had no difficulty in realising this mistake and hastened to set aside his order on review. Even if the error be not regarded as apparent, it will certainly be a sufficient reason for review for the ground is undoubtedly analogous to a mistake or error apparent on the face of the record. All that their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down in Chhajju Ram v. Neki, A. I. R. (9) 1922 P. C. 112: (3 Lah. 127) was that the expression "any other sufficient reason" should be interpreted as meaning a reason sufficient on grounds at least analogous to those specified in the Rule. One of the grounds on which review has been granted does certainly satisfy the requirements laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council. The learned Judge, therefore, was fully justified in reviewing his order.

[14] It must, however, be remarked that the learned Judge was not justified in considering whether there was sufficient cause for non-appearance after treating the petition for revival of the case as one for review. As held by their Lordships of the Bombay High Court in Mahadeo Govind v. Lakshminarayan, 49 Bom. 839:

(A. I. R. (12) 1925 Bom. 521), evidence bearing on the cause for non-appearance could not form a valid ground for review. The order could be reviewed only on the basis discussed above.

[15] An objection was raised in the memo of appeal that the petition which was treated as one for review of the previous order did not conform to the requirements of the Civil Procedure Code inasmuch as it was not accompanied by a copy of the previous order. This objection has not been pressed at the hearing.

[16] For the reasons given above, the appeal must fail and is dismissed with costs.

Public Order Act, 1947. The grounds of detention furnished to the detenu were stated in these terms:

'(a) That you are an active member of the Communist Party of India in Lakhimpur District, the present aim and object of which is anti-Government activity subversive of law and order.

(b) That you threatened public peace and tranquillity in Lakbimpur District by urging violent methods spe-

(c) That your activities, e. g., speeches at public meetings and demonstrations etc., are prejudicial to the public safety and the maintenance of public order in Lakhimpur District.

- (d) That you profess Communist ideology and have actively engaged yourself to put Communist directives into effect for a 'political struggle' by bringing a revo-
- [2] In holding that the grounds furnished were sufficient to enable the detenu to make a representation to the Provincial Government under S. 4 of the Act their Lordships observed as follows: In the beginning of this year, a Division Bench of this Court consisting of Lodge C. J. (retired) and myself, had occasion to deal with grounds similar to the grounds which have been communicated to the petitioner in this case. In our judgment in that case (Prafulla Ranjan Dhar v. The Government of Assam), we referred to the implications of the power of the Provincial Government to withhold facts which the Provincial Government considered as being against the public interest to disclose, and illustrated the implications of the power by an example. We do not wish to repeat what has been stated in that judgment. It is sufficient to say that the grounds (b) and (d) furnished to the petitioner are such as would have enabled the petitioner to make a representation to the Provincial Government.
- [3] We are satisfied that the order of the Provincial Government, on the face of it, is a valid order made under the provisions of S. 2 (1) (a) of Act V [5] of 1947. We see no reason, therefore, to interfere in the order of detention passed against the petitioner. In our view, the petitioner has not been illegally detained. The petition is accordingly dismissed and the Rule discharged.

Bireswar Banerjee and another—Appellants v. Sadhiram Atoi — Respondent.

Second Appeal No. 2111 of 1947, Decided on 22nd July 1949.

Limitation Act (1908), S. 16, Arts. 138, 144 — Symbolical possession given to auction-purchaser — Auction-purchaser's suit for possession is governed by Art. 144 — Section 16 and Art. 138 are not applicable.

Symbolical possession, if given, even when actual possession should have been given under the law will interrupt the running of time and give a fresh start of limitation as against the judgment-debtor and his representative. The same principle will apply to the case of a defaulting proprietor whose land is sold for recovery of land revenue. The auction-purchaser will be in a position to sue for possession on the basis of his title by purchase within 12 years of the delivery of possession to him if the defaulting proprietor remains in adverse possession. Section 16 and Art. 138 do not apply to such a case. Both these provisions apply to the case of a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree. They do not apply to the case of a plaintiff who has obtained possession, even though symbolical, in execution of his decree. The suit by the purchaser would be an ordinary suit for possession by the owner of the property whose title had become complete and effective by the confirmation of sale and delivery of symbolical possession. The proper article to apply to such a case would be Art. 144: A. I. R. (33) 1946 Pat. 202 and A. I. R. (8) 1921 Cal. 385, Rel. on; Case law [Paras 7, 12 and 13] referred.

M. N. Roy and J. C. Sen -for Appellants.

J. N. Borah - for Respondent.

Ram Labhaya J.—The facts leading to this appeal are these. Some land measuring 5 B. 3 K. 5 Ls. belonged to the defendant. The land was sold for recovery of arrears of land revenue. At the revenue auction sale, it was purchased by one Kunja Babu. He died. The plaintiffs are the executors under his will and are managing the estate. They instituted the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, originally for possession of 3 kathas situated towards the south-western side of the plots purchased at the auction sale by Kunja Babu.

[2] The defendant resisted the claim. He pleaded that the land in suit had not been purchased by Kunja Babu as alleged in the plaint. It was also contended that the suit was barred by limitation both under Arts. 142 and 144, Limitation Act.

- [3] A Survey Commissioner was sent for local investigation. He had to find out the exact area in possession of the defendant. He reported that he was in possession of 3 K. 1 L. and not 3 katha only as plaintiffs had alleged. During the course of this investigation, defendant claimed that he was also in possession of 2 vacant plots measuring 3 K. 8 Ls. adjoining the bustee land to which the suit related. These plots were also included in the land purchased by Kunja Babu at the auction sale.
- [4] In consequence of the Commissioner's report, the plaint had to be amended. The result of the amendent was that plaintiffs claimed 3 K. 1 L. of bustee land found to be in defendant's possession by the Survey Commissioner. They also included in the claim the two vacant plots measuring 3 K. 8 Ls. on the ground that defendant's claim to the possession of these vacant plots after the institution of their suit amounted to their ouster. The two vacant plots are shown in Sch. Ga attached to the amended plaint.

[5] The sale of the land auctioned, of which the lands in suit form part was confirmed on 24th January 1980. The possession was delivered to the auction purchaser on 6th February 1930. This possession was symbolical. The defendant instituted a civil suit on 9th January 1931 for having the revenue sale set aside. This suit went up to the High Court and was finally decided on 10th March 1942. The sale was not set aside. The present suit was instituted on 7th March 1945, more than 12 years after the delivery of possession to the auction purchaser, whose estate the plaintiffs represent. The plaintiffs claim that the sale, though confirmed on 24th January 1930, was subject to the result of the suit subsequently instituted by the defendant and the sale, therefore, became final on 10th March 1942, and plain. tiffs were entitled to a deduction of the time spent in the litigation which defendant commenced in 1931 and was terminated by the order of the Calcutta High Court on 10th March 1942.

(6) The learned Special Subordinate Judge, A. V. D. heard the suit. He found that symbolical possession had been delivered to the auction purchaser. Section 16, Limitation Act therefore could not apply to the case. Article 138, Limitation Act similarly had no application. Finding further that defendant had remained in continuous possession of the bustee land for over 12 years he dismissed plaintiffs' suit with respect to this portion of the claim' as barred by time under Art. 144, Limitation Act. Defendant's possession was held adverse from the day symbolical possession was delivered to the auction purchaser. As regards the two vacant plots described in sch. Ga, the finding was that defendant tried to take possession of these plots after the institution of the suit by the plaintiffs. This portion of the claim was, therefore, decreed. In coming to the conclusion that Art. 144, Limitation Act applied to the case and not Art. 188, the learned Judge relied on Brojendra Kumar v. Ashutosh Roy. 26 C. W. N. 864 : (A. I. R. (8) 1921 Cal. 385) and Bal Gobind Prasad v. Lila Kuer, A. J. R. (98) 1946 Pat. 202: (24 Pat. 717). This order of the trial Judge was affirmed in appeal. Plaintiffs' appeal with regard to the bustee lands and defendant's cross-objections as regards the two vacant plots were dismissed. Plaintiffs have again applealed to this Court so far as the busies lands are concerned, and defendant has put in cross-objection in respect of the vacant plots regarding which the suit has been decreed. Maria Court

Limitation Act. He has also claimed that the period of time taken by the suit instituted by the defendant should be excluded from computation under S. 16 of the Act. Both Art. 139 and 8. 16 of the Act do not apply in terms to this case. Article 138 covers suits by a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree when the judgmentdebtor was in possession at the date of sale. It allows a period of 12 years to be computed from the date on which the sale becomes absolute. If a suit is covered by this Article any period of time during which a proceeding to set aside a sale was being prosecuted is to be excluded when computing the period of limitation for the suit under S. 16. Both these provisions of the Limitation Act apply to the case of a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree. They do not apply to the case of a plaintiff who has obtained possession, even though symbolical, in execution of his decree. These provisions were interpreted in Bal Gobint Prasad v. Lila Kuer, A. I. R. (33) 1946 Pat. 202 : (24 Pat. 717). It was held that s. 16 could help an auction purchaser only when he had not obtained possession through Court. Where a plaintiff has obtained symbolical possession he cannot avail of the provisions contained in S. 16. Similarly, Art. 138 will have no application as the suit by such a plaintiff would not be by an auction-purchaser. It would be an ordinary suit for possession by the owner of the property whose title had become complete and effective by the confirmation of the sale and delivery of symbolical possession. It was further held that the possession of the judgment-debtor becomes adverse from the date of the delivery of symbolical possession and a suit against him, if brought more than 12 years after that date, would be barred by Art. 144.

[8] The same view was taken in Brojendra Kumar v. Ashutosh Roy. 26 C. W. N. 364: (A. I. R. (8) 1921 Cal. 385), where the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court held that after symbolical possession has been delivered. Art. 188 can have no application and that the proper article to apply to such a case would be Art. 144, Limitation Act.

[9] The two provisions of the Limitation Act considered in the Patna and Calcutta cases referred to above do not in terms apply to the present case as said above. They apply only to a suit for possession by a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree. The sale in this case was for recovery of arrears of land revenue under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation. In spite of this, the principle enunciated in the two cases was applied to sales for arrears of land revenue in Barkuntha Nath v. Sh. Azidulla, 82 C. W. N. 778: (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Cal. 870). It was held by a Division Bench of the Calcutta

High Court that a purchaser at a sale for arrears of revenue under S. 70, Assam Land and Revenue Regulation is entitled to sue the defaulting proprietors for recovery of possession within twelve years from the date of delivery of symbolical possession to him, and that the article of the Limitation Act applicable to such suits was either 142 or 144.

[10] The learned counsel for the plaintiffs does not dispute the correctness of this view. He, however, urges that these authorities are all distinguishable. The distinction pointed out is that though symbolical possession was delivered to the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiffs, the delivery of symbolical possession was not according to law. In this case the defaulting proprietor was in possession of at least a part of the property in suit. Actual possession of this property could have been delivered. Where the law requires that actual possession should be delivered, the delivery of symbolical possession has no legal effect and therefore the period of limitation would not start from the date on which symbolical possession was delivered. It would only commence when the sale became final. This, according to him, happened in 1942 when the defendant's suit for getting the sale annulled was finally dismissed. In support of his contention he has relied on Jang Bahadur Singh v. Hanumant Singh, 43 ALL. 520: (A. I. R. (8) 1921 ALL, 9 F. B.). A Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court held in the case that the delivery of possession in that case was not in the manner required by law and therefore the mere fact of formal delivery of possession was not available to the plaintiff for saving the operation of limitation. Another case relied on by him in this connexion is a decision from the Bombay High Court reported in Krishnaji v. Gajanan, 86 Bom. 373 : (2 I. C. 489).

[11] The learned counsel concedes that there is an acute divergence of judicial opinion on this point and there are authorities against this view authority against this view. The general trend of opinion seems to be that symolic possession, if given, even when actual possession should have been given under the law, will interrupt the running of time and give a fresh start of limitation. The ratio decidendi has been that delivery of possession through Court should give fresh starting point of limitation as against the judgment debtor who is a party to the proceedings, and is thus bound by it. According to this view, delivery of symbolical possession has the same effect in law as delivery of actual possession so far as the judgment debtor is concerned. This view has found favour with the High Courts of Calcutta: Bhulu Beg v. Jatindra Nath Sen, A. I. R. (10) 1923 Cal. 128: (77 I. C. 1035), Lahore Surja v. Mul Chand, A. I. R. (17) 1930 Lah. 823: (126 I. C. 526), Madras: Kamayya v. Mahalakshmi, A. I. R. (14) 1927 Mad. 849: (105 I. C. 248) and Patna: Udai Nath Sahi Deo v. Sunderbans Koer, A. I. R. (10) 1923 Pat. 76: (24 Cr. L. J. 279).

[13] The weight of authority and of reason both is on the side of this view and we are in respectful agreement with it. Symbolical possession if delivered under the Civil Procedure Code, even though erroneously, should operate as actual possession against the judgment-debtor and his representatives. The same principle will apply to the case of a defaulting proprietor. If symbolical possession has been delivered, it will be as effective against him as if actual possession had been delivered. There will be a fresh start for the period of limitation and the purchaser will be in a position to sue for possession on the basis of his title by purchase to sue within 12 years of the delivery of possession to him if the defaulting proprietor remains in adverse possession.

(14) The distinction pointed out by the learned counsel for the plaintiff, therefore, does not avail and plaintiff now cannot claim that he is suing merely as an auction purchaser. In that capacity he got his sale certificate and also the delivery of possession. He is now suing on the basis of his title and his case, therefore, would be covered either by Art. 142 or Art. 144 as held in Baikuntha Nath v. Sh. Azidulla, 32 C. W. N. 778: (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Cal. 870).

[15] In this view of the law, there will be no ground for interference with the orders of the Courts below. Defendant has admittedly continued in adverse possession from the date of the formal delivery of possession to the plaintiff so far as the bustee land is concerned. The suit, therefore, is time barred so far as this part of the claim is concerned. As regards the two vacant plots, it has been found concurrently by the Courts below that defendant tried to take possession of these plots after the institution of the suit. Plaintiff would be deemed to be in possession of these plots by reason of his title since the delivery of symbolical possession to him. His possession was disturbed after the institution of the suit according to the findings of the Courts below. His suit as regards this part would, therefore, be within time. The conclusion arrived at by the Courts below, therefore, is correct.

[16] We, therefore, dismiss both the appeal and the cross-objection. Parties shall bear their own costs in this Court.

Where a decree is joint and indivisible and one of the appellants dies but his legal representatives are not impleaded, the abatement will not be limited to the deceased appellant alone. The appeal would abate in its entirety as on account of the absence of necessary parties, appellants against whom a joint decree was passed, cannot get any relief. Order 41, R. 4 applies to a properly constituted appeal. Where necessary parties are not impleaded or where by reason of the failure to bring legal representatives of a deceased appellant or respondent, the appeal has become imperfectly constituted, O. 41, R. 4 cannot apply. O. 41, R. 4 does not qualify or override O. 22, R. 3: Case law referred.

Ram Labhaya J .- This appeal arises out of a suit for declaration. The case for the plaintiff was that some land, which had been acquired by the Government, belonged to him and was in his possession. The compensation for this land amounting to Rs. 874 8-0 was held to be payable to defendants 1 to 7. On the date of the suit, the amount was still lying in Court. He, therefore, prayed for a declaration that he was entitled to the amount of compensation for the land in question. The suit was resisted by the defendants. The Sadar Munsiff, Gauhati, decreed the claim. On appeal, the amount declared due to the plaintiff by the decree of the trial Court, was reduced. Defendants 1 to 7 have appealed to this Court.

[2] During the pendency of the appeal in this Court, Chandinath Deb one of the appeallants died. His legal representatives were not brought on the record within the time allowed by law. The appeal, therefore, automatically abated so far as the deceased was concerned. It is now contended by the learned counsel for the respondents that the appeal should be taken to have abated as a whole, as in the absence of legal representatives of the deceased appellant, the appeal is imperfectly constituted.

[3] It is clear from the plaint that the cause of action against the defendants was joint and indivisible. A declaration against all 7 defendants was prayed for. Till the date of the institution of the suit, defendants had not received, jointly or individually, any money from the Court. A joint declaration against all the defendants that the plaintiff was entitled to the whole of the amount claimed by them in acquisition proceedings was enough. Defendants resisted the suit on the same basis. The decree that was passed was joint and indivisible even though during the pendency of the suit the amount in question had been paid to the defendants. The decree passed by the lower appellate Court was also joint and indivisible. The modification was only in respect of the amount. Separate interest or the separate liability of different defendants was not indicated. The extent of their separate liability was never ascertained. It was not necessary for granting appellant the declaration sought for. It is not ascertainable now in the absence of any material on the record. Where a decree is joint and indivisible as in this case, one of the appellants dies and his legal representatives are not impleaded, the abatement will not be limited to the deceased appellant alone. The appeal would abate in its entirety as, on account of the absence of neces. sary parties, appellants against whom a joint decree was passed, cannot get any relief. Rule 3 of O. 22, Civil P. C., applies to appeals. By virtue of this rule, if one of two or more appellants dies and the right to sue does not survive to the surviving appellants or appellants alone and no application is made for substitution of legal representatives, the appeal abates so far as the deceased appellant is concerned. In this case, one of the appellants died. The right to sue did not survive to the surviving appellants. It was necessary, therefore, to implead the representatives of the deceased appellant. They have admittedly not been brought on the record. The consequence is that the appeal has abated; against him. The decree being joint and indivisible, the appeal is imperfectly constituted in the absence of the legal representatives of the deceased appellant who are necessary parties to the appeal. The surviving appellants alone cannot urge that the decree be set aside so far as they are concerned, or to the extent of their shares in the money in dispute. Their share is unascertained and is unascertainable. Beside, if such a contention were to succeed, there will be two conflicting decrees. In these circumstances, the abatement of the appeal would be entire and not parital.

[4] This view of the law finds ample support from authority, vide: Chunilal Tulsi Ram v. Aminchand, A. I. R. (20) 1933 Lah. 356 (2): (14 Lah. 548), Pir Bakhsh v. Kidar Nath, A. I. R. (22) 1935 Lah. 478: (155 I. O. 610), Rameshwar Singh v. Ramcharan, A. I. R. (19) 1932 Pat. 327: (11 Pat. 538), Ghulam Mohd. Syed Khan v. Sherdil Khan, A. I. R. (29) 1942 Sind 167: (I. L. R.

(1942) Kar. 435). In fact there is a general consensus of authority on the point that where a necessary party is not before the Court by reason of abatement, the suit or appeal as the case may be shall abate as a whole. The learned counsel for the appellants has not seriously questioned the correctness of this view. He has, however, tried to get over the difficulty by raising another contention. He argues that the decree against the appellants proceeds on a basis common to all and should be set aside under O. 41, R. 4, Civil P. C. The death of one the deceased appellant does not prevent the Court from taking action under O. 41, R. 4. The decree can be set aside in its entirety. There will be no question of conflicting decrees nor will it be necessary to ascertain the shares of different appellants. [5] There is considerable divergence of judicial authority on this point. We have given the question our careful consideration. We do not think that O. 22, R 3 is qualified by O. 41, R. 4. Rule 3 of O. 22 provides that in the case of a death of a plaintiff or appellant, the suit or appeal shall abate if his legal representatives are not brought on the record and the right does not survive to the surviving plaintiffs or appellants. The effect of abatement is that the suit or appeal so far as the deceased is concerned stands dismissed. The other side thereby secures a valuable right. In these circumstances, if acting under O. 41, R. 4 the Court sets aside the decree even against a deceased appellant, it is for all practical purposes, setting aside a decree which has become final by reason of the abatement of the appeal so far as the deceased appellant is concerned. This does not seem to have been comtemplated by O. 41, R. 4. The language of O. 41, R. 4 suggests that it can apply where plaintiffs or defendants are alive at the time when the decree of the appellate Court is passed. There is nothing in it which would support the view that the Court acting under this provision could set aside a decree which became final by abatement after it was passed. In such case, the Court would be granting relief to representatives who are not before it or to a dead person. It will also be depriving the other party of a right, which it has secured during the pendency of the appeal by reason of abatement, which undoubtedly would take place if legal representatives are not substituted. In fact, one may go further and state that O. 41, R. 4 applies to a properly constituted appeal. Where necessary parties are not impleaded or where by reason of the failure to bring legal representatives of a deceased appellant or respondent, the appeal has become imperfectly constituted, O. 41, B. 4 cannot apply. The case law on the point was fully reviewed in the Full Bench case reported in Ram Phal Sahu v. Satdeo Jha, A. I. R. (27) 1940 Pat. 346: (19 Pat. 870). It was held by the learned Judges constituting the Full Bench that by reason of provisions of Rr. 3 and 11 of O. 22, the appeal in so far as it concerns the deceased appellant abates and if the abatement is not set aside in course of time, the matter becomes final as against the deceased appellant. There is nothing in O. 41, R. 4 which permits the Court to disturb the finality of the decree as against the deceased appellant. The same view was taken by a Division Bench of the Sind Chief Court. Vide Ghulam Mohd. Syed Khan v. Sherdil Khan, A. I. R. (29) 1942 Sind 157: (I.L.R. (1942) Kar. 435). We are in respectful agreement with the view expressed in these cases and, following these authorities, hold that an appellate Court has no power to proceed with the hearing of an appeal and to reverse or vary the decree in favour of the plaintiffs or defendants under O. 41, R. 4, if all the plaintiffs or defendants appeal from the decree, and one of them dies and no substitution is effected within time. Order 41, R. 4 does not qualify or override O. 22, R. 8. A joint decree against all the defendants, there. fore, cannot be set aside at the instance of appellants who are alive, under O. 41, B. 4.

[6] In the view of the law that we take, this appeal abates in its entirety and is, therefore, dismissed. We shall leave the parties to bear their own costs in this Court.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit for specific performance of a contract of sale. The claim was decreed in the Courts below. The learned trial Judge directed defendants 6 and 7 to execute a sale deed in favour of the plaintiff after the balance of the money due from him had been deposited in Court. In appeal the learned Judge modified the decree of the trial Court and while decreeing plaintiff's claim to the specific performance of the contract of sale directed that on plaintiff's depositing the balance of the money due from him by the due date defendants 1, 2, 3 and 4 shall execute a deed of sale within a month of the deposit and withdraw the money, the question of adjustment of dues between defendants 1-4 and defendants 6-7 was left open. Three out of the defendants appealed from the decree. Jitram defendant 2 died during the pendency of the appeal. His legal representatives were not brought on the record within the period allowed by the law of limitation. His appeal has abated. An application for setting aside the abatement was made, but this was disallowed. It is not (sic) contended on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent that the appeal has abated in its entirety. It is clear that the decree was against defendants 1 to 4. It was joint and indivisible. It directed all the four defendants to execute a sale deed on plaintiff depositing the balance viz., Rs. 114-9-0. In these circumstances the appeal cannot be heard in the absence of one of the necessary parties to the appeal. Mr. Barua on behalf of the defendant-appellants contends that the decree is no doubt joint and indivisible but it is open to the Court under O. 41, R. 4 to set aside the decree as it proceeds on a ground common to all the defendants. The decree he urges could be reversed in favour of all the defendants at the instance of any one of them. The contention raised has been considered by a Division Bench of this Court in Aravinda Sarma v. Payodhar Barua, S. A. No. 941 of 1944 : (A.I.B. (37) 1950 Assam 53) It was held that O. 22, B. 3 was not qualified by O. 41, B. 4 which could only apply to a properly constituted appeal. Where one of the necessary parties to the appeal was not before the Court, the provisions of O. 41, R. 4 could not be invoked. This view was based on a Full Bench case from the Patra High Court reported in Ramphal Sahu v. Satdeo Jha, A. I. R. (27) 1940 Pat. 846: (19 Pat. 870 F. B.) and a Division Bench Court of the Sind Chief Court reported in Ghulam Mahomed v. Sher Din Khan, A. I. R. (29) 1942 Sind 157: (I. L. R. (1942) Ker. 485). The judgment in the case decided by this Court was delivered by me and I am still of the view taken in that case. Order 41, B. 4, therefore, does not avail the appellants.

[2] The learned counsel concedes that if the decree could not be set aside at the instance of appellants, who are alive, it being joint and indivisible, the abatement would be entire and total. In these circumstances I hold that the appeal has abated and is dismissed.

[3] I make no order as to costs in this Court.

A. A. D. No. 2080 of 1945, Decided on 8th April 1949.

Limitation Act (1908), Art. 142 — Plaintiff alleging permissive character of defendant's possession but failing to prove — Plaintiff in order to succeed has to prove title and possession within 12 years—Art. 142 applies—Defendant not required to prove adverse possession if plaintiff's subsisting title not proved.

A plaintiff out of possession cannot succeed in a suit for possession without proof of a subsisting title. It would not be enough to prove that plaintiff had title 15 or 20 years before suit. A subsisting title would involve proof of title in addition to possession within 12 years. If, therefore, a plaintiff bases his case on the permissive character of defendant's possession and fails to prove it, he may succeed if his title and possession within 12 years have been proved. It is only on proof of subsisting title that a defendant can be called upon to prove his adverse passession. It would not be necessary to go into the question of defendant's adverse possession if plaintiff has not proved his subsisting title in the suit property. Article 142 covers cases of actual and constructive possession and dispossession. A person can remain in possession of the property through a licensee or a tenant. He is not in actual possession but his possession in law is there. Such a person can certainly be dispossessed and his dispossession in such a case would occur immediately his title is repudiated. There is no reason why Art. 142 should not apply to such a case: A. I. R. (27) 1940 Mad. 798 (F. B.) and A. I. R. (22) 1935 Lah. 475 (F. B), Rel. on. [Paras 7 and 8]

D. N. Medhi and Bipin Behari Das

Ram Labhaya J. — This appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration of title and khas possession. Plaintiff purchased the land in dispute by a sale deed, Ex. 1, dated 30th July 1917. To the south and west of this land was Maheswar's land. Maheswar was the father-in-law of the defedant in the case.

[2] Plaintiff averred that defendant came into possession of the land by his permission some 5 years before suit on condition that he would vacate the land when plaintiff required it. Some three months before suit, a notice to quit was served on the defendant. He refused to quit setting up a title in himself.

(8) The defence was that defendant had acquired title by adverse possession against the true owner. He had entered the land without any arrangement with the plaintiff and in the belief that the land was Sarkari khas. The Sadar Munsiff of Gauhati held that plaintiff had failed to substantiate his pleas that defendant entered on the lands with his permission and was a licensee for a period of five years before suit, that he repudiated his title only when he was asked by notice to deliver possession of the land. He further held that in view of the allegations made in the plaint, it was for the plaintiff not only to prove title but his possession within 12 years before suit. This also he could not prove. The plea of the defendant that he bad been in adverse possession for over 12 years was also considered and the finding arrived at was in his favour. As a result of these findings, the suit was dismissed. On appeal the order was affirmed by the District Judge, A.V.D. Plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

[4] The learned counsel for the plaintiff contends that plaintiff could succeed on proof of his title without proving that defendant occupied the land as a licensee within 12 years of the suit, unless defendant could prove that his possession was adverse, for a period of 12 years. His grievance is that the Courts below have approached the case from a wrong view-point. The view taken by them was that the allegations in the plaint and the proved facts of the case attracted the application of Art. 142 and finding that plaintiff was not in possession within 12 years, they came to the conclusion that defendant's possession was adverse. He urged that whether plaintiff was in possession or not, he was undoubtedly the owner of the land. He purchased it by a registered deed in 1917 and defendant, even if in possession, could non-suit the plaintiff only on proof of his adverse possession. The correctness of the finding of the Courts below on the question of defendant's adverse possession was challenged.

[6] The decision of the case turns on the question whether Art. 142, Limitation Act governs the case or it is Art. 144. Article 144 is a residuary article and can be invoked only if no other article applies to the case. It is, therefore, to be seen whether Art. 142, on which reliance is placed by the defendant, has been rightly applied to this case by the Courts below.

[6] The question is by no means free from difficulty. There is divergence of judicial opinion on it. A Full Bench of the Madras High Court reported in Official Receiver of East Godavari v. Govinda Raju, A. I. R. (27) 1940 Mad. 798: (I. L. R (1940) Mad. 953 F. B), had to consider this question. Horwill J. before whom the case came up for disposal first, in his order of reference formulated the question in these words:

"Whether in a case where a plaintiff sets up a case of permissive possession and fails to prove it, the burden then lies upon the plaintiff to prove that he was in possession within 12 years of suit or whether the onus is upon the defendant to prove adverse possession for a period of 12 years."

It is clear from the question referred to the Full Bench that the question involved in that case was the same as in the case before us. The Full Bench, after a careful consideration of the matter and relying on three Privy Council cases, Mohima Chunder v. Mohesh Chunder, 16 Cal. 473: (16 I. A. 23 P. C); Mohd. Amanulla Khan v. Badan Singh, 17 Cal. 137 : (16 I. A. 148 P.C.) and Dharani Kanta v. Gabar Ali, 18 I. C. 17: (17 C. L. J. 277 P. C.) held that it was wrong to say that a person who could prove title in a suit for ejectment had the right to a decree unless defendant proved adverse possession for 12 years. The plaintiff could succeed only if he could say in addition to his title that he had been in possession of the property within 12 years of the suit. The burden lies upon the plaintiff to prove that he was in possession within 12 years of the suit. The onus is not upon the defendant to prove adverse possession for a period of 12 years. Two previous decisions of the Madras High Court were overruled.

[7] An unproved allegation that defendant was a tenant or say, a licensee was not considered sufficient to shift the onus to the defendant. The reason for the view is obvious. If a person, who is out of possession, can shift the burden of proving adverse possession to the defendant by simply alleging without being under any obligation to prove his allegation that defendant is a tenant or a licensee, the device would be resorted by all persons who are out of possession. A plaintiff out of possession cannot succeed in a suit for possession without proof of title. This title which he must prove is not title anterior to the suit. It would not be enough to prove that plaintiff had title say 15 or 20 years before suit. It should be a subsisting title. A subsisting title would involve proof of title in addition to possession within 12 years. If, therefore, a plaintiff bases the case on the permissive character of his defendants' possession and fails to prove it, he may succeed if his title and possession within 12 years have been proved. It is only on proof of subsisting title that a defendant can be called upon to prove his adverse possession. It would not be necessary to go into the question of defendant's adverse possession if plaintiff has not proved his subsisting title in the suit property. The view of the learned Judges of the Madras High Court is founded on three important pronouncements from their Lordships of the Privy Council and we are in respectful agreement with it.

[8] A Full Bench of the Lahore High Court also came to the same conclusion in Behari Lal v. Narain Das, A. I. R. (22) 1935 Lah. 475: (16 Lab. 442 F. B.). In that case, the plaintiffs sued for possession of the property alleging that they were the owners of the house in dispute and that they had given the same on lease to Nabi Bakhsh defendant 2 in 1927, and subsequently Nabi Bakhsh had given a sub-lease to defendant 1, that thereafter they had sued Nabi Bakhsh and defendant 1 for rent and defendant 1 had denied their title and also denied that he was a tenant under Nabi Bakhsh. In other words, the case of the plaintiffs was that the contesting defendant was a sub-tenant and he denied their title sometime before suit. On these facts, it was held that plaintiff's case was governed by Art. 142 and not Art. 144. The plaintiff's averments were held to imply a plea of possession and dispossession. It was not considered necessary that possession and dispossession be pleaded in express terms. Allegations of fact, from which that inference of possession and dispossession could be drawn, were considered enough for attracting the applicability of Art. 142. The view of the learned Judges was that when plaintiffs alleged that defendants were tenants, they were pleading their possession through the tenants and when they stated that their title was denied by those who were in permissive possession, the allegation amounted to a plea of dispossession. The reason for the view was that dispossession could be actual in the sense of existing actual possession being forcibly terminated by actual dispossession, and it could also be a legal constructive possession terminated by legal dispossession. In other words, it was held that Art. 142 covered cases of actual and constructive possession and dispossession. The result arrived at was the same as in the Full Bench case of the Madras High Court, though the process of reasoning is different. A person can remain in possession of the property through a licensee or a tenant. He is not in actual possession but his possession in law is there. Such a person can certainly be dispossessed and his dispossession in such a case would occur immediately his title is repudiated. There is no reason why Art. 142 should not apply to a case like this as held by the learned Judges of the Lahore High Court. In this view of the matter, the plaint in the present case would by necessary implication contain the allegations of possession and dispossession.

[9] Following the Full Bench decisions referred to above, we hold that on the pleadings and also on the proved facts of the case, Art. 142 applies to facts of this case and plaintiff could succeed only on proving that defendant was in permissive possession for about 5 years before suit as alleged by him or on proof of his possession within 12 years. There is no dispute that plaintiff acquired title to the property in 1917. But so far as possession within 12 years of the suit is concerned, the Courts below are clear and emphatic in their finding that this has not been proved. Defendant, it has been held, came in possession of the property more than 12 years before suit. He did not come in as a licensee. Plaintiff thus was not in possession at any time within 12 years before suit. The finding of the Courts below on the point is not open to question and it has not been seriously disputed. In these circumstances it is not necessary to consider whether defendant has succeeded in show. ing that his possession was adverse for a period of 12 years. That question does not arise and is not necessary for the disposal of the case.

[10] The appeal, in the circumstances, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Judgment. - On 17th February 1949, we remanded this appeal to the lower appellate Court to record its findings on the following two issues without taking any further evidence and to submit its findings within 4 weeks from the receipt of the records: (1) whether the plaintiffappellants were in possession of the property in suit within 12 years of the institution of the present suit ? (2) Whether the defendant-respondent, Bigaru, had perfected his title by reason of adverse possession for the statutory period? The finding on the first issue is that the plaintiffs-appellants were not in possession of the property in suit within 12 years of the institution of the suit.

[2] On the 2nd issue, the finding of the lower appellate Court is that the defendant—respondent has not perfected his title by adverse possession for the statutory period.

sion for the statutory period.

[3] The date of dispossession alleged in the plaint was 15th Magh 1349, B S. The lower appellate Court, however, did not accept the date of dispossession as given by the appellant. It held that the appellant was dispossessed or discontinued to be in possession in 1928 or 1929. The present suit was instituted in 1944. It appears that the appellants' advocate had urged before the lower appellate Court that assuming the appellants' possession was not actual physical possession, nevertheless such possession as they had was sufficient to take the suit out of the operation of Art. 142, Limitation Act. The lower appellate Court did not agree with this contention; it took the view that having regard to the nature of the lands in suit, the appellants were bound to prove actual possession by user and enjoyment.

[4] Mr. Borah who appeared for the appellants before us did not challenge the finding of the lower appellate Court on the first issue. His contention is that having regard to the fact that the plaintiffs sued for possession, basing their case upon title, the proper article applicable to the case was Art. 144, and not Art. 142, Limitatation Act, that the finding of the trial Court on Issue 2 being against the respondent, the appellants were entitled to a decree.

[6] In support of his contention, Mr. Borah has referred us to certain decisions reported in Kallan v. Mohammad Nadi Khan, 55 ALL. 209 : (A. I. R. (20) 1933 ALL. 775); Jauhair v. Tunday, 54 ALL 975 at p. 984: (A. I. R. (20) 1933 ALL. 21); Jonab Sheikh v. Surya Kant, 33 Oal. 821:(10 C.W.N. 1081); Protap Chandra v. Durga Charan, 9 C. W. N. 1061; Nageshwar Bux v. Bengal Coal Co, 85 C. W. N. 265: (A. I. R (18) 1931 P. C. 186) and Secy. of State v. Chelli Kani Rama Rao, 39 Mad. 617: (A. I. R. (3) 1916 P. C. 21), bearing upon the existence of conditions which attract the applicability of Art. 142 or 144. This aspect of the case has been epitomised by Rustomji in his Law of Limitation, Edn. 5, at p. 1403. The learned author says :

"On the supposed authority of Secretary of State v. Chellikani Rama Rao, 39 Mad. 617:(A. I. R. (3) 1916 P. C. 21) (which was a case falling definitely under Art. 144), it has been held in numerous cases that Art. 142 is confined to suits for possession based on a mere 'possessory title,' and that where the plaintiff sues for possession on the basis of his title (i.e. proprietary title) and on the ground of his possession baving been disturbed by the defendant, i.e., where he sues as an owner to dispossess a trespasser, the case comes within Art. 144, and accordingly that when plaintiff's title is admitted or proved, the onus lies on the defendant to establish adverse possession for the statutory period. But this view is based on a misapprehension of the true effect of the Privy Conneil decision in Secretary of State v. Chellikani Rama Rao, 39 Mad. 617: (A. I. R. (3) 1916 P. C 21). In the earlier Privy Council cases (where Art. 142 was admittedly applied), the suits were brought on the basis of plaintiff's title, and their Lordships pointed out that it is not enough for the plaintiff in an action of ejectment (falling under Art. 142) to establish his title or his possession at some remote time, but that it is es-ential for him to prove that he was in possession within 12 years antecedent to the suit. (vide Mohima Chunder v. Mohesh Chunder, 16 Cal. 473: (16 I. A. 23 P. C.), Md. Amanulla Khan v. Badan Singh, 17 Cal. 137: (16 I.A. 148 P.C.); and Dharani Kanta v. Gabar Al., 17 C. W. N. 389: (18 I. A. 17 P. C.).)"

"It is submitted that the later decision of the Privy Council in Secretary of State v. Chellikans Rama Rao, 39 Mad. 617: (A. I. R. (3) 1916 P. C. 21) is not in conflict with their Lordships' earlier pronouncements (vide Bhindhyachal v. Ramgharib. 57 All. 278: (A.I.R. (21) 1934 All. 993 F. B.)). Observations of the Indian High Courts founded on Secretary of State v. Chellikani Rama Rao, 39 Mad. 617 : (A. I. R. (3) 1916 P. C. 21)) that cases in which the plaintiff claims relief on the basis of his title, Art. 142 has no application, and that in all suits for possession of immovable property, as soon as plaintiff's title is either admitted or proved the burden of establishing adverse possession lies on or shifts to the defendant, or again that 'Art. 144 applies to all suits for possession based on plaintiff's title and to all cases where the plaintiff has proved his title,' are incautiously wide and apt to mislead. See Bhindhyachal v. Ramgharib 57 All. 278 (A. I. R (21) 1934 All. 993 F. B.). The correct view is that Art. 144 (being only a residuary article) cannot apply to cases of dispossession which come properly under Art. 142 (see Md. Amanulla Khan v. Badan Singh, 17 Cal. 137 at p. 143: (16 I. A. 148 P. C.) and that the application of Art. 142 is not excluded (in such cases, i. e. of dispossession) merely because the plaintiff is suing on the basis of his title. Indeed, as the Privy Council have repeatedly pointed out in cases decided under Art. 142, in all actions of ejectment, it lies upon the plaintiff to prove his own title. It lies upon the plaintiff to prove not only a title as again t the defendants to the possession, but to prove that the plaintiff had been dispossessed or had discontinued to be in possession of the lands within the 12 years immediately preceding the commencement of the suit (see Mohimachunder V. Mohesh Chunder, 16 Cal. 473 : (16 I. A. 23 P. C.)."

(6) In Premeswar Das v. Madhub Chandra, S. A. No. 2080 of 1945: (A. I. R. (37) 1950 Assam 55) this Court had occasion to deal with this aspect of the case. In our judgment, we relied upon the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council, to which we have referred, and to a decision of the Full Bench of the Lahore High Court, Bihari Lal v. Narain Das, A. I. R. (22) 1935 Lab. 475: (16 Lab. 442 F. B.). So far as the facts of the present case are concerned, there is the definite allegation made by the plaintiff in the plaint that he was dispossessed on a certain date. The lower appellate Court came to the conclusion that the appellant was dispossessed, not on the date alleged by him but some 15 or 16 years before the institution of the suit. As we understand the judgment of the lower appellate Court, it has come to the conclusion that the appellants were dispossessed not only of their physical possession but also constructive possession.

[7] In Bhindhyachal v. Ramgharib, 57 ALL. 278: A.I.R. (21) 1934 ALL. 993 F.B), the question referred to the Full Bench was:

"Where a plaintiff, who was a cosharer with some of the defendants who transferred a part of the property to third parties, admits in the plaint that he was dispossessed by the transferees some time prior to the institution of the suit, Art. 142 and not Art. 144, Limitation Act applies to the suit."

Sulaiman C. J. delivering the judgment of the Full Bench, observed:

"There are no words in this article which would confine its applicability to suits based on possessory title only, or confine it to plaintiffs who claim the property wholly and are not cosharers or co owners with the defendants." "The burden of proving the date of the dispossession or discontinuance of possession under Art. 142 must be on the plaintiff who, in order to succeed, must show that the dispossession or discontinuance of possession was not prior to twelve years before the suit was filed."

The learned Unief Justice, referring to a decision of the Allahabad High Court in Kanhaiya Lal v. Girwar, 51 ALL. 1042: (A.I.R. (16) 1929 ALL.

753) stated :

"In that case, no doubt the learned Judges expressed the opinion that this article is restricted to suits in which the relief for possession sought by the plaintiff is based on what may be styled as possessory title. In my opinion, there is no justification for limiting the scope of this article to such suits only."

[8] Sulaiman C. J. then referred to the earlier decisions of the Privy Council in Mohima Chunder v. Mohesh Chunder, 16 Oal. 473: (16 I. A. 23 P. C.) and Md. Amanulla Khan v. Badan Singh, 17 Oal. 187: (16 I. A. 148 P. C.) and remarked that the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported in these cases were not brought to the notice of the learned Judges who decided the case of Kanhaiya Lal v. Girwar, 51 ALL. 1042: (A. I. R. (16) 1929 ALL. 768), and referred to another case of the Allahabad High Court in Kallan v. Mahomed Nadi Khan, 65 ALL. 209: (A.I.R. (20) 1933 ALL. 775), observing that

"the learned Judges themselves emphasised the fact on p. 215 that in the plaint the plaintiff did not allege that the plaintiff, while in possession, was dispossessed."

[9] We ourselves think that where a plaintiff has been found to have been dispossessed or has discontinued possession on a certain date, the burden lies on him to prove that the suit was brought by him within 12 years of that date, and upon his failure to discharge the burden, his suit is liable to be dismissed by reason of Art. 142, Limitation Act.

[10] The lower appellate Court has held in this case that the appellants were dispossessed more than 12 years before the institution of the suit' In this view, we think the appellants' suit was rightly dismissed as being time barred under art. 142. Limitation Act. We accordingly confirm the judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court, dated 17th September 1946, and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Gopi Kanta Bhuiya — Appellant v. Kalikanta Bhattacharyya and others — Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 803 of 1947, Decided on 22nd July 1949.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 34, R. 7 (1) (c) (1) — Preliminary decree in redemption suit made final-R, morigagee, purchasing mortgaged property in execution - B, subsequent mortgagee of part of property, suing for redemption of R's mortgage -Preliminary decree passed — B depositing amount due to R as directed - Representatives of R, who died in meantime, executing release deed in favour of mortgagor - Deed stating that representatives had no rights left in property and that possession had been delivered to mortgagor - Deed produced in Court - Money deposited by B paid to representatives - Deed held reconveyed property to mortgagor and representatives of R could not claim tull ownership of property or equity of redemption.

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 34, R. 1 — Redemption suit against prior mortgagee — Puisne mortgagee impleaded but held to be not necessary party — Sale of property in favour of prior mortgagee — Rights of puisne mortgagee are not affected.

Where B the puisne mortgagee, was impleaded in the redemption suit against the prior mortgagee, but it was held that he was not a necessary party to the suit and he was again impleaded in execution proceedings and on his objection his name was struck off:

Held that the litigation culminating in the sale of the property in favour of the prior mortgages did not affect the rights of B as a subsequent mortgages.

Annotation : ('45-Com.) T. P. Act, S. 91, N. 2, Pt. 5.

(d) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 34, R. 8 — Redemption by act of parties — Absence of final decree does not affect its validity.

The absence of a formal final decree does not affect the validity of redemption by act of parties on which the Court has set its seal of approval. [Para 32] Annotation: ('44-Com.) Civil P. C., O. 34, R. 8, N. 3.

(e) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 43 - Prior mortgagee purchasing mortgaged property in execution of final decree in redemption suit — Puisne mortgagor suing for redemption of prior mortgage — Prior mortgagee ordered to reconvey property to mortgagor on deposit of redemption money by puisne mortgagee—Mortgagor executing sale deed of property before property was reconveyed to him—Subsequent acquisition of title by mortgagor — Purchaser held could enforce sale deed.

The prior mortgagee got the preliminary decree in a redemption suit against him made final and in execution himself purchased the mortgageed property. Thereafter the puisne mortgagee sued the mortgager and the prior mortgagee for redemption of the prior mortgage. The Court directed him to deposit the redemption money in Court and ordered the prior mortgagee to reconvey the mortgaged property to the mortgagor if the redemption money was deposited. The redemption money was accordingly deposited. Before the property was reconveyed to the mortgagor he executed a sale deed of the property:

Held that the purchaser could enforce the sale deed against the mortgagor by reason of his subsequent acquisition of title on equitable grounds. [Para 35] Annotation: ('45-Com.) T. P. Act, S. 43, N. 2.

S. R. Ghose, Bipin Behari Das and Chandi Ram Lahkar — for Appellant.

K. R. Barooah, R. K. Chaudhury and D. N. Medhi — for Respondents.

Ram Labhaya J.—The facts giving rise to this appeal are as follows:

Ls. of Nisf Kheraj Patta No. 5 was originally part of N. K. Patta No. 1 of Upparabarbhag mouza, Sonkani village of the 30 years settlement. The patta stood in the name of several co-sharers, One of these co-sharers was Bolodev, father of Kalikanta, defendant 6 in the present case. The share of Kalikant's father in Patta No. 1 came to about 26 B. 2 K. 18 Ls. Patta No. 1 was partitioned in partition Case No. 40 of 1928-29 and divided into three separate pattas. Kalikanta, whose father had died by that time, got a separate Patta No. 5 covering his share of the land, viz, 26 B. 2 K. 18 Ls.

[3] Kalikanta and his father had mortgaged 16 B. 2 K. 15 Ls. of land to Rabiram on 26th April 1922. Rabiram is the father of defendants 1, 2, husband of defendant 3 and brother of defendants 4, 5. The mortgage consideration was Rs. 600 and the mortgage was with possession. Some five years later, Kalikanta, defendant 6, mortgaged 6 B. 2 K. 4 Ls. to Bantiram on 4th Falgoon 1334 B. S. (1927) out of the land mortgaged to Rabiram. The consideration was Rs. 300. In 1929, Kalikanta instituted a redemption Suit No. 1569 of 1928 against Rabiram. Bantiram was also impleaded along with two other mortgagees with whom we are not concerned in this litigation. It was held that Bantiram and the two other mortgagees were not necessary parties. The suit was dismissed against them. It was decreed against Rahiram. Plaintiff was directed to deposit money due to Rahiram on his mortgage. He failed to deposit the money. Rahiram got the decree made final and in pursuance of the direction in the decree for sale of the mortgaged property got the property auctioned in execution and purchased it. Bantiram, who was not treated as a necessary party in this litigation, sued both Kalikanta, the original mortgagor and Rahiram, the auction purchaser, for the redemption of the property mortgaged to defendant Rahiram and also prayed in the alternative for a decree for the principal amount due to him in addition to some compensation which he claimed for being kept out of possession to which, he alleged, he was entitled under his mortgage. This suit was resisted by Kalikanta, the mortgagor and Rahiram, predecessor in interest of defendants 1-5. Kalikanta pleaded that plaintiff had no right to redeem as he had not paid the consideration for the mortgage in his favour. He also resisted the suit on other grounds with which we are not concerned.

[4] Rahiram's defence was that he was the first mortgagee and had purchased the property in execution of the final decree in the redemption suit. He thus became the full owner of the property and there was no mortgage in existence which Bantiram, as a puisne mortgagee, could redeem. It was pleaded inter alta that the suit was barred by limitation. [5] Mr. S. K. Das, the learned Sadar Munsiff, Gauhati, who heard the case, found that the claim for the principal money and compensation were both barred. The claim for principal was held barred by the provisions contained in order 2, R. 2, Civil P. C. He further found that the claim for the recovery of money was barred by time. On the main question in the case as to whether Bantiram was bound by the decree and sale in favour of Rahiram, he found in favour of Bantiram, He pointed out that the suit against Bantiram was dismissed on the ground that he was not a necessary party. Rahiram impleaded him in his execution application. On his objection his name was struck off. In these circumstances, he could not be regarded as a party to the proceedings which culminated in the sale of the property. He was not given any chance to assert or enforce his rights. He, therefore, was not bound by the decree or the sale. He referred to S. 101, T. P. Act in support of the view that the mortgage in favour of Rahiram could not merge in the equity of redemption and Bantiram, as subsequent mortgagee, could redeem the mortgage in favour of Rabiram. The plea that Bantiram as a usufructuary mortgagee could not redeem did not find favour with the learned Munsif. He thought that the mortgage in favour of Bantiram was an anomalous mortgage and held in view of the circumstances of the particular case that his right to redeem the prior mortgage was subsisting. As a result of his findings, he dismissed Bantiram's suit against Kalikanta but decreed it on contest as against Rabiram and directed him to pay into the Court a sum of Rs. 600 within six months from the date of the order and ordered further that on his paying into the Court the said amount, defendant 2 (Rahiram) shall retransfer at his cost and free from all encumbrances the entire mortgaged land to the original owner '(thereby affecting redemption of the mortgage property to him)'. The order dated 28th August 1941 was followed by a preliminary decree. The preliminary decree was in the usual form. It directed that on payment of the amount found due by the plaintiff defendant 2 (Rahiram) shall bring into Court all documents in his possession or power relating to the mortgaged property in the plaint mentioned, and all such documents shall be delivered over to the plaintiff or to such person as he appoints, and the defendant shall, if so required, reconvey or retransfer the said property free from the said mortgage and clear of and from all encumbrances created by the defendant or any person claiming under him or any person under whom he claims, from all liability whatsoever arising from the mortgage or this suit. It was further ordered that in default of payment, defendant could apply to the Court for a final decree that the plaintiff shall thenceforth stand absolutely debarred and foreclosed of and from all right to redeem the mortgaged property. No final decree was passed in the case.

[6] On 26th June 1942, heirs of Rahiram, defendant 2 in Bantiram's case, including two minors who were represented by their mother (the other representatives of Rahiram being his widow and two brothers) executed a Muktinama or "Release" in favour of Kalikanta. It referred to the suit instituted by Bantiram against Kalikanta and Rabiram and also to the fact that Bantiram got a redemption decree as a result of the said suit under which he had to pay Rs. 600 to Rahiram for redeeming the mortgage land, and Rahiram was, on this payment, to retransfer the mortgage property free from all encumbrances to Kalikanta. The executants admitted that Bantiram had deposited the amount of Rs. 600 in Court and they. as legal representatives and co-sharers of Rahiram, in consideration of the sum of Rs. 600 lying in deposit were executing the deed of release. They also stated that from that day they will cease to have any claim over the land mortgaged in favour of Rahiram. The deed contains a recital to the effect that the possession of the land has been delivered to Kalikanta.

[7] On 13th July, the deed of release was filed in Court. The learned Munsiff treating it as a deed of reconveyance by the heirs of Rahiram in favour of Kalikanta, defendant 1, ordered that the proceedings be closed and directed that the amount deposited be paid to the heirs of Rahiram. On 14th July 1942, the sum of Rs. 600 was withdrawn by the heirs of Rahiram through their pleader. On 28rd February 1942, before the release deed was executed. Kalikanta had sold the land now in dispute to Gopikanta, the plaintiff in the present case, for Rs. 1000.

[8] Plaintiff's case is that when the Court passed the redemption decree in favour of Bantiram, Kalikanta approached him and proposed to sell the land to him for Rs. 1000. He agreed to purchase it and according to the arrangement between them, out of the sale considera. tion, he deposited Rs. 600 for payment to the heirs of Rahiram. He also paid a sum of Rs. 300 to Bantiram. The two mortgagees on the property were thus redeemed. He paid the balance of Rs. 100 to Kalikanta and in consideration of these payments, the sale deed in his favour was executed. On the basis of the sale deed he tried to obtain a mutation. It was found in the course of the mutation proceedings that certain dag numbers mentioned in the sale deed in his favour did not appertain to patta 5 lands. The mutation attested in his favour was, therefore, only as an owner of unspecified land in patta 5. For the rest, he was directed to establish his title in the civil Court. In pursuance of this direction, plaintiff has sued for a declaration of his title to the land now in suit and also for the confirmation of his possession, which, he alleges, he got from the heirs of Rahiram when the mortgage in their favour was extinguished in terms of the order passed in Bantiram's case. Kalikanta, heirs of Rahiram and his co-sharers are the principal defendants in the case.

[9] The defence set up by the representatives of Rahiram was that plaintiff had no cause of action against them and that the sale deed in his favour had been obtained by fraud. They did not take any interest in the litigation after putting the written statement. They did not produce any evidence and the learned Judge observed that these defendants had no interest in the land and that must be the reason for their not taking part in the proceedings at the time of hearing. Kalikanta, defendant 6, was the really contesting defendant in the trial Court.

He resisted the suit by pleading that he had not sold 16 bighas of land to the plaintiff. He admitted having sold 5 B 4 K 10 Ls. out of the land in dispute to the plaintiff for a sum of Rs. 1000. He denied plaintiff's possession of the suit property, and claimed that he was in possession of the property.

[10] Six issues were framed in the case. We are not concerned with the first two issues at this stage. They relate to the form of the suit and its constitution. The rest of the issues are as follows:

(3) Whether the plaintiff has any cause of action against defendants 1 to 5?

(4) Whether the plaintiff had purchased 16 B. 2 K. 15 Ls. of lands from defendant 6 on 23rd February 1942 for Rs. 1000? If so, whether wrong dags of different pattas were recited in the deed and whether the plaintiff is in possession of the suit land?

(5) Whether the plaintiff is entitled to a decree to the extent of 16 B 2 K. 15 Ls. of N. K. Patta No. 5?

(6) What relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to? The finding on issue No. 3 was that defendants 1.5 had absolutely no interest in the suit land. They had taken no active part in defending the suit and in the opinion of the Court they should have been added as merely pro forma defendants. The Judge however recognised that the objection from defendant 1 to the mutation in plaintiff's favour was the real reason why they had to be impleaded as contesting defendants. The learned Judge was emphatic in his finding that Kalikanta bad sold the land in suit to the plaintiff for Rs. 1000 and certain wrong numbers were entered by some mistake. He was also clear in his finding that the entire land was in possession of Rabiram originally and after his death his beirs when executing the release deed delivered up posses. sion and that plaintiff was in possession as alleged by him. It is worthy of note that no evidence was led on behalf of the defendants 1.5 on the point that they were still in possession. Kalikanta claimed that he was in possession. He produced three witnesses. The testimony of these witnesses was not believed. As a result of these findings, the suit was decreed.

[11] Two separate appeals were preferred. One by defendants 1.2, representatives of Rahiram and the other by Kalikanta, the original mortgagor. These appeals were heard together. Three points were raised. It was urged first, that the trial Court had no pecuniary jurisdiction to hear the suit. The second contention raised was that Kalikanta had no saleable interest in the suit land on 23rd February, the date of the alleged sale to the plaintiff. Lastly, it was argued that Kalikanta had sold only 5 B. 4 K. 10 Ls. out of the land in suit. The learned Second Additional Judge, who had also heard suit No. 128 of 1940 and had passed the preliminary decree in that suit, overruled the objection as to the absence of jurisdiction in the trial Court. He agreed with the trial Court in the finding that the whole of the land in dispute was sold by Kalikanta to the plaintiff and not 5 bighas and odd as alleged by him. On the main point in controversy as to whether Kalikanta could sell the property on 23rd February 1942, he found that there was no deed of reconveyance in favour of Kalikanta as required by the terms of the preliminary decree on 23rd February 1942. Rahiram's title in the suit land was, therefore, intact and had not passed to defendant Kalikanta. He could not, therefore, convey any valid title to the plaintiff on the day he executed the sale deed in his favour. On the question of possession, he remarked that plaintiff's evidence appeared to him unsatisfactory and he was reluctant to believe that plaintiff had really taken possession of the land from the heirs of Rahiram.

[12] He also observed that the Sadar Munsiff was not quite correct in remarking that defendants 1.5, heirs of Rahiram, had not evinced any interest in the suit and were not having subsisting interest in the suit land. He, however, expressed the view that the defendants were not sufficiently diligent in defending the suit and practically allowed their case to go by default and created an unfavourable impression in the mind of the learned Munsiff about their earnestness. It is necessary to note that one other contention was raised before the learned Additional Judge. This was to the effect that the decree in the Title Suit No. 128 of 1940, was ineffective and had no effect on the rights of defendants 1-5 in the equity of redemption and that in any case the decree could not adversely affect the rights which they had in that part of the property which had not been mortgaged to Bantiram. This contention was given up at the hearing though it was pressed that as no final decree capable of execution was passed in Bantiram's Suit (No. 128 of 1940), Kalikanta could acquire no rights in the property under that decree. This view also seemed to find favour with the learned Judge. He allowed the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs in both the Courts. Plaintiff has appealed to this Court.

(13) His learned counsel Mr. Ghose has contended that the sale in execution of the decree in favour of Rahiram conferred no indefeasible title on him. His title was subject to the second mortgagee's right of redemption. On the exercise of this right the sale ceased to exist and the purchaser was driven back to his position as a mortgagee and could be redeemed as such. The second mortgagee could disregard the sale. He was not impleaded in the previous suit for sale and was not affected by the decree or the sale. If he redeemed the prior mortgageas he had the undoubted right to do—the equity of redemption would revert to the original owner. The first mortgagee, who became purchaser in execution of his decree by sale would be reduced to the position of a mortgagee. It is only then that he could be redeemed. If redemption of his mortgage was possible, the equity must go back to the original mortgagor. He argues, therefore, that the legal effect of the redemption decree in Bantiram's Suit No. 128 of 1940 was to revive the equity in Kalikanta. He further urges that as both the mortgages on the property had been redeemed, Kalikanta could validly transfer the property to the plaintiff. It was contended in the alternative that even if the equity of redemption could have been retained by Rabiram, it was not so retained. He did not offer to redeem Bantiram. He did not want to exercise the right of redeeming him which he had acquired by purchasing the property. He did not even oppose redemption of the entire property though Bantiram was a mortgagee of only a portion of the property mortgaged to to Rahiram. Rahiram might have claimed full ownership of the part of the property which was not mortgaged to Bantiram. Even this right was not availed of. The order directed that Bantiram should deposit Rs. 600 for redemption of Rahiram's mortgage and then the property be reconveyed to Kalikanta. In these circumstances, the order could only be for redemption in favour of Bantiram on payment of Rs. 600. The sum of Rs. 600 was deposited by Gopikanta, plaintiff, on behalf of Bantiram under an arrangement. Bantiram's mortgage money was also paid by the plaintiff. On deposit of Rs. 600, a deed des. cribed as a deed of release was executed by the representatives of Rabiram, who had died in the meanwhile, acknowledging the extinction of the mortgage and reconveying the property to Kalikanta by actual delivery of possession. It is claimed that the document executed by the representatives of Rahiram, (defendants 1 - 5) amounted to a deed of transfer. It was accepted by the Court as such. The property stood reconveyed and Kalikanta also could, therefore, transfer it to the plaintiff. There was no impediment in the way of Kalikanta transferring the property to him. It is argued that it is not open to defendants 1. 5 to claim or assert rights which Rahiram might have claimed before the redemption decree in Bantiram's suit, particularly in view of their compliance with the preliminary decree after it was passed.

[14] Respondent's case put before us is that as a result of the sale in his favour Rahiram became the full owner of the property. He was a mortgagee before. By his sale he acquired all the rights of the mortgagor also. But these rights did not merge; they remained distinct. Bantiram's suit was for redemption of the mortgage in favour of Rahiram. The redemption in pursuance of the decree did not affect the ownership of the equity of redemption. The judgment and the decree likewise could have no effect on it. The direction in the judgment that the property be conveyed to Kalikanta was illegal and not binding. The 'release' is explained as a document by which the mortgage in favour of Rabiram was redeemed and it is contended that even this does not affect or convey to Kalikanta the equity which vested in Rabiram. Kalikanta, therefore, was not in a position to convey the ownership to the plaintiff. It is also pointed out that Bantiram was a mortgagee of a part of the property only. He could not be allowed to redeem the whole. The decree could not cover the area beyond that which was mortgaged to Banti. He could redeem only that much. The judgment is charactersied as apparently illegal in this Court also. The upshot of the argument is that Rabiram's representatives (defendants 1-5) are still full owners of about 10 bighas of land and they are also owners of the equity of redemption of the remaining area. Kalikanta, therefore, had absolutely nothing to convey to the plaintiff. No separate argument was addressed to us on behalf of Kalikanta.

[15] There can be no manner of doubt as to what passed to Rahiram at the sale in execution of the decree passed in the redemption suit instituted by Kalikanta. The sale undoubtedly was of the mortgaged property. Rabiram, therefore, stepped into the shoes of the mortgagor. He purchased the property and was, therefore, its owner. The sale, however, was subject to the charge of Bantiram. He was a subsequent mortgagee of a part only. He could recover his money from the security that he had under his own mortgage. He could also redeem that part as by reason of the sale of the property to Rabiram, the first mortgagee, the security had become divisible. The last proviso to s. 60, T. P. Act permits redemption of a share of the property where a mortgagee has acquired in whole or in part the share of a mortgagor. Bantiram could redeem the whole only if the mortgagee did not resist such a move.

[16] Rabiram, the first mortgagee, resisted the redemption of the entire property on the basis that his own mortgage did not exist. He did not take up the more advantageous position that his mortgagee rights had not merged in the equity of redemption by reason of the sale in his favour. The position he took up was obviously untenable. The sale in his favour was subject to the right of Bantiram to redeem him or to recover the amount due to him from the sale of the property. His rights under his mortgage could not be adversely affected by the sale of the property in execution of the decree on the basis of a prior mortgage if he was not a party to the suit. As held in Udho Dass v. Gir. dhari Lal, A. I. R. (28) 1941 Lah. 96: 193 I. C. 656, a puisne mortgagee, who is not impleaded in a previous suit by the prior mortgagee, is entitled to disregard the decree and sale in the previous suit and to fall back on the original mortgage. This position is also recognised in Madhuram Hazarika v. Bhotong Chutiya, A. I. R. (12) 1925 Cal. 59: (86 I. C. 193). It has also been clearly brought out in Sailendra Nath v. Ama. rendra Nath, A. I. R. (28) 1941 Cal. 484: (I. L. R. (1941) 1 Cal. 514), where it laid down that:

"if a mortgagee leaves out a puisne mortgagee or a person interested in the equity of redemption and obtains a decree, the security is not merged in the decree and extinguished. If a sale takes place in execution of a decree in such a defectively constituted suit, the purchaser at a Court sale acquires the right of the mortgagee plaintiff and of the defendant purchaser provided that equity of redemption was not entirely unrepresented in that suit."

The rule so laid down is subject to the obvious condition that the decree and the sale do not affect the right of the puisne mortgagee to redeem the prior mortgage if he wished or to bring the property to sale by the enforcement of his own mortgage. When Rahiram purchased the property in execution of his decree on the mortgage, he purchased it subject to the rights of Bantiram that he had on the date of his decree on the basis of the mortgage in his own favour.

impleaded in the redemption suit by Kalikanta, but it was held that he was not a necessary party to the suit. He was again impleaded in execution proceedings and on his objection his name was struck off. In these circumstances it is agreed by counsel on both the sides that the litigation culminating in the sale of the property in favour of Rahiram did not affect the rights of Bantiram as a subsequent mortgagee.

[18] Bantiram's suit (No. 128 of 1940) was for redemption of the entire property as a puisne mortgagee. The Court came to the conclusion that plaintiff was entitled to redeem the property on payment of Rs. 600. He was directed to deposit Rs. 600 in Court. It was further ordered that Rabiram, the auction-purchaser in the previous suit, shall, on deposit of the amount by the plaintiff, transfer the property to Kalikanta the original mortgagor. Mr. Ghose states that the direction embodied in the order of the Court was in accordance with law. He argues that Bantiram had the undoubted right to redeem the prior mortgage. For him the decree and the sale had no existence. If he could redeem the mortgage, it must be in existence. For his purposes it had to be revived inspite of the previous sale of the property. When the mortgage was revived, the equity reverted to the original mortgagor notwithstanding the fact that Rahiram at the auction sale had purchased the property including the interest of the mortgagor. He relies in support of this contention on Dhana Koeri v. Ram Kewal Ahir, A. I. B. (17) 1930 Pat. 570: (10 Pat. 197). In that case property was first mortgaged to Barhamdeo Rai under a simple mortgage by the father of the plaintiffs. He then gave a usufructuary mortgage of the property to the father of the defendants in 1900. Barhamdeo sued upon his mort. gage and obtained a decree in execution of which he purchased the land. In this suit, the subsequent mortgagee was not impleaded. Barhamdeo failed to get possession in execution. In 1911, he sued the original mortgagor and the subsequent mortgagee. In that suit a decree was passed directing that defendant-mortgagee should redeem the plaintiff, the prior mortgages and if they fail to do so, the plaintiff (auction purchaser of the property) should redeem them. The defendant mortgagees redeemed Barhamdeo who had become the owner under the sale. The original mortgagor then instituted a suit against the usufructuary mortgagee for redeeming his mortgage on payment of the amount due on both the mortgages. The prior mortgagee Barhamdeo, it appears, was no party to the suit. The second mortgagee resisted the suit. The view taken by the Division Bench of the Patna High Court was that Barbamdeo in his suit had taken a stand on his mortgage and in the alternative on his equity of redemption. He was entitled to adopt this course by virtue of the sale in his favour. But when he was redeemed by the pusine mortgagee, the equity revived in favour of the original mortgagor for after accepting his dues under his mortgage he could not retain the equity of redemption. The second mortgagee, who redeemed him, could only be subrogated in his position as a mortgagee. The equity must go back to the mortgagor. It was held, therefore, that "the consequence of redemption by the usufructuary mortgage was that the mortgage was satisfied and therefore ipso facto the decree and the sale were vacated, and that equity came again into the hands of the original mortgagor because the second mortgagees paid only for the first mortgage."

[19] Mr. Ghose has also referred us to the Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court reported in Wahiunnissa v. Gobardhan Dass, 25 ALL. 383: (1903 A. W. N. 86 F. B.). The owners in that case were Habiban and Bina.

They mortgaged the property first to Kaim Ali Khan and others for Rs. 1500. Later on, one of the two mortgagors mortgaged 1/4th share of the same property to one Gobind Ram. The mortgages were simple. The first mortgages brought a suit for sale and obtained a decree. A judgment creditor of the decree-holders (Bangshi Dhar) got the decree attached and having put up the mortgaged property for sale, purchased it himself for Rs. 1050. He then sold it to Wabid-un-nissa and Jan Muhammad, They, in their turn, mortgaged it to Dungar Singh.

[20] Gobind Ram, the second mortgagee, brought a suit for sale on his mortgage and obtained a decree, in execution of which he sought to bring it to sale but was not permitted to do so by reason of the prior sale of the property. He thereupon assigned his decree to Gobardhan Das. This Gobardhan Das stepped into the shoes of second mortgegee. He then instituted a suit for redemption of the first mortgage on the ground that the puisne mortgagee whom he represented had not been made a party to the first suit. He prayed for redemption and possession of the property.

[21] After the institution of the suit, the first mortgagee who had realised only Rs. 1050 out of the mortgage through Banshidhar sold the residue of the mortgagee rights to Prasadi Lal. He was made a defendant in this case.

[22] Wahid-un-nissa and Jan Mahammad, the representatives of Banshidhar, the auctionpurchaser, were also defendants. It was held that the second mortgages was entitled to redeem the whole of the property on payment of the amount due to the first mortgagee. The dispute was as to how the money was to be distributed amongst the rival defendants. Wahid-un-nissa and Jan Mahammad, as representatives of the purchaser of the property in court sale, claimed the whole amount. This they could do only on the basis that the property vested in them. The transferee from the first mortgagee's (Parsadi Lal) claimed that he was entitled to the whole amount less than Rs. 1050 to which Wahid-unnissa and Jan Muhammad were entitled as representatatives of Bansbidbar (auction-purchaser). It was contended on behalf of Parsadi Lal that "the auction-purchaser was under the circumstances only entitled to hold up the first mortgage, to satisfy which the sale took place, as a shield; that the measure of the shield was the amount due on the first mortgage; but that in no event could the amount recoverable by him or his assignees exceed the sum which he had actually paid for the property."

This contention prevailed and it was held that Parsadi Lal, the representative of the first mortgagee, was entitled to the whole amount which was payable on redemption with the exception of the sum of Rs. 1050 paid by Banshidbar at the auction sale. Banshidhar's representatives were found entitled only to this sum.

[23] Dealing with the rights of the auction-purchaser, Blair, J. observed

"that Banshidhar had notice, actual or constructive, that he was purchasing a defeasible title must be taken for granted. He must be taken to have known that the sale at which he bought was voidable at the will of the second mortgagee, who had only to redeem the first mortgage to enable him to put up the property for sale in satisfaction of both incumbrances. As against the second mortgagee he had acquired absolutely no title. However, the second mortgagee has redeemed the first mortgage, and has totally nullified the purchase by Banshidhar and all devolutions which derive from him."

On these observations Mr. Ghose relies for showing that on redemption of the first mortgage by the second mortgagee, who was not a party to the suit for sale on the mortgage, the sale in execution of the decree on the first mortgage is totally nullified and the purchaser, if he is the first mortgagee, is reduced to the position of the mortgagee which he occupied before the sale. He cannot retain his rights under the sale.

[24] A reference was, however, made in this case to the right of the auction-purchaser to pay off the puisne mortgagee who was seeking to redeem the first mortgage. But it was held that the representatives of the auction-purchaser (Wahid-un-nissa and another) had not chosen to exercise the right and had insisted on the puisne mortgagee redeeming the previous mortgage. They were, therefore, held entitled to a sum of Rs. 1050, the price on which the property was sold, and not the entire mortgage money as owners of the right or the equity of redemption.

[26] The learned counsel for the respondent has questioned the correctness of this view. He contends that on redemption by a puisne mortgages the sale would not be nullified. The mortgages who purchased the property in a court sale without impleading the puisne mortgagee acquired the property subject to the rights of the puisne mortgagee. On purchasing the property he retains his right as a mortgagee and acquires the mortgagor's interest also. The two rights do not merge. They remain distinct in this interest. If the puisne mortgagee redeems, the purchaser can still retain his rights as a mortgagor and the equity does not revert to the original mortgagor. It remains yested in the purchaser of the property. He relies on Delhi and London Bank, Ltd. v. Bhikari Das, 24 ALL. 185: (1902 A. W. N. 7).

[27] In this case one Suraj Mal was the mortgagor. He borrowed Rs. 12,000 from the appellant Bank and executed a deed of mortgage of his property in favour of the Bank. The Bank obtained a decree for sale on the foot of the mortgage. In execution the Bank purchased the property.

[28] The property mortgaged to the Bank with some other property had been mortgaged to one Narain Das before the mortgage in favour of the Bank came into existence. The prior mortgagee was no party to the suit instituted by the Bank. The representatives of Narain Das, the first mortgagee, also instituted a suit on their mortgage and obtained a decree in execution of which they purchased the property and got possession. The Bank was no party to this suit.

[29] The bank, as a puisne mortgagee, instituted a second suit for a declaration that defendants acquired no right to the property under their purchase and in the alternative for redemption. The Subordinate Judge passed a decree in favour of the Bank and directed that on payment of the sums specified the Bank should have proprietary possession of the property included in their mortgage (by reason of their purchase) and possession as mortgagee of the property which was not included in that mortgage. The Bank felt dissatisfied with this decree and appealed on the ground that it was redeeming a mortgagee who had become by purchase and on redemption was entitled to step into his shoes in regard to the whole of the property. The contention did not prevail. The Bank's appeal was dismissed. In disposing of the appeal, the learned Judge observed:

"The sale in favour of the first mortgagees was undoubtedly not binding upon the puisne mortgagee, inasmuch as the Bank was not impleaded as required by the provisions of S. 85, T. P. Act. This being so, the Bank retained its ordinary right as a puisne mortgagee to redeem the property. Having elected to redeem the property and having paid off the prior mortgagee's claim, the Bank undoubtedly acquired under S. 74 of the Act to which we have referred, all the rights and powers of the first mortgagees; but in the words of the section, 'as such', i. e. "mortgagees". But the section does not give the Bank any right or interest which the first mortgagers may have acquired otherwise than as such mortgagees. This, it appears to us, left outstanding the equity of redemption in the property which was not included in the Bank's mortgage. The mortgagor's equity of redemption either passed to the first mortgagees under the sale made to them or it did not. If it did pass to them, they acquired it at the auction sale held in execution of their decree, as purchasers and not as mortgagees. If it did not pass to them, the equity of redemption remains outstanding in the mortgagor who has not been made a party to this suit... We, therefore, hold that the contention of the Bank in this respect is not well founded."

[30] The question whether the equity of redemption for the part of the property which was not covered by the Bank's mortgage vested in the mortgagor or in the purchaser at the court sale was not decided. As the Bank could not claim the equity of redemption, the appeal failed. As between the mortgagor and the purchaser, the matter was left undecided. The effect of the decision was that Bank's purchase of the property covered by its mortgage which was subject to the right of redemption of a puisne mortgagee was perfected by redemption of the prior mortgage. For the rest of the property redeemed, the Bank was held to be a mortgagee only. The question dealt with and disposed of in the Patna case, (A. I. R. (17) 1930 Pat. 570) was left open in this case as it was not necessary for the disposal of the appeal by the Bank. The case, therefore, decides nothing which is in conflict with the Patna case, (A. I. R. (17) 1930 Pat. 570) which has both reason and equity on its side. The learned counsel has not been able to cite any other apt authority on this point. In these circumstances, if it had been necessary for us to decide this question, we would unhesitatingly follow the view of the law asexpressed in the Patna case, (A. I. B. (17) 1930 Pat. 570). From the facts of this case it is however clear to us that Rahiram's representatives have no subsisting interest in the property. It was duly reconveyed to Kalikanta who has in turn transferred to the plaintiff.

[31] It may be recalled that in Bantiram's suit for redemption (No. 128 of 1940) the Court ordered redemption on payment of Rs. 600. In this suit Kalikanta, the mortgagor and Rabiram, the purchaser of the property in execution of hisdecree for sale were both parties. All the equities in the case, therefore, could be adjusted. They were the only persons who had interest in the property. Rahiram resisted the suit on the ground that he was the full owner by reason of his purchase. His mortgage had merged in the ownership rights. This position had no support in law. This puisne mortgagee was not a party to his suit and could surely redeem his mortgage. But the learned counsel for the respondent contends that Bantiram could redeem only that part of the property which was covered by his mortgage, and even with regard to that Rahiram's right to redeem him could have remained. As the entire property was allowed to be redeemed he claims that this redemption did not destroy his rights in the equity of redemption. He relies on Madhuram v. Bhotony, A. I. R. (12) 1925 Cal. 59: (86 I. C. 193) in support of this proposition. In this case it was held that a puisne mortgagee, not being a party to a suit for sale in which the property was purchased at a court sale by the prior mortgages, should be allowed to redeem that part of the property which is covered by his mortgage as, if he is allowed to redeem the whole, he would be in turn redeemable as regards the part not mortgaged to him by the auction purchaser. Bahiram may have taken this stand which defendants in this Calcutta case did. He may have resisted the redemption of the entire property. By doing so he would have asserted his rights and title to the equity of redemption. He was, however, ill advised and did not avail of the opportunity that the suit offered him. Iustead of contending that the mortgagee rights and the equity of redemption had not merged as the learned counsel for his representatives is now contending, he asserted that there was a complete merger of the two rights which had resulted in the extinction of his own mortgage. The result was that Bantiram was allowed to redeem the prior mortgagee. He allowed by his act or omission a redemption decree to be passed against him. The order in the case required Bantiram to deposit Rs. 600 for Rahiram. On this deposit being made, Rabiram was to convey the property to Kalikanta, the original moregagor. The sum of Rs. 600 was deposited in the Court by Gopikanta, the plaintiff in the present suit, under an arrangement with Kalikanta. Rahiram became liable to reconvey the property. This order was acquiesced in and complied with by the representatives of Rahiram. They appear to have taken for granted that the decree was in accordance with the order. These representatives, his two minor sons, a widow and two brothers executed what the party described as a deed of release. The minors were represented by their mother. In this the preliminary decree was referred to and the substance of the order of the Court which preceded the preliminary decree was reproduced and in consideration of the deposit of Rs. 600 in Court on behalf of Bantiram, the defendants (the representatives of Bahiram) acknowledge that the mortgage in their favour was discharged and that they had no rights left in the property. It was further expressly stated that the possession of the property had been delivered to Kalikanta to whom the property was to be conveyed according to the order of the Court. This deed was executed on 27th June 1942. It was produced in the Court on 13th July 1942, and it was ordered that as the deed of reconveyance had been executed and registered as required by law the proceeding be closed and the amount (Rs. 600) be refunded to the heirs of Rahiram. The amount was actually withdrawn on 14th July 1942, on their behalf by their counsel. It is clear that what the parties describe as a deed of release was accepted by the Court as a deed of reconveyance by its order dated 13th July 1942. It is immaterial what name the parties gave to the document. All that the Court had to see was whether the extinction of the mortgage and retransfer of the property to the mortgagor were evidenced by a document which could command acceptance in law. The Court passing the preliminary decree was satisfied that the document fulfilled the requirements of the law and we find ourselves unable to hold that this document is lacking in any essential attributes which derogate from its quality as a deed of retransfer. It clearly states that the executants of the deed had no right left in the property and that they had delivered possession to Kalikanta. The property was thus transferred by delivery of possession to Kalikanta without reservation of any rights. The learned counsel for the respondent has urged that the document merely evidenced extinction of the mortgage and there is nothing in it to indicate that the equity of redemption was transferred back to Kalikanta. We do not think there is any force in this contention. If the transfer had been to Bantiram, it could have contended with some show of reason that the equity remained with the executant of the document. The deed was in favour of Kalikanta who, according to the learned counsel, had no right in the property. The transfer of the property to him could be made only on the basis that his equity had revived. After transferring the property to him with a clear statement that they had no right left in it, they cannot now claim that they are its owners still as against him. The document executed by them was an effort on the part of the parties concerned to comply with the terms of the order of the Court in suit No. 128 of 1940. This order by allowing the redemption to the plaintiff nullified the sale in favour of Rahiram, which could have been saved by redemption of Bantiram's mortgage. The compliance with the decree received the approval of the Court which was embodied in its order dated 18th July 1942. The result was that no necessity was left for a final decree in the case. The mortgage stood redeem. ed and the property was transferred to Kalikanta. Bantiram was himself redeemed under the same arrangement under which plaintiff deposited the money for Rahiram. Both the mortgagees having been redeemed Kalikanta got back the property free from all incumbrances and became its full owner. The binding effect of this document is not challenged. According to this document, defendants 1-5 had no rights left in the property. The document does not bear the construction which the learned counsel for the defendants seeks to put on it. In the face of the document it is not open to the defendants to urge that they are still full owners of a part of the property or they still have the equity of redemption of the whole nor can they contend that the order of the Court was illegal. The terms of the document offer a complete answer to the defendants' contention.

[32] The absence of a formal final decree does not affect the validity of redemption by act of parties on which the Court has set its seal of approval. It has already been held that the requirements of the law so far as redemption of Rahiram's mortgage is concerned have been fully satisfied by the document described, as a deed of release by the parties and a reconveyance by the Court.

[38] In this suit defendants 1-5 apparently were not contesting the suit in the trial Court. Their attitude was one of indifference. Their main plea was that there was no cause of action against them. They did not explain as to what they meant by it. Their subsequent conduct indicates that all that they meant was that they had no interest in the property and, therefore, should not have been dragged into this litigation. They produced no evidence at all. They did not claim that they were in possession or had reserved their rights in the equity of redemption. They allowed the suit to be decreed practically in default. The observations made about them by the learned trial Judge, therefore, are fully justified. It is obvious that they did not contest the suit on the ground that they were the full owners of the property as against the plaintiff. The suit was resisted by Kalikanta on the ground that he had not sold the whole of the property to the plaintiff and that he was in possession and not the plaintiff. This was the only important point which the trial Court had to decide. Two appeals were preferred, one by Kalikanta and the other on behalf of defendants 1 and 2. The three adult representatives of Rahiram did not join this appeal. It appears that the minors were selected on purpose. But no objection had been raised on behalf of these minors in the trial Court that they were not bound by the deed of release executed in favour of Kalikanta on 27th June 1942. No such plea was raised. It was nobody's case that the minors were not properly represented in this litigation. Even in appeal the deed of release was not being challen. ged on the ground that the guardian had no authority to execute it on their behalf or that it was not in their interest. The plea urged, as is shown above, was that in spite of the 'release' they still are the owners of the equity of redemption. Emphasis was laid on the fact that the release did not amount to a conveyance of the property to the mortgagor and thus Rahiram's representatives were still the owners of the property. This contention has been examined and we have come to the conclusion that the document fulfilled the requirement of a deed of reconveyance. The claim that the redemption of the mortgage did not affect the equity of redemption which could remain distinct from the mortgagee rights raised before the lower appellate Court was definitely abandoned. Before us this contention is taken up again. It will be observed that this plea is opposed to the position that Rahiram adopted in the previous litigation. He himself was then pleading merger. It was not raised in trial Court, mentioned but abandoned in appeal. The defendants are thus playing fast and loose, approbating and reprobating.

[33] The plea in these circumstances may not have been allowed but since a very elaborate and prolonged argument centering round this point was heard, it has been fully dealt with above. The conduct of these defendants in this litigation fully supports the conclusion arrived at above that after allowing redemption of the property they agreed to the situation that they had no more rights in the property. Whatever legal rights they had, were lost by their own act when they reconveyed the property free from all incumbrances to Kalikanta.

[34] The learned Additional Judge observed when discussing the question of possession that plaintiff's evidence on the point seemed very unsatisfactory. He, therefore, felt reluctant to believe that plaintiff had taken possession of the suit land from the heirs of Rahiram. This find. ing is absolutely unsustainable. Rahiram's representatives had not claimed that they were in possession. They had given no evidence at the trial that they were in possession. According to the deed of release it had been handed over to Kalikanta. It could have been in possession either of Kalikanta or of the plaintiff. The learn. ed Judge could not find that Kalikanta was in possession. He has not referred to Kalikanta's evidence at all. This was not relied on by the trial Court. Plaintiff alone could have been in possession in these circumstances. The conclusion arrived at by the learned Judge on this point is opposed to the evidence on the record and is wholly unsustainable.

[35] It is true that Kalikanta executed the deed of sale in favour of the plaintiff before the deed of release was executed. On the date that he actually executed the sale deed the property had not been transferred to him by the representatives of the mortgagee though redemption money had been deposited. But plaintiff's title has not been questioned on this technical ground before us. Even if it is assumed that Kalikanta had not acquired title till then, plaintiff can enforce the sale deed as against Kalikanta by the reason of his subsequent acquisition of title on equitable grounds.

[36] In these circumstances this appeal must be allowed. The order of the learned Additional Judge is reversed and that of the trial Court restored. The plaintiff's suit is decreed with costs throughout.

Badrinarain Kanu and others—Appellants v. Maisan Manipurini—Respondent.

Second Appeals Nos. 1615 and 1654 of 1945, Decided on 27th April 1949.

Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (1886), S. 59 (1) - Plaintiff suing for rent before getting himself registered—Case should be suspended and plaintiff ordered to get himself registered—On registration taking place decree can be passed.

A strict construction of the language of S. 59 may be avoided on the ground that it leads to hardship and inconvenience, which the Legislature could not have intended. But where the plaintiff institutes a suit for rent before getting himself registered, it is certainly not necessary to pass a decree before the requisite qualification enabling the plaintiff to demand and recover rent has actually been acquired. The proceedings in the case can be suspended and plaintiff ordered to satisfy the Court that he has got himself registered. For this purpose a reasonable period of time can be allowed. On his satisfying the Court that necessary registration has taken place, the bar to his claim would disappear and decree can be granted to him. This is a better course than a conditional decree directing the plaintiff not to execute the decree till he gets himself registered: 23 Cal. 87 (F. B.), Rel. on. [Para 8]

K. P. Bhattacharjee - for Appellants. N. M. Dam - for Respondent.

Judgment. - This judgment will cover the two appeals Nos. 1615 and 1654 of 1945.

[2] This appeal arises out of two rent suits instituted by Maisan Manipurini, plaintiff, against two separate sets of defendants. The holdings in the two suits belonged to her deceased husband. He got them under a gift from his maternal grandfather. The defendants in the two cases were settled by him in the year 1986. The annual rent fixed in each case was Rs. 20. The rent for year 1347-1349 B. S. was paid by the tenants. Plaintiff, as heir of her deceased husband, instituted the suits for recovery of rent. She also claimed compensation at the rate of 25 per cent. The amount claimed in each case is Rs. 75.

[3] The defendants resisted the suit on several grounds but it is not necessary to state them. The trial Judge found that the amount claimed was due to the plaintiff. The holdings in the suit were let out for residential purposes and were in fact being used as shops. They are situate in the heart of the Kalacherra bazar, and are not agricultural holdings. The contention of the defendants that plaintiff is not entitled to recover more than five times the land revenue for the holdings was negatived on this finding. The plea of the defendants that S. 59 (1), Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, 1886, was a bar to the passing of any decree in favour of the plaintiffs succeeded only partially. The learned Mun. siff held that a conditional decree could be passed, which plaintiff will not be entitled to execute unless she got her name registered as a landholder under Oh. IV of the Regulation.

[5] The learned counsel for the appellants has contended that the holdings are really agricultural and therefore plaintiff cannot recover more than five times the land revenue. In support of this contention, he has referred me to Ex. C, a certified copy of the record of rights of 1916-17 showing that dag 631 was then described as arable land. Dag 632 had residential houses. Dag 633 was shown as waste land. His conten. tion is that the holdings now in suit are contiguous to agricultural land and therefore are a part of it.

[6] The contention is not borne out by the document on which he relies. The record of right was prepared in 1916-1917. The defendants were settled on the holdings in 1935. The holdings are admittedly used for residential or shop purposes. There is nothing to show that defendants are tenants of any agricultural land contiguous to these holdings. Settlements on defendants were made for purposes other than agricultural. The Courts below have found concurrently in favour of the plaintiff on this point and I see no reason for differing from the conclusion arrived at by them. The learned counsel concedes that if the holdings are not held to be agricultural, the stipulated rent would be payable as found by the Courts below.

[7] The second contention rests on the langnage of S. 59 (1), Assam Land and Revenue Regulation. It provides that no tenant shall be bound to pay rent to any person who has no been registered as a landholder, proprietor, manager or mortgagee under Chap. IV of the said Regulation. The plaintiff, in this case, instituted the suit before getting herself registered as required by the Regulation. The question that arises is whether any decree can be passed in her favour in the suit. The learned counsel for the appellant urges that the suits are liable to dismissal as defendants were under no legal obligation to pay to the plaintiff on the date the suits were instituted. This question came before a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court reported in Alimuddin Khan v. Hira Lal Sen, 23 Cal. 87 (F. B.). A provision (S. 78) almost in the same terms exists in the Land Registration Act, Calcutta (Bengal Act VII [7] of 1876). The plaintiff in the Full Bench case, without getting himself registered as required by the Act 1 (sic.), instituted the suit for recovery of rent. He, however, produced the certificate of registration after the institution of the suit. The learned Judges composing the Full Bench were divided in their opinion. Two of the learned Judges including the learned Chief Justice were of the view that plaintiff could not demand or receive rent on the date of the suit as there was no obligation on the tenant to pay to him. There was thus no cause of action on the date of the suit. This defect was fatal to the suit and it could not be cured by the subsequent production of a certificate or other evidence showing that plaintiff had got himself registered as required by the Act. The majority of the learned Judges, however, were of the view that there was ample justification for preferring an alternative construction by which the object of the Legislature in insisting on registration before a person entitled to recover rent could demand and receive it could be achieved and the complications arising from a very strict interpretation of the section also avoided. They pointed out that if it insisted that a landlord suing to recover rent must get himself registered before instituting the suit, he may lose his right to recover rent in certain cases. If, on the other hand, the omission to get himself registered is not regarded as fatal to the suit and he is allowed to show to the Court before the decree is passed that he has acquired the requisite qualification by getting himself registered, that difficulty can be avoided. The real purpose of the provision insisting on registration can also be achieved. Such a construction they held had the merit of avoiding anomalous and inconvenient results. Holding it to be a permissible construction, the majority of the learned Judges held that the suit was not liable to dismissal. I find myself in respectful agreement with this view.

quired till the decree stage. The trial Judge held that the difficulty could be obviated by the direction that plaintiff shall not execute the decrees in the two cases till she got the requisite qualification by getting herself registered under Chap. IV of the Regulation. In this view of the matter, he has gone beyond the view of the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court, considering the process of reasoning by which the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court came to the conclusion that the omission of a plaintiff landlord to get himself registered before instituting the suit was not fatal to the suit and that the language of S. 78 of the Land Registration Act did not preclude the Court from passing a decree if it was satisfied that after the institution of the suit registration had taken place. There would not be any justification for extending the previlege conceded to the plaintiff in that case any further. A strict construction of the language of S. 59 may be avoided on the ground that it leads to hardship and inconvenience, which the Legislature could not have intended. But, it is certainly not necessary to pass a decree before the requisite qualification enabling the plaintiff to demand and recover rent has actually been acquired. The proceedings in the case could have been suspended and plaintiff ordered to satisfy the Court that she has got herself registered. For this purpose a reasonable period of time could be allowed. On her satisfying the Court that necessary registration had taken place, the bar to her claim would have disappeared and decree could be granted to her. This would have been a better course than a conditional decree. It would have led to the same result as was achieved by the Calcutta High Court by taking into consideration the certificate obtained by the plaintiff in that case after the institution of the suit.

[9] In the view that I have taken of the matter, a remand of the case to the trial Court would have been necessary. But I have been informed that the plaintiff has got herself registered as required by the Land and Revenue Regulation. Her learned counsel has also produced a certified copy of the Jamabandi showing that plaintiff got her name registered on 3rd January 1945 before the disposal of the appeal by the lower appellate Court. It was presumably for this reason that the objection as to non-registration was not pressed at that stage. In these circumstances, the objection raised by the appellants loses whatever force it had. Plain. tiff could now be given an unconditional decree. But as she did not appeal from the decree of the trial Court, it is not open to me to amend it in her favour, nor need the case be remanded for an unconditional decree to be passed. The decree, therefore, shall stand in the exceptional circumstances of the case. The appeals are dismissed. Parties shall bear their own costs throughout.

Second Appeal No. 2110 of 1947, Decided on 27th April 1949, from decree and judgment of 2nd Addl. Judge, Assam Valley Division, D/- 14th May 1947.

(a) Tenancy laws — Assam (Temporarily Settled Districts) Tenancy Act (III [3] of 1935), Sch. I, Part I, cl. 4—Applicability—Clause does not apply if dispossession is not by landlord — Dispute between tenant and her relation — Relations fraudulently obtaining mutation in his name and asserting adverse title—Suit for possession governed by Art. 142, Limitation Act—Limitation Act (1908), Art. 142.

Clause 4 applies where a raiyat or under-raiyat is dispossessed by the landlord personally or by his agent.

Where the dispute is between a tenant, a widow and the relation of her late husband, who, while managing the land on her behalf, got the land mutated in his name fraudulently and then repudiated her title, there is, in fact, no dispossession by landlord and the tenant's suit for recovery of possession against her relation to which the landlord is a pro forma defendant is not governed by cl. 4 but by Art. 142, Limitation Act, 1908: A. I. R. (8) 1921 Cal. 249, Disting.

(b) Tenancy laws—Assam (Temporarily Settled Districts) Tenancy Act (III [3] of 1935), Sch. I, Part I, cl. 4—Dispossession by landlord—Adverse mutation effected by landlord's officer by fraud—Tenant dispossessed on strength of mutation — Dispossession is not by landlord.

Where a relation of the tenant, a widow, who managed the land on her behalf got the land mutated in his name through the landlord's officer and then, on the strength of the mutation, dispossessed her asserting an adverse title to the tenant :

Held, that the officer of the landlord, who was responsible for the mutation, may or may not have been a party to the fraud. If he was a party to it, he exceeded his powers. He was not acting within the scope of the authority and on behalf of the landlord. If he was not a party to the fraud, and was himself deceived into attesting a mutation it could not be said that he dispossessed the tenant on behalf of the landlord. The tenant, therefore, could not be said to have been dispossessed by the landlord. [Para 4]

Judgment.—This is an appeal from a decree and judgment of the Second Additional Judge, Assam Valley Division, dated 14th May 1947 by which the order of the Munsif, Barpeta, dated 25th April 1946 granting plaintiff a decree for declaration of her title to the suit land and its khas possession was affirmed. Defendants have appealed.

[2] The learned counsel for the defendants has raised only one point. He contends that the suit was barred as it had been instituted more than two years after plaintiff's dispossession by the landlord. The case, he argued, was governed by cl. 4, Part I of Sch. I, Assam (Temporarily Settled Districts) Tenancy Act, 1935. According to this clause, a suit for recovery of possession claimed by a plaintiff as a raiyat or an underraiyat otherwise than under Ss. 35 and 41 respectively must be instituted within two years from the date of dispossession. The learned Second Additional Judge held that this clause had no application and the case was governed by Art. 142, Limitation Act.

[3] The case of the plaintiff was that her husband was a tenant of the land. He died some 18 years before suit. On his death, the land devolved on her. She had no other male member in the family. She, therefore, got these lands managed through her husband's nephews, who are the contesting defendants in the case. They constructed a house on the homestead land with her consent. Later on, the defendants in collusion with the officers of the proforms defendants (landlords) got the name of Krishna Kanta. defendant, mutated in the records of the superior landlords without her knowledge or consent. In 1848 B. S. defendants erected two more houses without her consent and asserted hostile title to the land.

[4] The suit was resisted by the nephews of the plaintiff's husband. The landlords, though defendants in the case, did not contest it. A Tabsildar of the landlords appeared as a witness for the plaintiff. He deposed that the suit land stood in the name of the plaintiff, then it was entered in the name of Krishna Kanta, a contesting defendant and at the time he made his statement in Court it stood again in the name of plaintiff. He explained that one Mt. Durga Priya consented to the mutation in the name of Krishna Kanta, but later, on the representation of the plaintiff her name had been remutated in place of Krishna Kanta. Durga Priya was the step mother of the plaintiff's husband. She had no right to consent to the mutation respecting property in which she had no title. It is obvious that this mutation was collusive and fraudulent. It was without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiff. It is on the basis of this mutation that the defendants constructed two more houses and repudiated the title of the plaintiff. It is obvious that the landlord never meant to dispossess the plaintiff of the land. The officer of the landlord, who was responsible for the mutation, may or may not have been a party to the fraud. If he was a party to it, he exceeded his powers. He was not acting within the scope of the authority and on behalf of the landlord. If he was not a party to the fraud, and was himself deceived into attesting a mutation it could not be said that he disposses. sed the plaintiff on behalf of the landlords. The plaintiff in this case, therefore, cannot be said to have been dispossessed by the landlords. This was in fact not the case put forward by any of the parties including the contesting defendants. The defendants relied on the mutation in favour of Krishna Kanta, according to which plaintiff relinquished her right in favour of the defendants. That would not be an ouster by the landlords. The mutation embodying the alleged relinquishment has been found to be fraudulent and was cancelled. The defendants, therefore, have got no title in the lands. The landlords do not claim that they are in possession on their behalf or under them. In these circumstances the case is not governed by cl. 4, part I of the Sch. I, Assam Tenancy Act, 1935.

[5] The learned counsel for the appellant has relied on Hari Chandra v. Madan Barai, 25 C. W. N. 102: (A. I. R. (8) 1921 Cal. 249) in support of his contention. But this authority is easily distinguishable. This is a case under the Bengal Tenancy Act (Art. 3 of Sch. III). It was held that Art. 3 of Sch. III, Bengal Tenancy Act which corresponds to cl. 4, part I of Sch. I, Assam Tenancy Act, 1935, can be made applicable only where the dispossession has been effected by the landlord. It was held further that from this it followed that the Article applied where the dispossession had been effected not by the landlord personally but by an agent acting within the scope of his authority. This is a perfectly correct statement of the law but it does not help the defendants. In this case, it is obvious that there has been no dispossession of the plaintiff either by the landlords personally or by their agent. In fact, there has been no dispossession by the landlord at all. The dispute is between the plaintiff and the nephews of her late husband. These nephews were managing the land on behalf of the plaintiff and later on, after getting a mutation in favour of Krishna Kanta, fraudullently, they repudiated plaintiff's title.

[6] The suit has been instituted within 12 years of plaintiff's dispossession and is, therefore, clearly within time.

[7] The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

K. R. Barooah and K. Buzar Barua-for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal from the decree and judgment of the Second Additional Judge, A. V. D., dated 21st May 1947 by which the order of the learned Sadar Munsiff, Gauhati, dated 22nd November 1946 declaring that the sale-deed executed on 11th March 1944 by the late Mt. Dhukupriya in favour of defendant 1 Rikhobram was inoperative as being bad in law and as such had conferred no right and title on defendant 1 in respect of lands covered by kheraj patta No. 15 Purnakamdev village in mouza Pachim Barigog and directing that plaintiff be put in possession of the land according to law and that the deed in defenstand cancelled and dant's favour shall that a copy of the decree be sent the Registrar, Kamrup, for taking necessary action under S. 39, Specific Relief Act was modfied, and the relief for possession of the lands disallowed on the basis of withdrawal with liberty to the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit for this relief.

- [2] Defendant has appealed to this Court. Plaintiff's case was that Mt. Dukhupriya was his maternal grandmother. He purchased the suit land from her for a sum of Rs. 300 and a sale-deed was executed in his favour on 7th February 1944. Mt. Dukhupriya died on the night of 11th March 1944 after a protracted illness. She was unconscious on the date and was unable to execute any deed or document. A sale deed purporting to have been executed by her on 11th March 1944 in favour of defendant was vitiated by fraud. There was no consideration for the sale in favour of defendant 1 and Mt. Dukhupriya was wholly unable to be a party to the document being not in possession of hersenses.
- [3] Defendant 1 denied these allegations. He admitted that a sale-deed had been executed in plaintiff's favour on 7th February 1944, but pleaded that the sale could take effect only on the fulfilment of certain conditions by the plaintiff.

As these conditions were not fulfilled, the deed was allowed to remain unregistered. Later on Mt. Dukhupriya in order to pay off her debts resold the land to him for a consideration of Rs. 680 and executed the sale-deed on 11th March 1944 in his favour with the full consent of her two daughters, one of whom is the mother of the plaintiff.

[4] Three issues arose out of the pleadings. They were framed in the following terms:

"(1) Whether the suit is bad for being improperly stamped with Court fees?

(2) Whether the transfer in favour of defendant 1 is bad for (1) want of legal necessity, (2) want of consideration, (3) incapacity of the executant at the time of execution of deed, and (4) being tainted with fraud?

(3) Whether the plaintiff is entitled to possession?"

[5] Defendant 1 urged in the trial Court that the plaint was deficiently stamped. His contention was that the suit was really one for the cancellation of a document in his favour and that the court-fee ought to have been paid by the plaintiff ad valorem on the amount of the consideration of the sale deed in question.

[6] The learned Munsiff observed that the Court-fees Act does not contain a specie provision for cancellation of documents and there was divergence of judicial opinion whether suits for cancellation of instruments are merely declaratory suits or they involve consequential relief as well. He, however, found by a process of reasoning, which is not very clear, that the plaint was adequately stamped.

[7] On the second issue, he came to an emphatic finding that the document in defendant's favour was inoperative, bad in law and it conferred no right or title on defendant 1 in respect of the lands covered by it. He further found that the plaintiff was entitled to possession. The order passed by him embodied a declaration that the sale-deed executed on 11th March 1944, in defendant's favour was void and inoperative. It further directed that the deed in question stood cancelled and as it was a registered document, a copy was ordered to be sent to the Registrar for necessary action under 8.89, Specific Relief Act.

[8] It is clear that the trial Court granted a decree for cancellation of the document and also for possession after declaring the deed void and inoperative.

[9] Defendant 1 appealed to the Court of the 2nd Additional Judge. The learned Additional Judge agreed with the trial Judge in holding that the sale-deed in defendant's favour was tainted with fraud; it was without consideration and Mt. Dukhopriya was "physically and men. tally" incapable of executing the document when it was alleged to have been executed by her.

[10] The second contention that was raised before the learned Additional Judge was that in any case the relief for recovery of possession could not be allowed to the plaintiff as there was no prayer for a declaration of the plaintiff's title to the suit land. It may be observed that the plaintiff did rely on the sale-deed in his favour. Its execution was even admitted by the defendant. In spite of this, the contention was raised that there was no express prayer for a declaration of title. The possessory relief was obviously claimed on the basis of title as evidenced by the sale-deed in plaintiff's favour. The omission of an express prayer for a declaration of title was made the basis of the plea that a decree for possession could only follow a decree for declaration of title, and as the declaration of title had not been prayed for, this relief should not have been allowed. It appears that plaintiff respondent did not get the right advice and put in a petition for withdrawal of the prayer for possession in order that at least the second relief given to him may stand.

[11] In his petition, he stated that the objection that the suit (for possession) was not maintainable was raised for the first time in appeal and that the omission to include a prayer for declaration of title may be considered as a formal defect and that as the suit may fail for this, he may be permitted to withdraw his claim with respect to recovery of possession with permission to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action. In his petition for withdrawal he also stated that an error had crept in the description of the land from which he had been dispossessed by the defendant as given in the schedule. This was an additional reason for securing permission to bring a fresh suit. Defendant resisted the request for leave to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action. The learned Judge, however, allowed plaintiff-res. pondent to withdraw his claim with respect to recovery of possession and dismissed the suit for possession reserving plaintiff liberty to bring a fresh suit for that relief on the same cause of action later. The decree of the trial Court so far as the second relief is concerned was allowed to stand. [12] The learned counsel for the appellant has urged that the relief granted in the case by the appellate decree is declaratory in nature and even if it is treated as one for cancellation of the document in favour of defendant 1, it could not have been granted after the withdrawal of the relief for possession which was really the consequential relief which on the showing of the plaintiff himself was available to him at the time of the institution of the suit. He has relied on S. 42, Specific Relief Act and on Shankar Lal v. Sarup Lal, 84 ALL, 140: (13 I. C. 19) in support of his contention. The decree in this case is not for a mere declaration under S. 42. It is a decree for the cancellation of the document in defendant's favour. The order passed by the learned Munsiff stated in express terms that the deed in question, viz., the sale deed, in favour of defendants 1, stood cancelled and that a copy of the decree be sent to the Registrar for necessary action under S. 39. There cannot be any manner of doubt that the decree that followed the order was not a simple declaratory decree. The terms of the judgment make it clear that the decree was passed under S. 39. No objection was taken to this part of the decree in appeal. All that was urged was that a decree for possession could not be granted as the plaintiff had omitted to ask for a declaration of title in his favour on the basis of the sale-deed he was relying on. This objection prevailed and the plaintiff was permitted on his application to withdraw his claim with respect to the recovery of possession. His request for leave to bring a fresh suit was resisted by the defendant but he was not successful in his attempt. The appellate Court, in consequence, modified the decree only to this extent that the relief for possession was disallowed.

[13] The learned counsel for the appellant has drawn my attention to the last part of the judgment which is as follows:

"The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with half costs to the plaintiff-respondent both in this Court and in the Court below and the judgment and the decree of the learned Munsiff with respect to the declaration that the sale-deed executed on 11th March 1944, by late Mt. Dukhop: iya in favour of defendant 1, is inoperative, and bad in law, and, as such, has not conferred any right, title and interest on the said defendant with respect to the suit lands covered by kheraj patta No. 14, of Purnakamdey village in mouza Paschim Borigog, are hereby affirmed and the plaintiff's claim with respect to recovery of possession of the suit land is dismissed on withdrawal, and the learned Munsiff's decree is modified to that extent."

He relies on this part of the order for his argument that the decree in the appellate Court was modified and it was a decree pure and simple for a declaration that the document in question was void. This contention cannot prevail. The learned Judge in appeal reproduced the penultimate para from the judgment of the trial Court which had embodied the declaration in plaintiff's favour that the sale deed in favour of the defendant was inoperative and bad in law. The direction that the deed stood cancelled and that a copy of the deed be sent to the Registrar for necessary action under S. 39, has not been reproduced in the appellate order. But this does not imply that the relief granted under S. 39, has been disallowed. There was no such prayer made by the defendant and the appellate Court merely modified the decree of the trial Court by disallowing the claim with respect to possession only. The learned Judge stated expressly that the decree of the Munsiff was modified to that extent. The decree, so far as the second relief is concerned, therefore, stands unaltered and it is a decree for the cancellation of the instrument in favour of the defendant.

the plaintiff is admittedly out of possession and he is in a position to claim a decree for possession, he should not be permitted even to obtain a decree for the mere cancellation of the instrument. This contention is sought to be supported by Shankar Lal v. Sarup Lal, 34 ALL. 140: (13 I. C. 19). In this case the plaintiff did not ask for a declaration of his title. He merely prayed that the will may be declared void and delivered up to be cancelled. This case was clearly covered by S. 39, Specific Relief Act. The learned Judges (Karamat Hussain and Chamier JJ.) observed as follows:

"Ordinarily a Court would, we think, exercise its discretion wisely if it declined to adjudge such an instrument void and would do well to leave the plaintiff to a suit for possession. The result of allowing a suit to be maintained under S. 39, and another suit for possession to be brought immediately afterwards is that the defendant is put to unnecessary expense. In this case though the Additional Judge does not say very much about it, we think we must hold that he has exercised his discretion, and, inasmuch as he has decided that the document is void and both the lower Courts agree that the will has not been proved, we do not feel called upon to set aside his decree."

[15] It is clear that the learned Judges did not lay down as a matter of law that a document could not be cancelled unless a prayer for possession was also included in the suit where plaintiff was out of possession. All that was held was that it would be a wise discretion if ordinarily the Court declines to adjudge an instrument void if relief for possession is not included in the claim by the plaintiff who is out of possession. The granting of the relief under S. 39, was in view of the learned Judges in discretion of the Court and on the facts of the particular case before them the decree for mere cancellation of the document was not interfered with. Here, there are better reasons for not interfering with the decree of the lower appellate Court. Plaintiff had actually prayed for the relief for recovery of possession and was induced or misled to withdraw that claim on an untenable objection from the defendant. In these circumstances, I do not see any justification for setting aside the decree.

[16] The learned counsel for the respondent requested that plaintiff be allowed to amend the plaint and that a decree for possession be also passed in his favour. This is an extraordinary and also an extremely extravagant request. Plain.

tiff was permitted to withdraw his relief for the recovery of possession. He has not appealed from the decree nor has put in cross-objections. He cannot now be permitted to re-introduce his claim for recovery of possession and I decline to entertain this request.

[18] Mr. Ghose has asked for a certificate for a Letters Patent Appeal. He states that the Allahabad case on which he relied does not state the law correctly. This is an extraordinary statement to make. I am not satisfied, however, that there is any substantial question of law in the case or that it is otherwise a fit case for a Letters Patent Appeal. I, therefore, decline to grant the Certificate.

Under the provisions of S. 167, Evidence Act, misreception of evidence is not a ground for interference.
It is true that misreception of evidence in a particular case might have the effect of so influencing the minds where such misreception of evidence cannot reasonably be said to have influenced the mind of the jury in coming to their verdict and there is other direct evidence of eye-witnesses implicating the accused, the conviction of the accused will not be interfered with.

J. C. Sen — for Appellant.

K. R. Barman, Govt. Advocate (Sr.)—

Judgment. — This is an appeal by one Kashim Ali and Fatik Sheikh against their convictions and sentences passed by the learned Sessions Judge, Lower Assam Districts upon a unanimous verdict of guilty brought by the Jury, the appellant Kashim Ali having been sentenced to transportation for life under 8.302, Penal Code and 2 years' R. I. under S. 148, Penal Code the sentences to run concurrently; the appellant Fatik Sheikh having been sentenced under 8s. 202/149, Penal Code to transportation for life.

[2] One Mt. Dalimannessa was married to one Badaruddin, a son of the deceased Yad Ali. Adarjan, a daughter of Yad Ali, was married to the appellant Fatik Sheikh. For some 3 or 4 years, Mt. Dalimannessa had ceased to live with her husband, Badaruddin, and was living with her parents. While Dalimannessa was living with her parents, she was once abducted by the appellant, Fatik Sheikh, and detained in his house for some 3 months. Fatik Sheikh then divorced his wife, Mt. Adarjan. Badaruddin, the husband of Dalimannessa, thereupon filed two criminal cases against the appellant Fatik. During the investigation of these cases, Mt. Dalimannessa was recovered by the Police about a year before the present murder and was handed over to her parents.

[3] On 11th July 1948, at about 1 A. M., some 10 to 15 persons came to the house of Badaru. din, and shouting from outside the house, asked Badaruddin to hand over Dalimannessa to them. Badaruddin answered back saying that his wife was not there. The intruders then went to the house of Yad Ali, the father of Badaruddin. Yad Ali's house was next door to that of Badaruddin. The appellant Kasim is alleged to have asked Yad Ali to hand over Mt. Dalimannessa to them. Yad Ali said Dalimannessa was not in his house, whereupon the two appellants entered the house of Yad Ali and, when they did not find Mt. Dalimannessa, Kasim who was armed with a spear, pierced Yad Ali in the region of his chest. This attack upon Yad Ali was witnessed by his wife, Fulmala, and his divorced daughter, Adarjan. As a result of the injury, Yad Ali fell to the ground. On alarm being raised, the two appellants left the house of Yad Ali and disappeared along with their companions. After the appellants had disappeared, Dalimannessa, Badaruddin and his brother, Kadam Ali, came to the house of Yad Ali. Shortly afterwards, some neighbours also arrived. Yad Ali who was still alive, was then taken to the Barpeta hospital in a boat. Yad Ali's brother, one Abed Ali, reported the matter to the Police. Yad Ali died the following day. On completion of the investigation, the two appellants and two others were sent up for trial, but the appellants only were convicted and sentenced by the learned Judge for the murder of Yad Ali.

[4] The defence of the accused was that on the night in question, they had not visited the house of Badaruddin or the deceased for any purpose; they suggested that some dacoits might have visited the house of Yad Ali and in the course of the commission of a dacoity, had murdered Yad Ali.

[5] Mr. Sen for the appellants has argued (1) that the learned Sessions Judge misdirected the jury in that he summed up the evidence in a way which caused confusion in their minds. a confusion which has resulted in an erroneous verdict; (2) that the learned Sessions Judge, in omitting to explain to the jury the provisions of S. 304, Penal Code, has misdirected the jury, (3) that the learned Sessions Judge, in omitting to direct the jury to discard the evidence of the prosecution witnesses as worthless and unreliable, has misdirected them, (4) that the learned Sessions Judge misdirected the jury in omitting to direct them to discard the prosecution evidence altogether because, according to the medical evidence, Yad Ali could not possibly have made any statement after he had received the injury, (5) that the learned Sessions Judge ought to have directed the jury that it was not likely that the appellants would come to abduct Mt. Dalimannessa after the lapse of a year, (6) that the learned Sessions Judge, in wrongly admitting the evidence of Mt. Adarjan under S. 33, Evidence Act, has caused a failure of justice, (7) that the learned Sessions Judge misdirected the jury in omitting to draw their attention to the inherent improbabilities of the prosecution case, (8) that the learned Sessions Judge should have stressed the difficulty of identifying the appellants by the light of a torch, (9) that the learned Judge misdirected the jury in omitting to direct them to consider the case of each of the appellants separately.

[6] We have heard Mr. Sen for the appellants at length in support of his contentions. We are not satisfied that the learned Sessions Judge has misdirected the jury on any material point in the prosecution evidence. The learned Judge's summing up, from the point of view of the appellants, is a summing up more in their favour than against them. The learned Sessions Judge has drawn the attention of the jury to the contradictions and discrepancies in the prosecution evidence, material and immaterial and left the appreciation of the evidence in the case to the jury. Indeed, where he has expressed any opinion, it is in favour of the appellants. We do not think it was the duty of the learned Judge to tell the jury to discard the prosecution evidence having regard to certain contradictions or discrepancies. The acceptance or rejection of the evidence in the case, notwithstanding contradictions and discrepancies, was a matter entirely within the province of the jury. In the third paragraph of his charge to the jury the learned Judge has expressly directed the jury to consider the case of each accused separately.

[7] As regards the alleged dying declaration, the learned Sessions Judge invited the attention of the jury to the evidence of the Doctor who had stated that, in his opinion, Yad Ali must have lost all consciousness immediately after he received the injury. We do not think there is any substance in the contention that it is not likely that the appellants would attempt to abduct Mt. Dalimanness after the lapse of a year.

[8] We can see nothing wrong in the summing up of the learned Judge on the question of identification of the appellants by the prosecution witnesses. This is not a case where the weight of evidence on this particular question rests on the evidence of casual recognition of unknown persons. In this case, the appellants who are related to the prosecution witnesses, were well known to them, and we do not think there was any difficulty in identifying them at the time of the occurrence. In any case, the learned Sessions Judge pointed out to the jury the passages in the evidence of the prosecution witnesses which affected their credibility in the matter of the identification of the appellants.

[9] On the question of the learned Judge's failure to explain to the jury the terms of S. 304, Penal Code, it is sufficient to say that we do not think this was a case in which any reference to S. 304, Penal Code, was called for.

(10) The only substantial ground taken in this appeal is that the learned Sessions Judge was in error in admitting the evidence of Mt. Adarjan under the provisions of S. 33, Evidence Act. The learned Judge has observed:

"By the by, I should tell you that Mt. Adarjan could not be cross-examined in details before this Court though attempts were made for the purpose. She gave her evidence in examination-in-chief, but on account of illness, she was incapable of giving in Court answers to the questions in cross-examination put by the learned Advocate on behalf of the defence. On account of illness, she stated that she could not understand the questions of the learned Advocate and she appeared to be very restless and she could not take the seat when she was given a stool for the purpose. Therefore, her evidence before our Court will not be placed before you and you should not consider the same. Under S. 33, Evidence Act, her evidence before the Committing Court will be placed before you. She was partly crossexamined there by the defence, and she could not be cross-examined fully during the trial of the case. The value of her evidence before the Committing Court, and which will be placed before you, is very much lessened."

[11] Mr. Sen has argued that S. 33, Evidence Act has no application where a witness has been partly examined in the Court of Session: that a witness's evidence which has been recorded in committal proceedings, can be admitted only under the provisions of S. 288, Criminal P. C., if the same witness has been examined at the trial, as in this case.

[12] We think there is considerable force in Ithis argument, and on the facts of this case, we propose to exclude the evidence of Adarjan entirely from our consideration. Under the provisions of S. 167, Evidence Act, misreception of evidence is not a ground for interference. It is true that misreception of evidence in a particular case might have the effect of so influencing the minds of a jury as to render their verdict erroneous. In the case before us however, the learned Judge has clearly said to the jury that the value of Mt. Adarjan's evidence was "very much lessened." We do not think the reception of the evidence of Mt. Adarjan under 8. 33, Evidence Act, can reasonably be said to have influenced the mind of the jury in coming to their verdict. There is a mass of direct evidence of eye-witnesses who implicate the appellants. The jury apparently accepted it, and we do not think it acted in a manner in which no reasonable man would act. (Their Lordships then quoted the evidence of eye-witnesses, Fulmala, Dalimunnissa and Kadin Ali. The judgment then proceeds as follows :)

[13] Finally, the prosecution led evidence of Yunus, Abdul Salam, and Isub Ali, which corroborated the evidence of the eye-witnesses. If the evidence of these 6 witnesses is accepted—and the jury apparently accepted it—we do not think we can set aside the convictions and sentences on the sole ground that Adarjan's evidence was wrongly admitted under the provisions of S. 33, Evidence Act. In this view, we would scarcely be justified in ordering a re-trial by reason of the misreception of the evidence of Adarjan. We accordingly decline to interfere, and dismiss the appeal.

Kanteswar Chowdhury and others — Plaintiffs — Appellants v. Province of Assam and others—Defendants—Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 810 of 1944, Decided on 22nd November 1949, from judgment and decree of learned Dist. Judge, A. V. D., D/-18th January 1944.

Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (1886), Ss. 154 (1) (a), 32, 62 — To avoid bar of S. 154 (1) (a) plaintiff to prove violation by Government of his existing right under Regulation — Mere occupation not sufficient under S. 32 — S. 62 does not control S. 154 — Trial of suit in civil Court is barred.

Before the bar of S. 154 (1) (a) can be said to be inoperative, the plaintiff must lay the foundation for his contention that he had an existing right under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation which the Government of Assam had violated. Under S. 32 mere occupation is not enough for occupation may be the occupation of a trespasser. The occupants contemplated by S. 32 must have a permanent, heritable and transferrable right of use and occupation in the land, or be in possession as mortgagees of persons having such a right. Where there is not an iota of evidence adduced by the plaintiffs which shows that they are in any manner entitled to the property in question, S. 62 also has no application. Further, S. 62 does not control S 154 which deals with certain specified subjects. The cognizance and trial of the suit by a civil Court in such a case is barred by the provisions of S. 154 (1) (a): A I.R. (5) 1918 Cal. 21; A. I. R. (7) 1920 Cal. 274; A. I. R. Judgment. — This is a second appeal from the judgment and decree of the learned District Judge, A. V. D., dated 18th January 1944 by which he affirmed the judgment and decree of the trial Court which had dismissed the plaintiffappellants' suit with costs.

[2] The plaintiff-appellants 9 in numberbrought a suit for a declaration that an order passed by the Sub-divisional Officer of Barpeta on 17th April 1939, settling the lands in suit with the defendant-respondents 2-38, was ultra vires and without jurisdiction; that likewise an order passed by the Revenue Tribunal on 14th November 1941, ordering eviction of the appellants was without jurisdiction; that the appellants were entitled to remain in possession of the lands in suit and to get pattas in their favour, and for a permanent injunction restraining the respondents from evicting the appellants from the disputed lands measuring some 319 bighas odd situated in village Medhikuchi, mouza Hastinapur. The Province of Assam was impleaded as defendant 1.

[3] The defence to the suit was that the Government of Assam was free to settle the lands in question with the other defendants as they were waste lands, there being no claim by any person who could be described as a landholder or settlement-holder or a person having any other right to settlement under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation.

[4] On the plesdings, the trial Court framed the following amongst other, issues:

"2. Whether the Munsiff's Court has pecuniary jurisdiction to try the suit?

8. Whether the civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain and try the present suit?

4. Whether the suit is maintainable?"

[5] The trial Court tried issues 2, 3 and 4, as preliminary issues and held that it had no jurisdiction by reason of the provisions of S 154 (1), Assam Land and Revenue Regulation. The lower appellate Court agreed with the decision of the trial Court on this issue.

[6] The facts, as found by the lower appellate Court, are these: The land in dispute was admittedly unfit for cultivation, and under some mistaken impression, it was treated as a grazing reserve; the plaintiffs had failed to prove that they ever cultivated this land after acquiring it from Government on annual pattas; on the other hand, the defendants were the person who had offered to give up an equal area of land of which they were in possession, to form a recognised grazing reserve on condition that they were given settlement of the 319 bighas of land now in dispute; the defendants are inhabitants of the same village and mouza as those to which the land in suit appertains; the appellants belong to a different village and different mouza; somehow or other, before the settlement proceeding which resulted in the settlement with the defendants, the appellants managed to occupy the land which resulted in the Goverment starting encroachment proceedings against them under R. 18 (2), and the S. D. O. in due course, passed orders for their eviction; the order of the S. D. O. was get aside by the Deputy Commissioner, Kamrup, but the Revenue Tribunal set aside the order of the Deputy Commissioner and restored the order of the Sub-divisional Officer, as a result of which, the plaintiff.appellants brought the present suit.

[7] Before the learned District Judge as well as before us, it was contended on behalf of the appellants that certain sections and rules framed under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation render the bar provided by S. 154 (1) (a) inoperative in view of certain decisions of the Calcutta High Court. The learned District Judge considered the cases reported in Askar Mian v. Sahedali, 23 C. W. N. 540: (A. I. R. (5) 1918 Cal. 21), Jai Gobinda v. Hazira Bibi, 24 C. W. N. 149: (A. I. R. (7) 1920 Cal. 274), Secy. of State v. Brajendra Kishore, A. I. R. (23) 1936 Cal. 629: (168 I. C. 249) and Dhanai Namasut v. Haji Niamatulla, 89 C. W. N. 857 and came to the conclusion that the decisions relied upon by the appellants' advocate, had no application to the facts before him. We are in agreement with this view.

[8] The decisions of the Calcutta High Court to which reference has been made, have application to cases where a plaintiff has made out a prima facie case respecting an existing right, which the Revenue Authorities omitted or refused to respect when settling the land with persons other than the plaintiff. The learned District Judge rightly points out that before the bar of 8. 154 (1) (a) can be said to be inoperative, the plaintiff must lay the foundation for his contention that he had an existing right under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation which the Government of Assam had violated. Section 32 of the Regulation, upon which apparently the appellant's advocate had relied before the learned Judge, is in these terms;

"32. (1) The Settlement Officer shall offer the settlement to such persons if any as he finds to be in possession of the estate and to have a permanent, heritable and transferable right of use and occupancy in the same, or to be in possession as mortgagees of persons having such a right.

(2) If the Settlement Officer finds no person in possession, as aforesaid, it shall be in his discretion, subject to such rules as the Provincial Government may make under S. 12, to offer the settlement to any person he thinks fit."

Under 8. 32, mere occupation is not enough, as alleged by the appellants, for occupation may be the occupation of a trespasser. Indeed in this case, the learned District Judge has come to the conclusion that the appellants were trespassers. The occupants contemplated by 8. 32 of the Regulation must have a permanent, heritable and transferable right of use and occupation in the land, or be in possession as mortgagees of persons having such a right. It is clear from the evidence that the plaintiff failed to bring his case within the terms of 8. 32 of the Regulation.

[9] Nor do we think that S. 39 of the Regulation is of any assistance to the appellants. Section 39 deals with the effect of a decision of the Settlement Officer in the matter of the settlement. It refers to Ss. 35 and 36, and S. 35 refers to S. 12 of the Regulation. For the purpose of interpreting S. 12 of the Regulation, reference must be made to Ss. 1 and 2 of Part II, Chap. I of the Regulation. Section 1, among other definitions, contains the definition of 'waste land', and it is common ground that the land in dispute was waste land when the settlement was made. Section 2 of Part II, Chap, I deals with the powers of the Deputy Commissioner, and is in these terms:

The disposal of waste land required for ordinary or special cultivation or for building purposes will, subject to the general or special orders of the Provincial Government, vest in the Deputy Commissioner who will dispose of such land by grant, lease or otherwise in the manner and subject to the conditions set forth in the rules following, provided that the Deputy Commissioner may expressly reserve any such land from settlement."

At the trial of the suit, the plaintiffs did not produce any order of the Deputy Commissioner in their favour. Even when the matter was before the learned District Judge, the appellants failed to produce any order of the Revenue authorities settling or purporting to settle with them the land in dispute.

[10] Mr. Sen for the appellants very properly conceded before us that S. 62 of the Regulation had no application to the facts before us. Section 62 finds place in Chap. IV, Part I of the says:

"Nothing contained in this Chapter and nothing done in accordance therewith shall be deemed to (a) preclude any person from bringing a suit in the civil Court for possession of, or for declaration of his right to, any immoveable property to which he may deem himself entitled."

The learned District Judge points out that there is not an iota of evidence adduced by the appellants which shows that they are in any manner entitled to the property in question. Apart from the fact that there is no evidence led by the plaintiffs as to their right, title and interest, s. 62 does not control S. 154 of the Regulation which deals with certain specified subjects.

[11] These sections of the Regulation to which we have referred have been considered by the learned District Judge. Rules 15 and 18 were also argued before us, as indeed they were argued before the learned District Judge. The learned District Judge came to the conclusion that there has been no breach of R. 15. He expressed the opinion that it was not necessary to be too definite on this point, but the following facts stated by the learned Judge, namely, that the appelants belong to another village and that they had failed to prove previous possession, that they did not apply for any settlement, that ever since the trouble started between the parties, it was the defendants who were paying the land revenue justified the view he has taken that the action of the appellants was not bona fide. The use of the word 'ordinarily' in R. 15 of the Settlement Rules is also not of any assistance to the appellants. As the learned Judge points out, the use of the word 'ordinary'

"gives the Revenue Authorities the power to make departure in suitable cases and the present case is obviously one where a departure was justified."

(12) It is unnecessary for us to express our view on the interpretation of R. 18 (1), as we do not think it is necessary for the purpose of disposing of this appeal.

[18] We agree with the learned District Judge that the cognizance and trial of the suit by a civil Court was barred by the provisions of S. 154 (1) (a) of the Regulation.

[14] The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs. There will be two sets of costs—one payable to the Province of Assam, and the other to the remaining defendants.

Second Appeal No. 11A of 1948, Decided on 7th December 1949, from judgment and decree of Sub-Judge, Cachar, D/-28th February 1948.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 41, R. 31 — Judgment should be self-contained — Material evidence not reproduced—Reasons for holding fact not proved or oral evidence not satisfactory not stated—Judgment does not comply with provisions of O. 41, R. 31.

The judgment of an appellate Court must be selfcontained, so self-contained that findings of fact can be sustained upon a bare perusal of it. It is not sufficient if it merely states that a particular fact had not been proved nor is it sufficient if it merely states that the oral evidence was not satisfactory on that point. It should reproduce the material evidence and also state the reasons for holding the fact as not proved and the oral evidence unsatisfactory. [Para 7]

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 20, R. 4 (2)—Judgment merely stating conclusions—Material evidence on issue and reasons for acceptance or rejection not stated—Judgment is bad.

It is not sufficient for the judgment of the trial Court merely to say that on a careful consideration of the evidence, the Court has come to this or that conclusion. The material evidence on a particular Issue for and against the parties to the suit must be set out in the judgment, and reasons stated for its acceptance or rejection.

S. K. Ghose-for Appellant. N. M. Dam-for Respondent.

Thadani Ag. C. J. — This is a second appeal from the judgment and decree of the learned Subordinate Judge, Cachar, dated 28th February 1948, by which he affirmed the judgment and decree of the trial Court which had decreed the plaintiff's suit with costs.

[2] The plaintiff-respondent brought a suit to eject the defendant from the lands in suit which, according to him, were settled on the defendant some 12 or 13 years before the institution of the suit at an annual rent of Rs. 20. He alleged that he required the land in suit for his own use and, after serving a notice on the defendant to vacate the lands, he brought the present suit.

[3] The defence to the suit was that no valid notice had been served upon the defendant, and that the defendant had acquired occupancy rights over the property.

[4] Upon the pleadings, the trial Court framed

the following issues:

1. Whether any valid notice of ejectment was served on the defendant?

2. Whether the defendant has acquired occupancy rights over the suit lands?

8. To what relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?

As a result of its findings, the trial Court decreed the plaintiff's suit.

[5] The lower appellate Court, by a very short judgment, dismissed the appeal.

[6] We are constrained to observe that the judgment of the lower appellate Court is of no assistance to us in deciding the appeal. In disposing of the appeal the learned Subordinate

Judge has observed :

"I have gone through the evidence and considered the argument advanced. The defendant appellant wanted to show that he started occupation of the suit land since 1913 by taking the same on lease from one Mostan Mia. He relied on Ex. A, a certified copy of the kabuliyat. He, however, failed to prove the suit land and the land under Ex. A, to be same and identical plot. The oral evidence also not satisfactory on this point."

This is scarcely a compliance with the provisions

[7] The judgment of an appellate Court must be self-contained, so self-contained that findings of fact can be sustained upon a bare perusal of it. It was the manifest duty of the learned Sub-ordinate Judge to state his reason why he thought the plaintiff had failed to prove that the land in suit and the lands described in Ex. A, were identical. Nor was it sufficient for him to say that the oral evidence was not satisfactory on this point. He should have reproduced the material evidence and stated reasons for his conclusion that the oral evidence was not satisfactory.

[8] In view of the unsatisfactory judgment of the lower appellate Court, we referred to the judgment of the trial Court and, to our surprise, we found it no more satisfactory than the judgment of the lower appellate Court. The trial Court has observed :

"On a reference to the Re-settlement map, Ex. B, and Cadastral map, Ex. B, and Cadastral map, Ex. C, one cannot be definite as to whether the land of Sch. 1 of the plaint was covered by Ex. A."

The trial Court ought to have stated reasons why it could not come to a definite conclusion as to whether the land described in Sch. 1 of the plaint was covered by Ex. A. The trial Court also stated:

"He (defendant) has no doubt led some oral evidence to show that he has acquired occupancy rights over the suit lands. The plaintiff has also led some counter evidence. On a careful consideration of the evidence on record and circumstances of the case, I am constrained to hold that the defendant has failed to show by any reliable and independent evidence that he has acquired occupancy rights over the suit lands."

We wish to point out to the Munsiff, just as we have pointed it out to the Subordinate Judge, that it is not sufficient merely to say that on a careful consideration of the evidence, the Court has come to this or that conclusion. The material evidence on a particular issue for and against the parties to the suit must be set out in the judgment, and reasons stated for its acceptance or rejection.

[9] As we are unable to say upon the judgments of the Courts below whether their findings of fact have been correctly arrived at, we set aside the judgment of the lower appellate Court and remand the appeal to the lower appellate Court, with direction to the learned Judge to re-write his judgment in the light of the observations we have made, after giving notice to the parties or their advocates to argue afresh the appeal before him, on the evidence already on the record, and to dispose of the appeal according to law.

[10] We understand that the learned Subordinate Judge, Mr. Barkataki, who heard the appeal, has been transferred to Jorhat. We order the appeal from which this second appeal has been preferred, to be transferred to the file of Mr. Barkataki, for disposal, as directed by us, and according to law.

[11] Costs of the remand will be costs in the cause.

First Appeal No. 23 of 1949, Decided on 28th November 1949.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 98 (2) and (3)—Appeal heard by Bench of two Judges of Assam High Court — Difference of opinion — Decree of lower Court is to be confirmed—Provisos to sub-s. (2) and sub-s. (3) do not apply.

Clause 36, Letters Patent (Calcutta), which is made applicable by the Assam High Court Order, 1948, to proceedings before the Assam High Court is inoperative by reason of the Court baving only two Judges.

For the same reason provisos to sub-s. (2) of S. 98 and sub-s. (3) of that section also are not applicable.

Judgment. — A difference having arisen between my learned brother and myself in the matter of the decision of this appeal, my learned brother taking the view that the appeal should be allowed and decreed in part in favour of the plaintiff-appellant in the sum of Rs. 1500, and I taking the view that the appeal should be dismissed, a question arises to the manner in as which the appeal should be disposed of.

[2] Section 98, Civil P. C., is in these terms:

"98. Decision where appeal heard by two or more

Judges:

(1) Where an appeal is heard by a Bench of two or more Judges, the appeal shall be decided in accordance with the opinion of such Judges or of the majority (if any) of such Judges;

(2) Where there is no such majority which concurs in a judgment varying or reversing the decree appealed from, such decree shall be confirmed ;

Provided that where the Bench hearing the appeal is composed of two Judges belonging to a Court consisting of more than two Judges, and the Judges composing the Bench differ in opinion on a point of law, they may state the point of law upon which they differ and the appeal shall then be heard upon that point only by one or more of the other Judges, and such point shall be decided according to the opinion of the majority (if any) of the Judges who have heard the appeal, including those who first heard it; and

(3) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to alter or otherwise affect any provision of the Letters Patent of any High Court."

(8) Under sub-s. (2) of S. 98, Civil P. C., where there is no such majority which concurs in a judgment, varying or reversing the decree appealed from, such decree shall be confirmed. The proviso to sub-s. (2) of S. 98, Civil P. C., has no application for the simple reason that the High Court of Assam does not consist of more than two Judges.

[4] As regards sub-s. (3) of S. 98, Civil P. C., which apparently contemplates a Letters Patent appeal, it was added to S. 98 by the repealing and amending Act XVIII [18] of 1928. In the words of the learned Commentator D. F. Mulla, it does no more than give effect to the decisions before that Act, namely, that where an appeal is heard by a Bench of two Judges of a High Court and the Judges differ then, if the appeal is a Letters Patent appeal, the procedure is governed by Cl. 36, Letters Patent, (vide Bhai Das Shiv Das v. Bai Gulab, 48 I. A. 181: (A. I. R. (8) 1921 P. O. 6); Roop Lal v. Lashmi Doss, 29 Mad. 1; Roy Nandipat Mahata v. Alexander Shaw, 13 W. R. 209: (4 Beng. L. R. 181); Suraj. mal B. Mehta v. B. G. Horniman, 20 Bom. L. B. 185; (A. I. R. (4) 1917 Bom. 62 (S.B.)); Lachman Singh v. Ram Lagan Singh, 26 ALL. 10 : (1903 A. W. N. 162); Justin Hull v. Arthur Francis Paull, 24 C. W. N. 352: (A. I. R. (7) 1920 Cal. 1009)), but if the appeal is one under the Code of Civil Procedure, the procedure is governed by s. 98, Civil P. C., (vide Bhuta Jayatsingh v. Lakadu'Dhansingh, 43 Bom. 433: (A.I.B. (6) 1919 Bom. 1 (F.B)); Ten Tin Nyo v. Mg. Ba Saing, 1 Rang. 584: (A.I.R. (11) 1924 Rang. 148); Prafulla Kamini Roy v. Bhahani Nath, 52 Cal. 1018: (A. I. R. (13) 1926 Cal. 121) and Punjab Akhbarat & Press Co. Ltd. v. C. M. G. Ogilvie, 7 Lab. 179 : (A. L. R. (13) 1926 Lab. 65).

[5] The Assam High Court is not a chartered High Court. The appeal before us is not a Letters Patent appeal, but one under S. 96, Civil P. C. It is true that a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in the case reported in Dhana Raju v. Balkishen Das Moti Lal Daga, 52 Mad. 568: (A. I. R. (16) 1929 Mad. 641 (F.B.)).

has held that in the case of an equal division of opinion between the Judges of the High Court, in an eppeal preferred to it under the Code of Civil Procedure, the procedure to be adopted by the High Court is governed by cl. 36 of the Charter, and not by S. 98, Civil P. C. Even so, the position, so far as this Court is concerned, apart from the fact that it is not a chartered High Court, would seem to be governed by 8 93, Civil P. C., as this Court consists of two Judges only. Clause 36 of Letters Patent of the Calcutta High Court, which has been made applicable, with necessary modifications, by the Assam High Court Order, 1948, presupposes that the High Court consists of more than two Judges, for, it says "the case shall then be heard upon that point by one or more of the other Judges." I do not think Cl. 36 means that where there are only two Judges and a difference of opinion arises between them, a reference will nevertheless be made to a third Judge to be appointed. Undoubtedly, if the Assam High Court consisted of more than two Judges, a reference would have to be made to a third Judge, and no difficulty would have arisen even if the decision of the Madras High Court, to which reference has been made, were followed.

[6] In this connection, it is significant to observe that S. 9, Assam High Court Order, 1948, which empowers the High Court of Assam to apply the law in force immediately before the prescribed day (5th April 1948) relating to the powers of the Chief Justice, single Judges and Division Courts of the High Court in Calcutta and with respect to all matters ancillary to the exercise of those powers, says that it will apply with the necessary modifications. In my opinion, the necessary modification in the application of cl. 36 of Letters Patent of the Calcutta High Court would mean that so long as this Court consists of two Judges only, cl. 36 of Letters Patent of the Calcutta High Court is, for all practical purposes, inoperative.

[7] In this view, the order which automatically follows as a result of difference of opinion between my learned brother and myself is that the decree of the trial Court from which the appeal has been preferred, is confirmed.

Criminal Ref. No. 11 of 1949, Decided on 15th November 1949, made by learned Sessions Judge, Upper Assam Dists. in Case No. 1512-O of 1947. Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 258 (1) and 367 (1) — Case adjourned for desence evidence after framing of charge — Absence of complainant — Order of acquittal without finding accused not guilty is bad.

In a trial under S. 420, Penal Code, the Magistrate after framing a charge adjourned the case for defence evidence. As the complainant was absent on the adjourned date the Magistrate passed the following order: "Complainant absent. No steps taken. Accused acquitted."

Held, that as the Magistrate had not found the accused not guilty the order of acquittal contravened the provisions of S. 258(1) The order also contravened the provisions of S. 367 as neither the points for determination nor the reasons for the decision were given in the judgment and therefore it must be set aside.

Order.— This is a reference made by the learned Sessions Judge, Upper Assam Districts, reporting to this Court Case No. 1512-C of 1947. Onkarmal Agarwalla v. Tulsi Nath Gogoi—under S. 417, Penal Code, disposed of by Mr. T. Ahmed, Magistrate, 1st Class, Dibrugarh.

- [2] In November 1947, the complainant, Onkarmal Agarwalls, delivered a quantity of rice to Tulsi Nath Gogoi, with instructions to deliver the same to the Manager of the Singlijan T. E. and to obtain a cheque from bim for the price. The accused Tulsinath Gogoi obtained a cheque from the Manager of the Singlijan T. E., but did not give it to the complainant. The complainant, thinking that the Manager had not given the accused Tulsinath a cheque, asked the accused to go with him to the Manager of the Singlijan T. E. on the way, the accused, on the pretext of answering a call of nature, parted company with the complainant and never returned. The complainant made inquiries from the office of the Tea Estate and was informed that a cheque was given to the accused the previous evening. The cheque was for a sum of Rs. 2800-5-0.
- [3] On the following day, i. e. 19th November 1947, the complainant filed a complaint before the District Magistrate of Lakhimpur who transferred it to Mr. A. Ahmed, E. A. C., for disposal. Mr. A. Ahmed examined the complainant on oath on 19th November 1947 and issued process against the accused under S. 420, Penal Code. The accused appeared in Court on 19th December 1947. Mr. A. Ahmed, however, was transferred and the case came to the file of another Magistrate of the 1st Class, one Mr. T. Ahmed, also stationed at Dibrugarh.
- [4] On 20th April 1948, Mr. T. Ahmed examined 5 witnesses, including the complainant, and framed a charge against the accused under s. 420, Penal Code. For some reason or other, the case could not be heard until 28th January 1949, on which date the prosecution witnesses were further cross.examined by the defence, and the case for the prosecution came to a close. The case was adjourned to 1st March 1949, for defence. On 1st March 1949, the complainant appears to have been absent, and the case was adjourned to 7th March 1949. On 7th March 1949, the complainant was again absent, and the learned Magistrate, Mr T. Ahmed, passed the following order: "Complainant absent. No steps taken. Accused acquitted." It is against this order that the learned Sessions Judge has made this reference.

[5] The learned Sessions Judge points out that the order passed by the learned Magistrate contravenes the provisions of S. 258 (1), Criminal P. C., which says:

"If in any case under this chapter in which a charge has been framed, the Magistrate finds the accused not guilty, he shall record an order of acquittal."

The learned Sessions Judge rightly points out that the learned Magistrate has not found the accused not guilty, and that he could not, therefore, pass an order of acquittal. The learned Sessions Judge also points out that Mr. T. Ahmed has contravened the provisions of S. 367 (1), Criminal P. C. No points for determination have been set out in the judgment of acquittal, no reasons have been given for the decision.

[6] We agree with the learned Sessions Judge, for reasons stated by him, that the order of acquittal passed by the learned Magistrate in this case is one which must be set aside. We accordingly set aside the order of the learned Magistrate, dated 7th March 1949, and remand the case for disposal according to law, from the stage at which he passed the erroneous order on 7th March 1949.

[7] The trying Magistrate is directed to call upon the accused to adduce evidence in his defence, if he so wishes, hear argument if any and thereafter to pass judgment in accordance with

Belumani Nath and another — Petitioners v. Ramesh Chandra Nath — Opposite Party. Criminal Revn. No. 46 of 1949, D/- 22-12-1949.

Penal Code (1860), Ss. 339 and 341 — Accused obstructing private right of way alleged by complainant over land of accused — Accused denying existence of right of way — Trial and conviction under S. 341 — Revision — Accused can plead that evidence adduced did not exclude existence of bona fide belief in mind of accused that he had right to obstruct — Act is not offence in view of exception to S. 339—Proper remedy of complainant lies in civil Court.

The accused was tried under S. 341, Penal Code for obstructing a private right of way which the complainant claimed over the land of the accused. The accused denied any such right in the complainant. The trial Court found in favour of the complainant and therefore convicted the accused under S. 341:

Held, that the failure on the part of the accused to plead at the trial that his act fell within the exception to S. 339 could not deprive him of the right to show that the evidence in the case did not exclude the existence of a bona fide belief in his mind that he had a right to close the pathway. The act of the accused did not amount to any offence. Moreover as the dispute could be more appropriately tried in a civil Court instead of in a summary trial on criminal side, the conviction could not be maintained. [Para 5]

Order. — The petitioners in this case were convicted under S. 341, Penal Code and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 20 each, and in default to undergo simple imprisonment for one week. The order of conviction was upheld in appeal.

(path ail) in front of complainant's bari reached up to and joined the village path to the east of his bari and that this pathway had been in existence since the time of the complainant's grandfather. A part of the pathway, about 24 cubits in length, was on the land of the accused. They included the pathway in their field and grew paddy on it. Plaintiff was thus prevented from using the pathway. This act of the accused according to the complainant amounted to an offence under S. 341.

[3] The defence was that the complainant had no right of way over the land of the accused. Five witnesses were examined on behalf of the complainant. The trial was summary. The learned Magistrate states that these witnesses support the prosecution. They deposed that the pathway had been in existence for a long time. One witness was examined for the defence who stated that the complainant was using another pathway of the accused. The learned Magistrate visited the site of the alleged pathway. He felt satisfied that the complainant's pathway extended up to the village path and that about 8 nols of it lay on the accused's land. As a result of the local inspection or rather with its aid, he held that the prosecution witnesses had given proper description of the path and its locality. They also seemed to him disinterested. He, therefore, found the accused guilty.

[4] The learned counsel for the petitioners urges that the dispute was of a civil nature and in any case the accused bona fide believed that they had the right to include the site of the pathway in their own land they being the owners of the land admittedly.

[5] It appears that the complainant claims a private right of way. The dispute evidently can be more appropriately decided by the civil Court. The likelihood or at least the possibility of a bona fide belief in the mind of the accused that they had the right to stop the pathway as it was passing on their land cannot be entirely excluded. Section 339, Penal Code, which defines wrongful restraint provides an exception to the principle embodied in the section. The exception is to the effect that the obstruction of private way over land or water which person in good faith believes himself to have a lawful right to obstruct, is not an offence within the meaning of this section. This exception has not been considered by the Courts below, probably, for the reason that the defence that accused bona fide believed that they had right to close the pathway, was not pressed at the earliest possible opportunity. This failure on the part of the accused, however, should not deprive them of the right to show that the evidence in the case does not exclude the existence of a belief in their mind which takes away their act from the definition of the offence. Moreover, the question in controversy could not be decided properly in al summary trial on the criminal side.

[6] In this view of the matter, the convictions cannot be maintained. The petition is allowed. The convictions of the petitioners are set aside. The fines, if paid, shall be refunded.

Judgment. — In this appeal, a preliminary objection has been taken, namely, that the appeal is time-barred. The judgment in the first appeal was pronounced on 29th March 1946, and the appeal was preferred in the Calcutta High Court on 3rd August 1946. The decree was signed on 29th April 1946. The application for copies of the judgment and decree was made on 25th April 1946, and the copies were delivered to the appellant on 16th May 1946. On the establishment of the Assam High Court in April 1948 this appeal was transferred to this Court.

[2] Under Art. 156, Limitation Act, the appeal should have been preferred within 90 days of 29th March 1946, a period which expired on 28th June 1946. If the time taken from the date of the application for copies of the judgment and decree, namely, 25th April 1946, to the delivery of the copies on 16th May 1946; is added to 28th June 1946, in accordance with S. 12, Limitation Act, the appeal should have been filed on 17th July; the appeal having been filed on 3rd August 1946, it was prima facie time-barred.

[3] Mr. Medhi for the appellant has contend. ed that the appellant is entitled not only to the period, at any rate 10 days of it, which elapsed between the date of the application for copies and their delivery, but also to the period from 29th March 1946 to 29th April 1946, during which time the decree was not signed by the first appellate Court; 90 days from 29th April 1946, would expire on 29th July 1946, and if the 10 days which he claims from 25th April 1946 to 16th May 1946, are added to the 90 days, the appeal would have been within time even if it had been filed on 8th August 1946; it was in fact filed on 3rd August 1946.

[4] In support of his contention, Mr. Medhi has relied upon certain decisions of the Calcutta High Court reported in Mahoruddi Sheikh v. Safed Ali Khalifa, A. I. R. (15) 1928 Cal. 103: (105 I. C. 779); Bani Madhub v. Matungini Dassi, 13 cal. 104 (F. B.); Ashutosh Roy v. Monomohan Roy, A. I. R. (14) 1927 Cal. 65: (97 I. C. 539); Dwarka Das Kedar Bux v. Gajanan Jayannath, A. I. R. (33) 1946 Cal. 10: (222 I. C.

475) and Sudhansu Bhusan v. Majho Bibi, 42 C. W. N. 72: (A. I. B. (24) 1937 Cal. 732), in which the Calcutta High Court has consistently taken the view that the time which elapses bet. ween the pronouncement of the judgment and the signing of the decree can be properly ex. cluded under the provisions of S. 12, Limitation Act as time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree. This aspect of the case has been noticed in Chitaley's Limitation Act, Edn. 2, 1942, Vol. 8, at p. 2509, where the decisions of the various High Courts in India have been referred to. This Court had occasion to consider this question in Katimal Brahma v. Mohan Nath Nahata, A. I. R. (36) 1949 Assam 23, we took the view that the starting point for the purpose of the Limitation Act under Art. 152, is the date of the pronouncement of the judgment, and not the date of the signing of the decree. Mr. Medhi has not disputed the correctness of that view, but his contention is that the Calcutta High Court has consistently taken the view that under S, 12, Limitation Act, the time which elapses between the date of the pronouncement of a judgment and the date of the signing of the decree, is to be excluded as time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree.

[5] With all respect to the decisions of the Calcutta High Court, to which we have referred, we are unable to persuade ourselves to agree; with the view that under S. 12, Limitation Act, the time taken from the date of the pronouncement of the judgment to the date of the signing of the decree, can be properly excluded as time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree. The earliest Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court reported in Beni Madhub v. Matungini Dassi, 13 Cal. 104, which apparently has been interpreted as authority for the proposition that the time which is taken from the date of the pronouncement of a judgment till the sign. ing of the decree can be excluded as time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree under S. 12, Limitation Act, was dissented from by a Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court reported in Bechi v. Ahsan Ullah Khan, 12 ALL. 461: (1890 A.W.N. 149 (F. B.)). The Allahabad High Court did not accept the view that under S. 12, Limitation Act, the time which elapses between the date of the pronouncement of the judgment and the date of the signing of the decree, can be properly excluded as time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree. At p. 469, Mahmood J., delivering the judgment of the Full Bench, observed:

" 'Now, in the first place, I entertain no doubt that it is necessary and indispensable for a litigant who intends to appeal from a decree which is the result of a judgment against him, and which decree must, under the law, bear date the day on which the judgment was pronounced to apply for a copy of the decree and, if necessary, of the judgment also, before the lapse of the period of limitation for the appeal which he intends to file, whatever that period may be. This view is amply supported by the ruling of Garth C. J., in Ramey v. Broughton, 10 Cal. 652.' In the case before Garth C. J., the decree had remained unsigned for more than the period of limitation, and the appellant subsequently applied for and obtained a copy of the decree. It was contended before the learned Chief Justice on behalf of the appellant 'that where the decree was not drawn up and signed until after 20 days had expired from the delivery of the judgment, the 20 days ought to count from the time when the decree was made.' In dealing with this contention, Garth C. J., said But this is directly contrary to the express language of the law. By Art. 151 of the schedule to the Limitation Act, the 20 days are to be reckened from the date of the decree; and by S. 205, Civil P. C., the decree is to bear date the day on which the judgment is pronounced, so that the appeal must clearly be filed within 20 days from the day on which the judgment is pronounced.' Garth C. J., has also observed 'If the appellant had applied for a copy while the 20 days were running, he would not be barred."

[6] In the case before us, the application for copies was made during the time when the period of limitation was running, and under 8. 12, the time which the appellant was entitled to exclude was the time which elapsed between the date of the application for copies of the judgment and decree and their delivery, namely, from 25th April 1946 to 16th May 1946, and if this time is added to 28th June 1946, the appeal should have been filed on 17th July 1946.

[7] But we think, having regard to the explanation to S. 5, Limitation Act, which says:

"The fact that the appellant or applicant was misled by any order, practice or judgment of the High Court in ascertaining or computing the prescribed period of limitation, may be sufficient cause within the meaning of this section."

The appellant must be regarded as having shown sufficient cause for not preferring the appeal within the period allowed by law. It is true the appellant has not filed a formal application under s. 5, Limitation Act, but we do not think that a formal application is necessary, in view of the practice of the Calcutta High Court in computing the period of limitation prescribed for appeals, in the manner indicated in a long line of decisions which lay down that the time taken between the date on which the judgment is pronounced and the date on which the decree is signed is to be excluded under B. 12, Limitation Act as time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree. As this appeal was originally filed in the Calcutta High Court, the appellant was undoubtedly misled by the judgments and practice of that Court into believing that appeals filed in such circumstances as the present are within time. No formal application under 8.5, Limitation Act, is, therefore, necessary.

[8] We accordingly decide the preliminary objection against the respondents and order that this appeal will be heard. The appeal will be set down for hearing in due course.

Civil Revn. No. 17 (H) of 1949, D/- 28 11-1949, to revise order of Deputy Commissioner, Garo Hills, D/- 25-11-1948.

Administration of Justice and Police in Garo Hills. District Rules, R. 31—Provisions are mandatory.

The non-observance of R. 31 goes to the root of the jurisdiction of the Deputy Commissioner in the trial of the petition brought by an indigenous inhabitant and her husband for being appointed as Nokmas. Deputy Commissioner is bound, under the terms of R. 31, to induce the parties to submit their case to a panchayet and, if they agree to do so, to follow the procedure laid down in the Rule. (Where he made no attempt to induce the parties to submit their case to a punchayet and passed an order after himself taking evidence, his order was set aside, and he was directed to proceed in accordance with R. 31.)

P. K. Lahiri — for Petitioners. J. C. Sen — for Opposite Party.

Order. — This is an application under R. 35, of the Rules framed for the Administration of Justice and Police in the Garo Hills District, seeking to revise an order passed by the learned Deputy Commissioner, Garo Hills, on 25th November 1948, by which he set aside his previous order by which he had appointed one Monje Mechik and Withson Sengma as Nokmas and in their place appointed one Mechok Mechik and her husband, Okjang Sangma, as the Nokmas.

[2] The original Nokmas were one Wallam Sangma of Kambakpara Akhing and his wife. Mongmong Mechik. After their death, their daughter, Monje Mechik and her husband, Withson Sangma, instituted proceedings before the Deputy Commissioner, Garo Hills, for their appointment as Nokmas in succession to Wallam Sangma. In her petition, Monje Mechik alleged that she was the only daughter of Wallam Sangma and his lawfully wedded wife, Mongmong Mechik. The learned Deputy Commissioner sent Monje Mechik's petition for enquiry and report to the Mauzadar who however could not personally enquire into the matter and deputed the Garo Mondol of Garo Mouzas for enquiry and report. In due course, the Mondol submitted a report recommending Monje Mechik and her husband's appointment as Nokmas.

[8] The learned Deputy Commissioner, on receipt of the report of the Mondol, held an enquiry and declared Monje Mechik and her husband, Withson Sangma, as Nokmas and ordered their names to be entered in the Genealogical Table.

[4] Some 14 days later, on 27th September 1948, Mechok Mechik and her husband, Okjang Sangma, filed a petition objecting to the appointment of Monje Mechik and her husband, Withson Sangma, as the Nokmas, and made a counter claim for their appointment as Nokmas and prayed that the previous order of the Deputy Commissioner be set aside on the ground that Mechok Mechik was the real daughter of the deceased Wallam Sangma and his wife, Mongmong Mechik, and that Monje Mechik was, in fact, a daughter of Wallam Sangma by a woman called Satme Mechik who was not a legitimate wife of Wallam Sangma. The learned Deputy Commissioner proceeded to adjudicate the claim made by Mechok Mechik and her husband, Okjang Sangma, and after hearing the evidence adduced by both parties, set aside his previous order, dated 3th September 1948, and ordered the substitution of Mechok Mechik and her husband, Okjang Sangma, as the Nokmas for Monje Mechik and her husband, Withson Sangma. It is against this order that the present petition has been filed.

[5] One of the grounds taken by the petitioners' advocate is that the learned Deputy Commissioner has not given effect to the mandatory provisions of R. 31 of the Rules framed for the Administration of Justice and Police in the Garo Hills District. Rule 31 is in these terms:

"The Deputy Commissioner and his Assistants shall in all cases in which the parties are indigenous inhabitants of the district, and in any other cases, may endeavour to induce them to submit their case to a panchayet. If they agree to this, each party shall name an equal number of arbitrators, and shall choose, or leave the arbitrators to choose, an Umpire. The name and residence of Arbitrators and Umpire and the matter in dispute must be recorded before the proceedings commence, and the Court will direct the laskar or other recognised authority to assemble panchayet and witnesses within eight days. When the case has been decided, the Umpire shall appear with the parties before the Court, which shall proceed to record the decision and enforce it as its own. From such decision, there shall be no appeal."

[6] We think the non-observance of R. 31 goes to the root of the jurisdiction of the Deputy Commissioner in the trial of the petition brought by Mechok Mechik and her husband, Okjang Sangma. The learned Deputy Commissioner was bound under the terms of R. 31, to induce the parties to submit their case to a panchayet and, if they agreed to do so, to follow the procedure laid down in R. 31. But it appears the learned Deputy Commissioner made no attempt to induce the parties to submit their case to a panchayet.

[7] We, therefore, set aside the order of the learned Deputy Commissioner, dated 25th November 1948, and remand the case to the learned Deputy Commissioner to dispose of the petition after complying with the provisions of R. 81 of the rules framed for the Administration of Justice and Police in the Garo Hills District. In case the parties do not agree, the learned Deputy Commissioner is directed to record evidence afresh and dispose of the case according to law.

Order.—This is an application under 8. 439, Criminal P. C. seeking to set aside the order of the learned Sessions Judge, L. A. D., dated 16th May 1949, by which he set aside the order of the S. D. O., Mangaldai, dated 12th May 1948, by which the S. D. O. had ordered an elephant, a guddi (trappings) and a chain to be returned to the petitioner.

[2] It appears that the petitioner had lodged a first information report on 25th January 1948 alleging that his elephant had been stolen by the accused-respondent. Three days later, on 28th January 1948, the elephant was seized by the police from the possession of the respondent. The police, however, did not send up a case against the respondent for theft, but instituted proceedings under S. 147, Penal Code. On 26th April 1948, the S. D. O. transferred the case under S. 147, Penal Code, to the 2nd E. A. C. for disposal. While this case was pending before the 2nd E. A. C., the police requested the S. D. O. to make an order confirming the custody of the property in the possession of the petitioner to whom the police had handed over the property during the course of the investigation. The S. D. O. endorsed the report of the police by writing upon it the word "Yes." Against this order, the respondent appealed to the Sessions Court, and the learned Sessions Judge set aside the order of the S. D. O and awarded the custody of the property to the respondent. It is against this order that the petitioner has come in revision.

[3] It was contended by Mr. Barua on behalf of the petitioner that the order passed by the S. D. O. on 12th May 1948, confirming the custody of the petitioner, was not subject to appeal, and that the learned Sessions Judge had, therefore, no jurisdiction to set it aside. It was, however, pointed out to Mr. Barua that the order of the S. D. O. dated 12th May 1948, cannot properly be regarded as an order passed under S. 517, Criminal P. C., as no enquiry or trial had been concluded by him. Mr. Barua conceded that the order of the S. D. O., dated 12th May 1948, was not an order under the provisions of S. 517, Criminal P. C., but one under S. 523, Criminal P. C. Mr. Sen for the respondent also agreed that the order of the S. D. O. falls properly within the terms of S. 523, Criminal P. C.

[4] We do not agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the S. D. O., in passing the order dated 12th May 1948, acted without jurisdiction. The S. D. O. had jurisdiction in the matter, as the police had reported the seizure of the property to him. Under S. 523 (1), it is the Magistrate to whom the seizure of the property is reported who can make order as he thinks fit respecting the disposal of such property or the delivery of such property to the person entitled to the possession thereof. We do not think the order of the S. D. O., dated 12th May 1948, can be assailed on the ground stated by the learned Sessions Judge. Moreover, an order made under the provisions of S. 523, Oriminal P. C. is not an order against which an appeal can be preferred to the Court of Sessions, Indeed it was the learned Sessions Judge who had no jurisdiction to pass an order setting aside the order of the S. D. O., dated 12th May 1948. All that he was competent to do was to make a reference to this Court under the provisions of S. 438, Oriminal P. C.

[6] Mr. Sen for the respondent contended that the order of the Sessions Judge might be treated as a reference, and as the order of the learned Sessions Judge does no more than maintain the status quo on the date of the seizure of the property by the police from the respondent, this Court, sitting in revision, ought not to interfere with it. The difficulty in giving effect to this contention is that the order of the S. D. O., dated 12th May 1948, being one passed under the provisions of S. 528, Criminal P. C., the question of the delivery of the property seized must be decided with reference to the person who is entitled to the possession thereof. Neither the S. D. O., by his order dated 12th May 1948, nor the learned Sessions Judge has considered the question from this point of view.

[6] We think, therefore, that the order of the S. D. O., dated 12th May 1948, and that of the learned Sessions Judge, dated 16th May 1949, should be set aside. We accordingly set aside both the orders and direct the S. D. O., being the Magistrate to whom the police reported the seizure of the property to pass an order respecting the delivery of the property in question after making a judicial enquiry into the question as to who is entitled to the possession thereof.

Order.—The petitioner in this case was convicted by the Magistrate, 1st Class, Nowgong, under S. 411, Penal Code. He was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 30 and in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for two months. His petition of revision was dismissed by the learned Sessions Judge. He has now petitioned to this Court for interference.

[2] The facts leading to this revision petition are that the complainant who had purchased a mare from one Katiram found it missing in the month of Magh. On 22nd April 1947 he informed the police about its disappearance. On 11th August 1947 he found that the mare was in the possession of Abdul Majid, petitioner. He again lodged an ejahar with the police and later filed a complaint in the Court of the Magistrate. The complaint was against Abdul Majid and Forman Saikh from whom, it was alleged, Abdul Majid had purchased the mare. At the trial the defence put forward was that Forman Sheikh had purchased the mare from the village Goanbura and had sold it to Abdul Majid.

[8] Katiram supported the complainant. He deposed that the mare belonged to him and he had sold it to the complainant by Ex. 1. The village Goanbura supported the accused. He claimed that the mare belonged to him and he had sold it to Forman, who in turn had sold it to Abdul Majid. The learned Magistrate observed that the main point for decision in the case was whether the mare belonged to the complainant or that it was owned by the Goanbura, who is alleged to have sold it to Forman from whom Abdul Majid got it by purchase. On this point, he relied on the evidence of the prosecution witnesses. His conclusion was that the mare belonged to Katiram and it had been sold to the complainant. In spite of absence of identification marks in the ejabar lodged by the complainant, he found no difficulty in coming to that conclusion. He disbelieved the statement of the Goanbura and rejected the version given by him about its sale to Forman. On this finding be convicted both Abdul Majid and Forman Sheikh.

- [4] Abdul Majid stated that he had purchased it from Forman. Forman admits that he sold the mare to Abdul Majid. Assuming that the statement of the Goanbura that he sold the mare to Forman is not worthy of credence, the statement of Forman that he sold the mare to Abdul Majid cannot be ignored. If Abdul Majid purchased the mare from Forman then Abdul Majid can be convicted only if it can be found that he knew or had reason to believe that the mare had been stolen. There is no such allegation against Abdul Majid; nor is there any finding to that effect. This was the essential ingredient of the offence under S. 411, Penal Code. The accused should dishonestly receive or retain the stolen property, knowing or having reason to believe the same to be stolen property. There is nothing in the transaction itself from Forman to Abdul Majid to suggest that Abdul Majid had such knowledge. In fact, there is absolutely no suggestion from any quarter that Abdul Majid had knowledge that the mare was stolen.
- [5] Conviction of Abdul Majid, therefore, is wholly unsustainable. The petition is allowed. The conviction of Abdul Majid is quashed. He is acquitted and fine, if paid by him, shall be refunded.

(a) Administration of Justice and Police in Garo Hills District Rules, R. 35— Order of Deputy Commissioner declining to review order of his predecessor—Revision against— Power to revise rests in High Court.

The powers of "the Governor in his personal capacity" have been transferred to and are exercisable by the High Court. The revisional jurisdiction under R. 35 of the Rules framed for the Administration of Justice and Police in Garo Hills District now rests in the High Court.

(b) Administration of Justice and Police in Garo Hills District Rules, Rule 31—Applicability—Decision based on admission—Rule does not apply.

Rule 31, which requires the Deputy Commissioner to persuade the parties to agree to the arbitration of a Panchayat, will not apply where an admission of a party forms the basis of the decision of the Deputy Commissioner. If the decision is according to the admission of the party he can have no grievance.

(c) Administration of Justice and Police in Garo Hills District Rules, R. 35 — Revision under — Decision of Deputy Commissioner based on admission — Admission not alleged erroneous or misconstrued— Revision dismissed.

Where a petitioner challenged the order of the Deputy Commissioner declining to grant the review petition, which was based on an admission of the petitioner himself and it was nowhere stated in the petition nor even by the learned counsel of the petitioner during the course of the argument that the admission referred to in the order was not made by the petitioner, or that, if made, it was erroneous and be allowed to be recalled:

Ram Labhaya J.—This is a petition of revision from the order of the Deputy Commissioner, Garo Hills, by which he declined to review the order of his predecessor in office dated 15th April 1948, under R. 35 of the rules framed for the Administration of Justice and Police in the Garo Hills District.

- [2] This case came up for hearing originally before the Hon'ble the Acting Chief Justice. He directed that it may be placed before a Division Bench of this Court as he wanted to hear the Advocate-General on the question as to whether the powers of "the Governor in his personal capacity" had been transferred to and were exercisable by the High Court. The learned Advocate-General appeared and conceded that the revisional jurisdiction under R. 35 now rests in the High Court. The learned counsel for the parties are also agreed in this view.
- [3] The original order of the Deputy Commissioner of Garo Hills dated 15th April 1948, laid down that in effect the dispute as to the boundary was between Joran Nokma and Sonaram Nokma, and acting on the Sub-Deputy Collector's report, he found the claim of Sonaram Nokma to be false and directed Sonaram Nokma to deliver possession to Joran Nokma. He also ordered that Sonaram Nokma shall pay Rs. 25 as compensation to Joran Nokma.

[4] Sonaram Nokma applied for a review of the order dated 15th April 1948. Mr. Bhattacharjee, who had passed that order, had been relieved by Mr. J. B. Rajkowar. He heard the parties and also the Sub-Deputy Collector. His conclusion was "that one of the boundary Dhips (one tree) was not in its correct place." The direction he gave on 8th september 1948 was that the Sub-Deputy Collector and the Mouzadar will jointly visit the locality and erect the Dhip at the correct place, viz., at the junction of the Norang stream and the Dari Baliking which is a long and a bigh cliff. He disposed of the review petition on 15th January 1949. His final order was to the effect that the Chori Dhip will continue to be the boundary Dbip of the two Akhine, i. e., Balikingri Akhin and Sankhingri Akhin. There was no need of correction of the boundary on the spot and only the maps were to be corrected, if necessary. The order of his predecessor directing Sonaram Nokma to pay compensation to Joran Nokma was also upheld. In effect, the review petition was rejected. The basis of the decision was the admission of both the parties to the Sub-Deputy Collector, who had visited the locality for its inspection, that the Chori Dhip as the boundary Dhip of the two Akhins had been in existence for many years. By reason of this admission, he even revised his intermediate order of 8th September 1948.

[5] The petitioner challenges the order declining to grant the review petition. It has nowhere been stated in the petition nor even by the learned counsel of the petitions during the course of the argument that the admission referred to in the order of 15th January 1949, was not made by the petitioner, or that, if made, it was erroneous and be allowed to be recalled. This admission forms the basis of the decision of the review petition. The original order of the Deputy Commissioner was based on the report of the Sub-Deputy Collector. The order on review is based on an admission of the parties. In these circumstances, there is no basis for interference on the merits.

[6] Rule 31, which requires the Deputy Commissioner to persuade the parties to agree to the arbitration of a Panchayat, will not apply in view of the admission which forms the basis of the decision. If the decision is according to the admission of the petitioner, he can have no grievance and it is not the petitioner's case that no admission was made or that the statement made was misconstrued.

[7] We can discover no valid ground for interference in this case. The petition is dismissed with costs.

ing sale challenged_Starting point.

Where the formal order of confirmation of an execution sale is challenged within 3 years by a petition under Ss. 47 and 151, Civil P. C., the order itself comes into question, and the sale becomes absolute not on the date when the formal order of confirmation was passed but on the termination of the litigation commenced by the judgment debtor for baving the sale set aside.

- for Respondent.

Ram Labhaya J. — This is an appeal from the order of the learned Subordinate Judge, L. A. V., dated 9th February 1949 by which the order of the Sadar Munsiff, Gauhati, dated 4th september 1948, dismissing the application of the auction purchaser for delivery of possession under O. 21, R. 95 was affirmed.

[2] The relevant facts are as follows: The property in suit was sold in execution of a decree on 25th February 1944. The decree-holder was the auction purchaser. The sale was confirmed on 27th March 1944 evidently because no application for setting aside the sale was made within the period of 30 days under R. 89, 90 or 91, Civil P. C. About a year later, on 26th March 1945, the judgment-debtor applied under B. 47 read with S. 151, Civil P. C., to have the sale set aside alleging that the decretal amount had been paid to the decree-holder on 27th March 1944, just four days before the confirmation of the sale. This petition was dismissed on 4th October 1945. The judgment debtor preferred an appeal to the learned District Judge, who declined to interfere. The judgment debtor then sought to have the orders of the Courts below revised. The revision petition was also dismissed on 22nd July 1947, by the Hon'ble the Ohief Justice of the Calcutta High Court. The learned Chief Justice held that the payment or the adjustment between the decree-holder and the judgmentdebtor was an uncertified one and therefore could not be recognised or taken notice of by reason of the provisions contained in O. 21, R. 2, Civil P. C. The decree holder-auction-purchaser applied for delivery of possession on 3rd May 1948, more than three years after the original order confirming the sale, which was passed on 27th March 1944. The petition was resisted by the judgment-debtor on the ground of limitation. The plea has prevailed in the Courts below.

[3] The decision of the appeal turns on the interpretation of Art. 180 of Sch. I, Limitation Act. The article in question provides a period of three years for applications for delivery of possession. The starting point for limitation, according to the article, is the date on which the sale becomes absolute. The learned counsel for the appellant contends that the sale in this case became absolute for purposes of Art. 180, Limitation Act on the date on which the petition of revision was dismissed by the Calcutta High Court. Till then the sale could not have been regarded as final for purposes of limitation as the very finality of the sale was in question. He has relied on Chandramani v. Anarjan Bibi, 38 C. W. N. 901 : (A. I. R. (21) 1934 P. C. 134), a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council. The other cases to which we have been referred to by him are Chhogan Lal v. Behari Lal, A. I. R. (20) 1983 Cal. 311: (147 I. C. 981), Muthu Korakki v. Mahamed Madarammal, 43 Mad. 185: (A. I. R. (7) 1920 Mad. 1 F. B) and Baijnath v. Ramgut Singh, 23 Cal. 775: (23 I. A. 45 P. C.).

[4] In Chandramani v. Anarjan Bibi, 38 C. W. N. 901: (A. I. R. (21) 1934 P. C. 134), the decree-holders were the auction-purchasers. The sales were held on 10th February 1923. The judgment-debtors applied under O. 21, R. 90 to have the sale set aside. The application was dismissed on 15th April 1924 and the sales were confirmed on 22nd April 1924, under O. 21, R. 92. The judgment-debtors appealed to the High Court from the order refusing to set aside the sales. The appeal was also dismissed on 17th March 1927. Sale certificates were duly issued in May and June 1928. On 10th september 1928, the auction-purchasers applied under O. 21, R. 35 for delivery of possession of the properties purchased by them at the auction sales. The application was resisted on the ground of limitation. The Calcutta High Court held that sales became absolute on 22nd April 1924 even for the purposes of Art. 180, Limitation Act and the application for delivery of possession which had been put in on 10th September 1928, was thus barred. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that on the facts of the case before them, the sales did not become absolute within the meaning of Art. 180, Limitation Act until 17th March 1927, and that the application for possession of the properties was not barred by the Act.

[5] The learned counsel for the respondent concedes that if the application for setting aside the sale had been under O. 21, R. 90, Civil P. C. as in the case before their Lordships of the Privy Council, the sale could not have been regarded as confirmed till the final decision of the petition for setting aside the sale. He seeks to distinguish the Privy Council decision on the ground that the application for setting aside the sale in the case before us was not made under R. '89 or 90. It was under S. 47/151, Civil P. C. His contention is that the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council cannot be extended so as to include within its scope applications for setting aside sales which are not covered by O. 21, Civil P. C. We do not think it is possible to make any such distinction.

[6] The decision of the case turns on the interpretation of the word "absolute" occurring in Art. 180, Limitation Act. This meaning could not be different in the two sets of cases. If a formal order confirming the sale under R. 92, Civil P. C., does not make the sale absolute for purposes of Art. 180 if an application to set aside the sale is made by the judgment-debtor under O. 21, R. 90, we do not see how the sale would be absolute if the application for setting aside the sale is made under some other provisions contained in the Civil Procedure Code. Such a distinction would be indefensible in principle. Where the formal order of confirmation is, challenged by a petition under some provision of the Civil Procedure Code the order itself comes into question. If such a petition is madel within three years, the period within which an auction-purchaser must apply for possession under R. 95, Civil P. C., the sale cannot be described as absolute during the period that the petition for setting aside the sale remains pending. The reasoning is equally applicable to applications under R. 90 and application under 8. 47 or 151. On principle, therefore, it is diffi. cult to agree to a distinction between an application of the judgment-debtor for setting aside the sale under O. 21, R. 90 on the one hand, and an application under other provisions of the Code, e. g., Ss. 47 and 151, if they are made within three years from the date of the formal confirmation of the sale. Their Lordships of the Privy Council have not left the matter in any doubt even so far as this question is concerned. The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by Sir Lancelot Sanderson and he observed in the course of the judgment as follows:

"Upon a consideration of the sections and orders of the Code, their Lordships are of opinion that in construing the meaning of the words when the sale becomes absolute in Art. 180, Limitation Act, regard must be had not only to the provisions of O. 21, R. 92 (1) of the Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code, but

It is clear that in construing Art. 180, the provisions of R. 92 and those that relate to appeals from orders under that rule are not the only ones which have to be considered. Regard must be had also to other material sections and orders of the Code. Applications covered by other sections also will have the same effect, therefore, as applications under R. 92 of O. 21 will have. We do not see how a different result could have been arrived at.

[7] Their Lordships overruled Neckbar v. Prakash Nag. 56 Cal. 608: (A. I. R. (17) 1930 Cal. 86) in which it was laid down that the period of three years provided in Art. 180, Limitation Act for an auction-purchaser's application for delivery of possession should be reckoned from the date of the confirmation of the sale under O. 21, R. 92 and not from the date of the final disposal of the judgment debtor's application under O. 21, B. 90. On the other hand they approved of the decision reported in Chhoganlal v. Beharilal, 6 C. L. J. 520: A. I. R. (20) 1933 Cal. 311. In this case also, the application for setting aside the sale was presumably under O. 21, Civil P. C. But relying on Baijnath v. Ramgut Singh, 23 Cal. 775: (23 I. A. 45 P. C.) an earlier decision from their Lordships of the Privy Council, it was held by a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court that it could not be said, when the parties were litigating as to whether the sale should be confirmed or not, that the sale had become final or conclusive. The confirmation of the sale, according to the learned Judges, could be regarded as having taken place from the date when the litigation following upon the application for setting aside the sale terminated, viz., the date of the final decision of the Court in that litigation. It is noteworthy that the ratio of this decision is not limited to applications under O. 21.

[8] In Baijnath v. Ramgut Singh, 23 Cal. 775 : (28 I. A. 45 P. C.), the Board of Revenue had discharged an order of the Commissioner by which a sale by the Collector had been confirmed. The Board afterwards on 21st August 1886. discharged its own order and revived that of the Commissioner. It was held that the confirmation of the sale dated only from 21st August 1886, and that a suit brought in July 1887 to set aside the sale under Art. 12, Limitation Act was not barred. Article 12, Limitation Act provides a period of one year for setting aside sale in pursuance of decree or order of a Collector or other officer of revenue. The period of limitation, according to the Article commences from the date when the sale is confirmed or would otherwise have become final and conclusive had no such suit been brought. Their Lordships did not express any opinion on the question whether the proceedings taken by the parties to stay the confirmation of the sale was such a civil proceeding as is referred to in S. 14, Limitation Act, but laid down that there was no

'final, conclusive and definitive order confirming the sale, while the question whether the sale should be confirmed was in litigation, or until the order of the Commissioner of 25th January 1884, became definitive and operative by the final judgment of the Board of Revenue on 21st August 1886, or (in other words) that for the purpose of the law of limitation there was no final or definitive confirmation of the sale until that date.'

The rule enunciated in this case was the basis of the decision in Chhogan Lal v. Behari Lal, A. I. R. (20) 1933 Cal. 311: (147 I. C. 981) and this decision received the approval of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Chandramani v. Anarjan Bibi, 38 C. W. N. 901: (A. I. R. (21) 1934 P. C. 134). The principle of the decision discussed above does, in our opinion, lead to the conclusion that the sale in the circumstances of the case before us did not become absolute on the date of its formal confirmation but it acquired the attribute of finality on the termination of the litigation commenced by the judgment debtor with a view to having the sale set aside.

[9] The learned counsel for the respondent has put forward another argument. He contends that the judgment-debtor's petition, though purporting to be under S. 47/151, Civil P. C., was not really covered by those sections. It was based on an uncertified payment or adjustment which could not be enquired into or recognised in the course of the execution proceedings. He has relied on Biroo Gorain v. Jainurat Koer, 16 C. W.N. 923: (13 I C. 63), Nanhelal v. Umrao Singh, A.I.R. (18) 1931 P. C. 33: (27 N. L. R. 95) and 38 Cal. 798 (A. I. R. (25) 1938 Cal. 798?) in support of his contention. He has further pointed out that this was the view that prevailed with the learned Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court in the revision petition of the judgment. debtors. These decisions no doubt support the view that a payment or adjustment not certified in accordance with the provision of O. 21, R. 2, Civil P. C., cannot be recognised by a Court executing the decree but this view is no answer to the case set up on behalf of the appellant. The petition of the judgment-debtor was admittedly dismissed for the reason that the payment had not been certified but this petition was entertained. The auction-purchaser was summoned and had to resist it. The litigation was fought in three Courts. Even the revision petition was not dismissed in limine. It was disposed of after a full hearing. During the pendency of the litigation, the auction purchaser could not foresee its final result and could not at any stage say that the sale would become absolute or conclusive. In the language of their Lordships of the Privy Council used in Baij. nath v. Ramgut Singh, 23 cal. 775 on p. 785: (23 I. A. 45 P. C.)

"there was no final, conclusive and definitive order confirming the sale, while the question whether the sale should be confirmed was in higation."

The final dismissal of the judgment-debtor's petition cannot in these circumstances, be allowed to affect the interpretation placed by their Lordships on Art. 180, Limitation Act. This interpretation has the merit of advancing substantial justice. It also avoids hardship.

[10] We are, therefore, of the opinion that for purposes of limitation, the sale in this case became absolute not on the date when the formal order of confirmation was passed but on the termination of the litigation commenced by the judgment debtor for having the sale set aside. The application of the auction-purchaser for delivery of possession, therefore, is not time barred being within three years from the date of the termination of the litigation.

[11] This appeal is, therefore, allowed. The orders of the Courts below are reversed and the case is remanded to the learned Munsiff for disposal of the application for delivery of possession according to law. As an interesting question of law was involved in the case, we leave the parties to bear their own costs in all the Courts.

Second Appeal No. 71 of 1945, 15-3-1949, from judgment and decree of D. J., A. V. D., D/- 6-5-1944.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 11 — Land in suit belonging to temple — T acquiring same by exchange of his land from temple's manager—Land ultimately devolving upon P-G as manager of temple suing P for declaration of temple's title to land and for possession — P setting up adverse possession against temple—Suit dismissed—Issues of adverse possession decided against temple—Land purchased by plaintiff—Suit by plaintiff against G's brother to establish his absolute right to land—Decision in previous suit held was decision against temple and not merely against its manager—Decision held operated as res judicata against defendant.

There is no justification for making a distinction between the manager of a temple and the temple for the purposes of a suit for a declaration of title and possession—a subject which must be considered with reference to the substantive law governing the parties, the Civil Procedure Code and the law of Limitation. [Para 13]

One T acquired the land in suit which belonged to a temple from the then manager of the temple by exchange of his share in the paternal property. The land ultimately devolved upon P who settled some tenants thereon. One G, alleging himself to be the manager of the property having failed to recover rents from these tenants, brought a suit as manager of the temple against P for a declaration of the temple's title to the property in suit and for khas possession. P, denied the title of the temple and set up adverse possession tracing it to T's possession. The suit was dismissed, issue of adverse possession being decided against the temple, and the first and second appeals against the decision were also dismissed. The property was ultimately purchased by the plaintiffs who brought a suit against the brother of G for a declaration that he had acquired an absolute title to the land in suit. The defendant contended that the decision on the issue of the adverse possession in the former suit did not operate as res judicata as against the temple as distinct from the manager of the temple :

Held that in substance the former suit was by the temple suing by its manager even if exception could be taken to the frame of the suit. The judgment in that suit established the fact that the title of the temple to the property in suit had been extinguished by reason of the adverse possession of P, and his predecessors-in-title and the decision in that suit was a decision against the temple and not merely a decision against the then manager of the temple and therefore the decision operated as res judicata against the defendant: A. I. R. (23) 1936 P. C. 183, Foll.

(b) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 144-G, manager of temple, suing P in 1899 for declaration of temple's title to property in P's possession and for khas possession-Decision that temple's title was extinguished by adverse possession of P and his predecessors-in-interest -P thereafter selling property to D, who mortgaged it to S-D's widow selling property to plaintiff - All transfers containing entries "on behalf of temple" - General Register of revenue free estates and jamabandi also containing similar entries - Shortly after purchase, plaintiff getting offending words in jamabani deleted -Defendant, G's brother, getting them restored-Suit by plaintiff to establish his absolute title to property - No inference as to fresh dedication after 1899 held could be drawn from entries-Property held was held adversely to temple by plaintiff and his predecessors-in-interest.

In 1899 one G alleging bimself to be the manager of a temple brought a suit against P for a declaration of the temple's title to certain property in his possession and for khas possessiion. The suit was dismissed it being decided that the title of the temple to the property had been extinguished by adverse possession of P and his predecessors-in-title. P thereafter sold the property to D who mortgaged it to S and ultimately D's widow sold it to the plaintiff in 1911. All these transfers contained an entry which read: "on behalf of the temple". The General Register of revenue free estates and the jamabandi also contained similar entry. Shortly after his purchase, the plaintiff succeeded in getting the offending words in the jamabandi deleted. The words stood deleted from 17th June 1912 till October 1939 when at the instance of the defendant those words were restored. The plaintiff having thereafter sued the defendant who was G's brother, to establish his absolute title to the property it was contended that a fresh dedication after 1899 could be inferred from the several entries and that when so inferred, the transactions amounted to transfers of interest valid for the duration of the office of the then manager of the temple.

Held, none of the entries was capable of being properly construed as giving rise to an inference of a fresh dedication as the plaintiff had no control over the making of the entries in the General Register and the jamabandi and, as to the entries in the transfers, it was reasonable to suppose that they were inserted merely because in the jamabandi, made long before 1899, the words, "on behalf of the temple" were to be found. However, if any inference as to fresh dedication after 1899 were permissible, it was wholly displaced by what the plaintiff did immediately after he purchased the property. The property was therefore held by the plaintiff and his predecessors-in-interest in their own right and adversely to the temple and at no time there was a fresh dedication after 1899 so as to justify the view that the plaintiff had acquired a limited interest valid for the duration of the office of the manager of the temple. Thadani J. — This is a second appeal from the judgment and decree of the learned District Judge, A. V. D., dated 6th May 1944, by which he affirmed the judgment and decree of the trial Court which had decreed the plaintiffs' suit with costs.

[2] The facts material to the appeal are these. There is a temple at Gauhati known as the Baneswar Temple which, according to the plaintiffs, was established as a family temple by one Gangadhar Goswami, ancestor of the defendant, Jibadhar Goswami, in the present suit. The temple stood on Plot No. 979 comprising an area of 3K-16L. To the west of this plot (No. 979) are the old dags Nos. 1774 and 1775 re-numbered as new dags Nos. 978, 1174 and 977 comprising an area of 2B-1K-3L, duly entered in the Lakhiraj Register. This property (2B 1K 3L) was for many years in possession of one Topodhar Goswami who acquired it by exchanging his share in the paternal property situated in North Gauhati with an ancestor of the defendant. Topodhar died in the year 1292 B.S. (about 1885). Topodhar made a will of this property in favour of his grandsons, Umanath and Ratnanath. On the death of Umanath and Ratnanath, the property was inherited by their heir, one Kanakeswar. On the death of Kanakeswar, it was inherited by his heir Praneswar. Praneswar settled some tenants on the land and transferred 1/4th of the area to one Joydev Goswami, retaining the balance in his exclusive possession. The 1/4th share transferred to Joydev Goswami is not comprised in the new dag No. 977, which is not the subjectmatter of the present suit. The property which is the subject-matter of the present suit is comprised in the new dags Nos. 978 and 1174.

[3] Shortly before 1899, one Gopal Goswami, an elder brother of the defendant in the present suit, alleging himself to be the manager of the property in suit, made attempts to recover rents from the tenants settled by Praneswar and Joydev without success. In 1899, he brought a suit (Suit No. 792 of 1899) as manager of the temple against Praneswar and Joydev for a declaration of the temple's title to the property in suit, and khas possession, but failed. The defendants - Praneswar and Joydev - in that suit denied the title of the temple and set up a plea of adverse possession tracing it to Topodhar's possession. Suit No. 792 of 1899 was dismissed on 23rd December 1899. The first and second appeals against the judgment and decree in that suit were also dismissed.

[4] Eight years later in 1907, Praneswar sold the area of 1B 3K.7L belonging to him to one Dwarikanath Roy for Rs. 1000 by a sale-deed, of which Ex. 21 is a certified copy. Shortly afterwards, Dwarika mortgaged this land to one Saratchandra for Rs. 1700 by a mortgage deed,_ of which Ex. 22 is a certified copy. Dwarika died on 4th August 1911 leaving a widow called Ambika Sundari. On 28th November 1911, Ambika Sundari, in order to redeem the mort. gaged property and to discharge other debts contracted by her husband, sold an area of 1B-O-7L to plaintiffs 1 and 2 in the present suit for Rs. 1600 by a registered cale-deed (Ex. 1). For the same reason, she sold the remaining 3K to one Harkanta Goswami, the father of plaintiffs 3 to 7, for Rs. 998 by a registered sale-deed, of which Ex. 28 is a certified copy.

[5] It was the case of plaintiffs 1 and 2 in the present suit that they were in possession of the land in their own right and adversely to the temple since their purchase in 1911; that Harkanta Goswami, the father of plaintiffs 3 to 7 constructed a house on the land purchased by him; that Harkanta Goswami died on 4th May 1939 and his heirs, plaintiffs 3 to 7, erected other valuable houses upon this area; that by reason of their adverse possession, the title of the temple, if it had any, had been extinguished.

[6] The circumstances which compelled the plaintiffs to bring the present suit are these: It appears that in the re-settlement of 1911, the names of plaintiff 1 and Harkanta were entered against the lands in suit with the addition of the words "on behalf of the Baneswar Temple." The plaintiffs objected to these words and the then S. D. O. by his order dated 17th June 1912, ordered the deletion of the offending words, and they stood deleted from the jamabandis from 1912 to 1939. Some time before October 1939, the defendant in the present suit, Jibadhar Goswami, applied to the Deputy Commissioner who, by his order dated 16th October 1939, set aside the order of the S. D. O. and ordered the restoration of the offending words, and directed the plaintiffs to file a mutation case, which they did. The Deputy Commissioner, by his order, dated 21st March 1941, ordered the deletion of the offending words. Against this order, the defendant, Jibadhar Goswami, preferred an appeal to the Revenue Tribunal which, by its order, dated 18th September 1941, referred the plaintiffs to the Civil Court for a decision as to whether or not the plaintiffs had acquired an absolute title to the lands in suit.

[7] The defendants's case is that the land in suit was the subject-matter of a grant by a King of Assam for religious purposes, namely, the maintenance of Baneswar Temple; that the suit was bad for multifariousness; he admitted that Topadhar, during his lifetime, had made a will in favour of his grandsons, Umanath and Ratnanath, but stated that Topodhar himself was a grandson of Gangadbar, the original trustee; that Ratnanath and Umanath and their heirs and successors-in-interest bad, therefore, acquired no right, title or interest in the property. He denied that the property in suit was a paternal family temple, and denied Topodhar and his successors in title had acquired title to the property by adverse possession against the temple, and denied the alleged sale by Praneswar to Dwarika and Dwarika's mortgage to Sarat Dutta, and the subsequent sale by Dwarika's widow Ambikasundari, to the plaintiffs, he further contended that Gopal Chandra Goswami who had brought the suit in 1899, was not a doloi of the temple, and that the decision in suit No. 792 of 1899 was not, therefore, binding upon the temple.

[8] Upon the pleadings, the trial Court

framed the following issues: Is the suit maintainable?

2. Is the claim barred by limitation?

3. Did the plaintiffs or their predecessors-in-interest ever occupy the land in suit adversly to the temple?

4. Have the plaintiffs acquired absolute right and title over the suit land by right of adverse possession ?

5. Is the Baneswer Temple bound by the decisions In the Civil Suit No. 792 of 1899?

6. Whether the question of adverse possession is res judicata between the parties ?

7. To what relief, if any, the parties are entitled ? [9] The trial Court answered Issue 1 in the affirmative. On Issue 2, it held that the suit was not barred by limitation. On Issue 3, it held that the plaintiffs and their predecessors in title were in possession of the land in suit adversely to the temple. On Issue 4, it held that the plaintiffs had acquired an absolute title to the property in suit by reason of adverse possession. On Issue 5, it held that Baneswar temple was bound by the decision in suit No. 792 of 1899. On Issue 6, it held that the question of adverse possession was decided in suit No. 792 of 1899 in favour of the predecessors in title of the plaintiffs and that it operated as res judicata against the parties to the present suit. In the result, it decreed the plaintiffs' suit with costs.

[10] The lower appellate Court, agreeing with the findings of the trial Court on these issues. dismissed the appeal with costs. It formulated the material issues in these terms:

(1) Whether it has been rightly held that S. 11, Civil P. C., can be invoked in bar of the present defence set up by the appellant, and

(2) whether the possession of the plaintiffs and their predecessors-in-title has been rightly construed to be adverse to any interest which the temple ever possessed.

[11] On both the issues, it decided against the defendant and affirmed the judgment and decree of the trial Court.

[12] Mr. Panchanan Ghose for the defendant appellant has contended that the entries in Exs. A and D give rise to a presumption that they were correctly made, that this presumption gives rise to an inference that the property in suit was endowed for a religious or public purpose an inference which is supported by Exs. 1, 2, 3, 8 and 21, that the decision on the issue of adverse possession in the Suit No. 792 of 1899 does not operate as res judicata against the temple as distinct from the manager of the temple, for the following reasons: (a) the transfers made by the manager for the time being of the temple were valid only for the duration of his office; (b) the transferee's interest in the endowed property cannot be put higher than the interest of the manager for the time being who transferred the property, the question, therefore, of adverse possession against the temple can never arise.

[13] We propose to deal with the last contention first. In our view, there is no justification for making a distinction between the manager of a temple and the temple for the purposes of a suit for declaration of title and possession—a subject which must be considered with reference to the substantive law governing the parties, the Code of Civil Procedure and the Law of Limitation. Mr. Ghose's contention is that the Code of Civil Procedure does not permit institution of a suit by the manager of a temple, that it only permits a suit by a temple suing by its next friend who may be the manager, that in a suit brought by a manager on behalf of a temple, any decree passed in such a suit would not be binding on the temple, but on the manager alone.

[14] In rejecting this contention, it is sufficient to say that the plaint in the suit of 1899, as worded, does necessarily lend itself to the interpretation that the suit was brought by the manager on behalf of the temple and not by the temple suing by its manager. The defendants in that suit pleaded adverse possession not only against the manager but also against the temple, and the issue of adverse possession was decided in favour of the defendants and against the temple. In substance, therefore, the suit of 1899 was by the temple suing by its manager even if exception can be taken to the frame of the suit. In any case, we do not think we can seriously consider Mr. Ghose's contention raised in this behalf for the first time 50 years after the decision of the suit of 1899. So far as the present suit is concerned, the manager of the temple was the defendant, and he raised no objection to the frame of the suit. It was not made an issue in the trial Court. The lower appellate Court has not referred to it in its judgment, nor has it been shown to us that it was taken as a ground in the memorandum of first appeal. Moreover, we are satisfied, in view of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council Sm. Daivasikhamani Ponnambala Desikar v. Periyanan Chetti, 40 C. W. N. 901: (A. I. R. (23) 1936 P. C. 183) that Mr. Ghose's contention in this behalf is not well founded. As we propose to make use of their Lordship's remarks in the concluding paragraph of their judgment in the matter of their application to the facts before us, it is convenient to reproduce it here. Their Lordships observed :

"The plaintiffs are in no strong position if they try to repudiate Nataraja as not being de jure the manager this indeed would establish the defendants' case. The question for decision is as to the proper inference to be drawn from these facts - whether it is that the cowle, accepted the cowle rent as payable in respect of a new tenancy which it was in his power either to create for the period of his own managership or to create for a shorter period and to continue from time to time, or whether on the other hand, it is that he accepted it as payable in respect of a permanent right which it was no longer in the power of his temple to repudiate. Their Lordships are of opinion that the latter of these alternatives is the only one, of which the facts permit. There is no doubt that from 1902 until the original Plaintiff in these suits was appointed Receiver in 1917, the position of the cowledgrs in no way altered; their adverse possession under the cowle thus extended over twelve years. The claim to eject the defendants fails In all the suits."

[15] We will now proceed to tabulate the facts of the present case in order to facilitate their consideration with reference to what has been stated by Their Lordships of the Privy Council.

[16] (1). The exact date of the establishment of the Baneswar Temple at Gauhati cannot be ascertained, but, according to the written statement of the defendant in the present suit, it was established by one of the kings of Assam. It may, therefore, safely be stated that the establishment of the Baneswar Temple at Gauhati is a matter of ancient history.

[17] (2). The land in suit was for many years in the possession of Topodbar Goswami before his death, which occurred in 1835, some 63 years ago. Topodbar had acquired the land in suit from an ancestor of the defendant, Jibadhar, by exchange of his (Topodbar's) share in the paternal property situated in North Gaubati.

[18] (2). Before his death, Topodhar made a will, the date of which cannot be ascertained, by which he bequeathed the property in suit to his grandsons, Umanath and Ratnanath, upon whose death, the property devolved upon one Kanakeswar. On the death of Kanakeswar, it devolved upon Praneswar who was a defendant in the suit of 1899. Some time before 1899 (the exact date cannot be ascertained), Praneswar leased the land in suit to tenants and transferred 2K-16L-1th share of the land in suit, to one Joydev Goswami, retaining the remaing area of 1B 3K-7L with himself.

[19] (4). Some time before 1899 (the exact point of time cannot be ascertained), Gopalchandra Goswami, the plaintiff in the suit of 1899, attempted to recover rents from the tenants of Praneswar and Joydev, but failed, as a result of which he brought the suit of 1899 against Praneswar and Joydev for a declaration of the temple's title and recovery of possession. That suit was dismissed, the trial Court holding that the title of the temple had been extinguished by reason of adverse possession of the defendants, Praneswar and Joydev, and their predecessors in title. The first and second appeals preferred against the decision of the trial Court were dismissed.

[20] (5). In 1907, Praneswar sold his $\frac{2}{3}\thermal{th}$ share in the property in suit, which he had retained with himself, to one Dwarika Nath Roy for Rs. 1000: (vide Ex. 21).

[21] (6). During his life-time, Dwarika mortgaged the property he had purchased from Praneswar to one Sarat Chandra for Rs. 1700: (vide Ex. 22). Dwarika died on 4th August 1911.

[22] (7). On 28th November 1911, Ambikasundari, the widow of Dwarika, sold 1B.7L of the land in suit to plaintiffs 1 and 2 for Rs. 1600 in order to redeem her husband's mortgage and discharge other debts (vide Ex. 1). For the same reason, she sold the remaining 3K of the property in suit to one Harkanta Goswami, father of plaintiffs 3 to 7, for Rs. 998: (vide Ex. 23). Plaintiffs 1 and 2 and plaintiffs 3 to 7 were in possession of the property ever since their purchase. Harkanta died on 4th May 1939; upon the death of Harkanta, plaintiffs 3 to 7, his sons, were in possession of the property in suit and continued to be in possession.

[23] The first material point of time in this case is the year in which Topodhar Goswami acquired the property in suit from the ancestor of the defendant by exchange of his paternal share in the property situated in North Gauhati. This exchange took place some years before Topodhar's death which, as we have said, occurred in or about 1885. We will assume that the ancestor of the present defendant who exchanged the property in suit for the property of Topodhar situated in North Gauhati, was not competent to validate the transaction of exchange beyond the duration of his office. The record of the case does not show when the transferor of Topodhar ceased to be the manager of the temple; all it shows is that in 1899 or shortly before 1899, Gopalchandra Goswami, the elder brother of the defendant in the present suit, came upon the scene as manager of the temple. The question which arose in the suit of 1899 was - whether Praneswar and Joydev and his predecessor-intitle were in adverse possession of the property in suit. 12 years before 1899 would take us back to the year 1887. Topodhar died in or about the year 1885. The trial Court in Suit No. 792 of 1899 found that Praneswar and Joydev were in possession of the property adversely to the temple. Whether the decision in the suit of 1899 was right or wrong is not a matter for our consideration. So far as the temple is concerned, the judgment in that suit establishes the fact that the title of the temple to the property in suit had been extinguished by reason of the adverse possession of Praneswar and Joydev and their predecessors in title. Mr. Ghose for the appellant conceded that if the decision of the trial Court in that suit is to be regarded as a decision on the issue of adverse possession against the temple, the decision on that issue would operate as res judicata against the defendant in the present suit. In view of what their Lordships of the Privy Council have said in the case to which we have referred, we do not think it is possible to say that the decision of the issue of adverse possession in the suit of 1899 was not a decision against the temple, but merely a decision against the then manager of the temple.

[24] At an early stage of his arguments, Mr. Ghose realised the significance of the decision of the issue of adverse possession in the suit of 1899 as a serious impediment to his case and, therefore, contended that it was possible to infer a fresh dedication after 1899 on the facts of this case, as evidenced by the entries in Exs. A, D. 1, 2, 3, 8 and 21. Mr. Ghose's contention based upon these exhibits is this: That subsequent to the decision in the suit of 1899, a fresh dedication can be reasonably inferred, and that when so inferred, the transactions evidenced by these exhibits amount to transfers of interest valid for the duration of the office of the then manager of the temple.

[25] The question of proper inferences to be drawn from the factum of a transferee's continuing in possession after the transferor manager has ceased to be in office by death, removal or resignation, was the subject-matter of their Lordships' decision, to which we have referred. For the purposes of drawing proper inferences from the facts of the case before us, the position may be shortly stated thus: A Court of competent jurisdiction decided in 1899 that the title of the temple to the property in question had been extinguished. On this issue, the decision of the Court in the suit of 1899 is clearly binding upon the defendant in the present suit, unless the defendant can establish that subsequent to the decision in the suit of 1899, there was a fresh dedication of the property to the Baneswar Temple. We do not think that any of the exhibits upon which reliance has been placed by Mr. Ghose is capable of being properly construed as giving rise to an inference of a fresh dedication. Exhibit A, dated 8th September 1943, is an extract from the General Register of revenue-free estates in the Assam Valley Districts excluding Goalpara, in which, against the entry "Baneswar Temple, Sudhadhor Goswami Doloi," there is an entry which reads: "3 plots in Panbari Mouza, Gaubati, measuring 2B-4K-19L, Jibadhar Goswami Doloi." Exhibit D is a cerified copy of the jamabandi containing an entry which reads: "Baneswar Devaloy," followed by the words "Topodhar Goswami Kokini, Musalmani, Madhuram Choudhury." Exhibits 1 to 23, contain an entry which reads: "On behalf of the Baneswar Temple."

[26] The lower appellate Court considered these exhibits and did not agree that a fresh dedication could be inferred from them. We ourselves, on a careful consideration of these exhibits, are unable to draw any such inference. As we will presently indicate, if any inference as to fresh dedication after 1899 were permissible, it has been wholly displaced by what the plaintiffs did in the year 1911. So far as Exs. 1 to 23 are concerned, they must be read as a whole, and when so read, we are not prepared to say that the transfers evidenced by these exhibits justify an inference that a fresh dedication was made. It is significant that Mr. Ghose was unable to say by whom and when a fresh dedication was made. We think it is not possible, in view of the events which happended after 1911, to infer a fresh dedication and to regard the transfers evidenced by the exhibits to which we have referred as valid for the duration of the office of the then manager of the temple, merely because the words "on behalf of the temple" occur.

[97] As the lower appellate Court has rightly observed in its judgment, so far as Exs. A and D are concerned the plaintiff had no control over the making of the offending entries. They were made by the revenue authorities. As to the offending words in Exs. 1 to 23, we think it is not unreasonable to suppose that they were inserted merely because in the jamabandi (Ex.A) made long before 1899, the words 'on behalf of the temple" were to be found. Be that as it may, the most convincing answer to any attempt at drawing an inference as to a fresh dedication is to be found in what the plaintiffs did immediately after they purchased the property. Shortly after their purchase, plaintiff 1, and the father of plaintiffs 3 to 7 objected to the offending words in the jamabandi (Ex. D) before the then S. D. O. who, by his order dated 17th June 1912, deleted the offending words which entry stood deleted from 17th June 1912 till October 1939, when the then Deputy Commissioner, by his order dated 16th October 1939, restored the offending words. For 22 years at any rate the plaintiffs were in possession of the property by virtue of their title derived from their purchase from the widow of Dwarika. It is reasonable to suppose that between 1912 and 1939, there would be a manager of the Temple, if there was a fresh dedication after 1899. There is nothing on the record to show that there was a manager of the temple. Indeed, we think there was none for if there was one he would bave resisted the attempts of plaintiff 1 and the father of plaintiffs 3 to 7 to have the offending words deleted. No attempt was ever made by any person alleging himself to be the manager of the temple to bring a suit for possession between 1912-1939. We think, on the facts of the case, it is reasonable to suppose that the temple had resigned itself to the adverse decision against itself, to the adverse decision against its ownership, in the suit of 1899, and it took no further interest in the matter from 1899 to 1939.

(38) The judgment of the trial Court shows that before Gopal Goswami, the temple was managed by his father, Girdhar Goswami. Before Giridhar, his brother, Jatadhar, was the manager. Before Jatadhar, the manager was his brother, Sridhar, Before Sridhar, the manager was his father, Sudhadhar, and before Sudhadhar, the manager was his father, Lakhidhar. Lakhidhar was the eldest son of Gangadhar the original trustee. Gopal Goswami was senior to Jibadhar by some 80 years and at the time of giving evidence in the suit of 1899, Gopal Goswami was 37 years old. Gopal Goswami appears to have died in the year 1926. From October 1912 right up to the year in which Gopal Goswami died, the plaintiffs were undoubtedly in possession of the property in suit as true owners, tracing their title to the transfers made by Praneswar in 1907. Praneswar succeeded in getting a decision in his favour in the suit of 1899 to the effect that the temple's right to the property had been extinguished, and that he and Joydev were the true owners. It is obvious that if an inference as to a fresh dedication is capable of being drawn, it must be capable of being referred to a dedication by Praneswar who had been declared to be the owner of the property in 1899. He alone was capable of making a fresh dedication, having acquired title to the property in suit by a decision of a competent Court in suit No. 792 of 1899, on the issue as to adverse possession.

[29] Far from dedicating the property to the temple, Praneswar, the only person who could dedicate the property, transferred the property to Dwarikanath Roy, and the widow of Dwarikanath Roy transferred the property to the plaintiffs in the present suit. These transfers are wholly inconsistent with the inference which Mr. Ghose has invited us to draw from the offending entries. Moreover, the plaintiffs in 1912 succeeded in having the offending words in the jamabandi deleted, and for a period of 27 years thereafter they were in possession of the property in their own right to the exclusion of the temple or the manager of the temple. There is no evidence that Gopal Goswami or his brother, Jibadhar, the defendant in the present suit, ever collected rents from the plaintiffs or their tenants. Such evidence as was attempted to be given in this behalf has been rejected by the Courts below. Indeed, having regard to the facts and circumstances of this case, it is impossible that the plaintiffs or their tenants could ever have paid rent or other consideration to the defendant in the present suit.

[80] The acquisition of the property in suit by Topodhar, by exchange of his share in the paternal property in North Gauhati with an ancestor of the defendant, and Topodhar's bequest in favour of his grandsons and the devolution of the property in suit on succession to the heirs of Topodhar's grandsons until it devolved on Praneswar who transferred it to Joydev and Dwarika, and the sale of the property in suit to the plaintiffs in 1911 by Dwarika's widow all point to one conclusion that the property in suit was held by Topodhar and his successors in interest in their own right and adversely to the temple, and that at no time there was a fresh dedication after 1899, so as to justify the view that the plaintiffs had acquired a limited interest valid for the duration of the office of the manager of the temple.

[31] In this view, the plaintiffs' suit has been rightly decreed by the Courts below and we see no reason to interfere with the judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court.

Annotation: ('49 Com.) Cr. P. C., S. 297, N. 13. K. R. Barman, Government-Advocate for the Crown. Thadani C. J. — This is an appeal from jail preferred by one Muklesur Rahman and Habibur Rahman who were convicted by the learned Sessions Judge, A. L. D., under S. 304, Part II, read with 8. 34, Penal Code, upon a trial held with the aid of a jury. Agreeing with the unanimous verdict of the jury, the learned Judge found the two accused guilty and sentenced the accused Muklesur Rahman to rigorous imprisonment for five years, and Habibur Rahman to rigorous imprisonment for four years, under S. S04, Part II, read with S 34, Penal Code.

- [2] We admitted the appeal to hearing in order to satisfy ourselves whether S. 84, Penal Code, was applicable in point of law to a case when the accused persons are convicted and sentenced under S. 304, Part II read with S. 34, Penal Code.
- [3] The question of common intention is a question of fact, which was properly dealt with by the learned Sessions Judge in his summing up to the Jury, and we, therefore, accept the existence of a common intention within the meaning of S. 34, Penal Code, as a fact, which undoubtedly was a matter for the jury alone to decide.

[4] The question whether in point of law. S. 34, Penal Code, applies to a case when accused persons are charged with and found guilty under S. 301, Part II, Penal Code, came up before a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Ibra Akanda v. Emperor, A. I. R. (31) 1944 Oal. 889 : (45 Cr. L. J. 771). Lodge and Das JJ. differed, Khundkar J., agreed with Lodge J., and referred to the case reported in Adam Aliv. Emperor, 31 C W. N. 314: (A. I. R. (14) 1927 Cal. 324: 28 Cr. L. J. 334), in which the following observations were made :

"There is yet another objection to the charges and verdict. It is that S. 34, which is based on a common intention, cannot possibly be used with Part 2 of S. 304, which expressly excludes intention. Personally I do not think that it could be used with Part 1 either, except possibly in very rare cases. However, the point is that the jury have found the accused guilty of committing culpable homicide by doing an act with the knowledge that they were likely to cause death but without any such intention in furtherance of a common intention. It is the badly framed charge and the defective summing up that have led the jury to their illogical verdict."

With reference to these observations, Lodge J.

"With great respect to the learned Judge, I am not quite able to discover whether he did or did not discuss it or give any reason for his decision. But it is clear from a perusal of the judgment that the learned Judge decided the case upon other considerations and that the decision of that case did not depend on the interpretation of S. 34. The learned Judge's remarks, therefore, on the applicability of S. 34 to S. 304, Part 2, may be considered as obiter dicta Though the question of the true interpretation of S. 84 has been considered in many reported cases, in the majority of those cases, the term "criminal act" was examined and the Courts did not attempt to explain the meaning of the phrase in furtherance of the common intention of all . . . In the result, therefore, I hold that there is no difficulty in applying Ss. 34 and 35 to cases of culpable. homicide punishable under S. 304 (2)."

[6] With respect, we think, the view taken by Lodge and Khundkar JJ, is right. It is to be observed that the common intention contemplated by 8. 34 is anterior in time to the commission of the crime, and does not refer to the time when the act is committed. If, on the facts of a particular case, it is proved that the common intention of two or more persons was to cause death of a person, and in furtherance of the common intention, an act was done by one which caused the death of a person, we do not think there is any difficulty in applying S. 34, whether the conviction is recorded under S. 304 (1) or S. 304 (2), Penal Code.

[6] The result is that the appeal is dismissed.

[7] Ram Labhaya J. - I agree with my Lord the Chief Justice in the conclusion that the appeal may be dismissed.

[8] The learned Government-Advocate has relied on Ibra Akanda v. Emperor, A. I. R. (31) 1944 Cal. 339: (45 Cr. L. J. 771), for showing that there is not difficulty in applying S. 34, Penal Code to cases covered by S. 304, Part II, Penal Code. In this case on a difference arising between Lodge and Das JJ., the matter was placed before Khundkar J., under the provisions of S. 429, Oriminal P. C.

[9] Lodge J. was firmly of the opinion that there was no difficulty in applying Ss. 34 and 35 to cases of culpable homicide punishable under S. 204, Part. II (see p. 345). Das J., on the other hand, was emphatic in the expression of the view that Part. II of S. 304 expressly excludes intention and could not possibly be read with S. 34, Penal Code. These views represented the two extremes of a very vexed question.

[10] Khundkar J., it appears, could not agree with any of these views. His conclusion stated in his own words is as follows:

"It follows that, as already Indicated, I cannot concur with my brother Das in the view that the principle of S. 34 can never be applied to an offence punishable under the second part of S. 304."

the words "common intention" occurring in S. 34 a meaning varying with the facts of each case. In his view "common intention" referred to in S. 34 could not be given a constant connotation. It varied with the facts of each particular case. In this view of the matter, he could not hold that S. 34 could never be applied to an offence punishable under S. 304, Part II. He, however, made certain observations which considerably reduced the scope of the applicability of S. 34 to cases falling under S. 304, Part II His observations are as follows:

"Before I leave this subject, however, I cught to add that I am inclined to indore the observations of Henderson J., that in actual fact, cases in which the principle enunciated in S. 34 can be applied to an offence punishable under Part II of S. 304, are not of very frequent occurrence. Cases of the type out of which the appeals here dealt with have arisen, are really cases in which the offence committed is in fact murder punishable under S. 302. In order to allay the qualms of juries who, in this province, are notoriously averse to returning affirmative verdicts on capital obarges, Judges frequently go to artificial lengths, in leaving open an avenue to a verdict-under S. 304, Part II, when the evidence shows that it is either murder or nothing.

[12] These observations show that cases which could be appropriately placed under 8. 804, Part II, read with 8. 34 would be found to be rare in actual life even if full effect is given to the view of Khundkar J. The statement that Judges by their charge make it possible for the juries to return a verdict under 8. 804, Part II in order to get over the difficulty created by the disinclination of the juries to return a verdict on capital charges under 8. 302 is unfortunately very true and the present case is typical of the attitude of Judges in this respect. A conviction in the present case under 8. 302 or 8. 304, Part I, would obviously have been more appropriate. The charge suggested the possibility of the application of 8. 304 Part II, where in fact it was not applicable. The error, therefore, has been not in the application of 8. 304, Part II.

[13] The misdirection in these circumstances has not prejudiced the accused, and there has been no miscarriage of justice. The appellants on the other hand became entitled to lenient treatment. In this view of the matter, there is no basis for interference in this case and it is not necessary to examine the question of principle whether S. 34 can under any conceivable circumstances be applied to cases falling under S. 304, Part II.

Revenue Appeal No. 37 of 1948 (H. C.), D/- 25th November 1949, against order of Deputy Commissioner, Cachar, D/- 27th August 1948.

Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (I [1] of 1886), S. 147 (b)—Order issuing non-renewal notice to an annual patta-holder or directing him to show cause why he should not be prosecuted under S. 193, Penal Code, is not an order within S. 147 (b) and, therefore, not appealable. [Para 2]

N. M. Dam — for Appellant. J. C. Sen — for Respondents.

Judgment. — This is an appeal against an order passed by the learned Deputy Commissioner, Cachar, dated 27th August 1948. The order is in these terms:

"The existing settlement with Rafiquddin is termina-ted by service of non-renewal notice.

Regarding some false statements made by Rafiquddin in this affidavit, he is to show cause why he should not be prosecuted under S. 193, Penal Code, for making false statements on oath before a Magistrate."

[2] It is admitted by Mr. Dam that under cl. (b), S. 147, Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, 1886, an appeal lies from any order, original or appellate, passed by a Deputy Commissioner of a District. Neither Para. 1 of the order in question nor Para. 2 constitutes an order within the meaning of cl. (b) of S. 147. Admittedly, the appellant is an annual pattaholder and under the terms of the settlement, Government has the right to give a non-renewal notice of the annual patta to the patta-holder that the patta will not be renewed for the following agricultural year. A non-renewal notice is sued to an annual patta-holder is not an order passed within the meaning of S. 147 (b), Assam Land and Revenue Regulation: nor is the Rule issued to the appellant to show cause why he should not be prosecuted under S 193, Penal Code, an order within the meaning of S. 147 (b).

[3] The result is that the appeal is dismissed with no order as to costs.

Criminal Misc. Case No. 16 of 1949, D/-24-1-1950.

Administration of Police and Justice in the Naga

Hills District Rules, R. 22 — Transfer of criminal case from Naga Hills District under S. 526, Criminal P. C.—Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 526.

There is nothing in the rules framed for the administration of police and justice in the Naga Hills District by which the High Court of Assam can transfer a criminal case pending in one of the Courts in the Naga Hills District to a Court outside that District. The language of R. 22 which enjoins that the procedure shall be in the spirit of the Code of Criminal Procedure limits the rule by the words "as far as it is applicable to the circumstances of the district." The rule cannot, therefore, be held to empower the High Court to transfer a case either in terms of the Code or its spirit for it is plain that S. 526 applies to the facts and circumstances of the case and not to the circumstances of the district. [Para 7]

D. R. Das, R. K. Chaudhuri and B. N. Chaudhuri
-for Petitioner.

K. R. Barman, Govt. Advocate - for the Crown.

Thadani C. J.—This is an application under the provisions of S. 526, Criminal P. C., praying for the transfer of Case No. C. R. 10 of 1949 pending in the Court of the Magistrate, 1st Class, Kohima, Naga Hills, against one Sri Ram Saran Kashyap under S. 420, Penal Code.

- [2] The case is sought to be transferred on the ground of the convenience of the parties. It is stated in the petition that the accused resides in Calcutta; the journey from Calcutta to Kohima is a long and troublesome one and requires frequent changes and takes several days; that of the 10 prosecution witnesses, 6 reside in Calcutta, 3 in Shillong, and the remaining witness in New Delhi.
- [3] We had occasion to consider the question of transfer of a criminal case pending before a Magistrate of Kohima in the Naga Hills District in the case of one Krishna Prasanna Chakravarty. In our judgment, which is reported in Krishna Prasanna v. Jan Mahammad, A.I.R. (36) 1949 Assam 69: (51 Cr. L. J. 147), we observed:

"The Governor of Assam is empowered by S. 6, Scheduled Districts Act, 1874, to prescribe rules for the administration of justice and police in the Naga Hills District. It is not disputed that Kohima where the two complaints have been instituted is situated in the Naga Hills District. Rules 15 to 22 of the Rules framed by the Governor of Assam in pursuance of S. 6, Scheduled Districts Act of 1874, appear to us to exclude the operation of the Criminal Procedure Code."

[4] We referred to the terms of S. 1, Orimi-nal P. C., which is in these terms :

"..........(2). It extends to the whole of British India, but in the absence of any specific provision to the contrary, nothing herein contained shall affect any special or local law now in force, or any special jurisdiction or power conferred, or any special form of procedure prescribed by any other law for the time being in force, or shall apply to:

(a) the Commissioner of Police in the towns of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay or the Police in the towns of Calcutta and Bombay;

(b) heads of villages in the Presidency of Fort St.

George, or

(c) Village Police Officers in the Presidency of Bombay: provided that the Local Government may, if it thinks fit, by notification in the Official Gazette, extend any of the provisions of this Code, with any necessary modifications, to such excepted persons."

[5] We then examined the scheme of the Rules framed for the Administration of Justice and Police in the Naga Hills and stated:

"It is manifest that Rr. 15 to 19 framed under the Act of 1874, to which we have referred, do not prescribe any procedure for the trial of criminal offences. Sections 20 and 21 deal with the right of appeal and the Governor-General's prerogative of reviewing the proceedings of the Governor of Assam. It is common ground that the powers which the Governor of Assam exercised before the establishment of the High Court of Assam have since been conferred on this High Court. But the powers conferred on this Court are undoubtedly limited in their extent to the powers which the Governor of Assam himself could have exercised under the rules framed under the Act of 1874.

We cannot find anything in the rules framed by the Governor of Assam which authorises the Governor of Assam to transfer a criminal case pending in one of the Courts of the Naga Hills District to a Court outside the Naga Hills District It is plain that as the Governor of Assam himself had no power to transfer a case from a criminal Court in the Naga Hills District to a Court outside that district in the Province of Assam, this Court which is enabled to exercise such powers only as the Governor of Assam should have exercised, is not competent to transfer the cases to a Court at Dibrugarh, a place outside the Naga Hills District We think the words 'in the spirit of the Code of Criminal Procedure' used in R. 22 are not to be interpreted in a manner so as to enable this Court to apply the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure to the trial of offences in the Naga Hills District, when the operation of the Code to the administration of justice in the Naga Hills District is excluded by rules framed under a special enactment, namely, the Act of 1874."

[6] Mr. Das for the petitioner has contended that the Scheduled Districts Act of 1874 has been omitted by the Adaptation Order of 1937, and that as the decision of this Court was based upon the interpretation of R. 22 framed under the Scheduled Districts Act of 1874, the decision arrived at in Krishna Prasanna v. Jan Mahammed, (A. I. B. (36) 1949 Assam 69: 51 Cr. L. J. 147), should not be regarded as an impediment to revising our view, so as to enable us to make an order of transfer under the provisions of 8. 526, Criminal P. C. While it is true that the Scheduled Districts Act of 1874 has been omitted by the Adaptation Order of 1937, never. theless there is a Regulation called the Naga Hills (Administration of Justice and Police) Regulation, 1947, dated 10-10-1947, which retains the provisions of R. 22 of the Rules framed for the Administration of Justice and Police in the Naga Hills District framed under the Act of 1874. Mr. Das, on being satisfied that R. 22 is still in force, contended that even so, R. 22 which enables this Court to invoke the spirit of the Code of Criminal Procedure, empowers us to make an order of transfer from the Naga Hills District to any other district in the Province of Assam. Rule 22 is in these terms:

"22. The procedure of the Governor of Assam, the Commissioner, the Deputy Commissioner and his Assistants shall be in the spirit of the Code of Criminal Procedure as far as it is applicable to the circumstances of the district and consistent with these rules; the chief exceptions are:

(a) Only verbal order or notice shall be requisite, except when the regular police are employed or the person concerned is not resident or in the district at the time; or, if in the district, but resident beyond it, where his place of abode is not known. The order shall be made known to the person affected or to some adult member of his family, or proclaimed at the place he was last known to be at, in sufficient time to allow him, if he see fit, to appear.

(b) A note of the substance of all the proceedings in cases tried before them must be kept by the Deputy Commissioner and his Assistants as required by S. 264, Oriminal P. C. In cases requiring a sentence exceeding three years, a full note of the evidence and proceedings must be kept. Examinations and proceedings shall generally be recorded in English only.

(c) The proceedings of the Mauzadars, gaonburas, chiefs, headmen of khels or other duly recognised village authorities need not be in writing.

(d) All fines levied by the mauzadars, gaonburas, chiefs, headmen of khels, or other duly recognised village authorities shall be paid to the Deputy Commissioner or his Assistants or other officer empowered to receive them, within eight days from the date of realisation, unless they are immediately paid to the aggrieved party as compensation.

(e) It shall be discretionary to examine witnesses on oath in any form, or to warn them that they are liable to the punishment for perjury if they state that which they know to be false.

(f) No pleader shall be allowed to appear in any case except with the special permission of the Deputy Commissioner. The term 'pleader' includes 'mukhtar' or any other professional agent recognised by the Court. Such permission shall always be granted when the application is to appear on behalf of a person accused of murder. For the defences of paupers accused of murder, Rr. 19 to 21 of the Assam Law Department Manual, Part II, Criminal Rules, shall be followed mutatis mutandis."

[7] The language of R. 22 is, however, significant. While enjoining that the procedure shall be in the spirit of the Code of Criminal Procedure, it limits the Rule by the words "as far as it is applicable to the circumstances of the district", as distinct from "as far as applicable to the circumstances of the case". If the words had been "as far as it is applicable to the circumstances of the case", the interpretation sought to be put by Mr. Das might have been of some assistance to him. If the procedure shall be in the spirit of the Code of Criminal Procedure as far as it is applicable to the circumstances of the district, and not to the circumstances of the case, we cannot see how R. 22 would empower this Court to transfer a case either in terms of the Code of Criminal Procedure or its spirit, for it is plain that S. 526, Criminal P. C. applies to the facts and circumstances of a case, and not to the circumstances of the district.

[8] We find it, therefore, difficult to take a different view to the one which we took in the case of Krishna Prasanna v. Jan Mahammed, A. I. R. (36) 1949 Assam 69: (51 Cr. L. J. 147).

[9] The result is that the application fails and is dismissed.

B. A. No. 34A of 1948, D/- 19-1-1950.

(a) Municipalities—Assam Municipal Act (I [1] of 1923), S. 320— Applicability—Suit for malicious prosecution against municipality—Period of notice—Exclusion of—Limitation Act (1908), Ss. 15 (2), 29 (2) and Art. 23.

Per Ram Lahbaya J.— Section 320 covers a suit for malicious prosecution against a municipality and is subject to S. 15(2), Limitation Act by virtue of S. 23(2), Limitation Act as the operation of S. 15 (2) has not been excluded by anything contained in the Assam Municipal Act. Hence, in computing the period of limitation prescribed by S. 320 (2), the plaintiff is entitled to exclude the period of one month's notice prescribed by S. 320 (1): A. I. R. (19) 1932 Bom. 259, Rel. on.

Per Thadani C. J. — Section' 320 has no application to a suit for damages for malicious prosecution inasmuch as malicious prosecution is not something done under but outside the Act. Such a suit is governed by Art. 23, Limitation Act. [Para 25]

Annotation: ('42 Com.) Limitation Act, S. 15 N. 19; S. 29, N 4; Art. 23 N. 7.

(b) Municipalities—Assam Municipal Act (I [1] of 1923), S. 236 — Prohibition of offensive trade without defining limits.

Section 236 merely authorises the Board to define limits within which certain dangerous or offensive trades may be carried on. The municipality can merely regulate certain trades by defining the areas where they may be carried on within municipal limits. If the municipality merely imposes a fee for carrying on such a trade without defining any limits as regards locality, the action of the municipality would defeat the very purpose of the section and would be ultra vires its powers under the Act. [Para 14]

(c) Tort - Malicious prosecution - Burden of proof-Essential facts to be proved.

The plaintiff in order to succeed in a suit for damages for malicious prosecution has to prove, (1) that he was prosecuted by the defendant, (2) that the proceedings complained of terminated in favour of the plaintiff if from their nature they were capable of so terminating, (3) that the prosecution was instituted against him without any reasonable or probable cause, (4) that the prosecution was instituted with a malicious intention, that is, not with the mere intention of carrying the law into effect or in furtherance of justice but with some indirect or improper motive. [Para 15]

(d) Tort — Malicious prosecution — Absence of reasonable and probable cause — Legal malice when to be inferred.

In a particular case it may be possible to infer improper motive from the obvious or the apparent illegality of the action taken. But it is not in every case that because there is absence of reasonable or probable cause for a prosecution that a Judge would be justified in inferring malice. Where there is something more to indicate the existence of indirect or improper motive besides the mere absence of reasonable or probable cause, a finding that the prosecution was malicious would be justified.

(e) Tort—Malicious prosecution — Damages — Chairman of municipality bona fide demanding license fee from plaintiff in accordance with its resolution—Prosecution of plaintiff for failure to take out license— Discharge — Municipality in demanding fee acting outside its powers under Act—Held there was absence of reasonable and probable cause for prosecution — Municipality not actuated by any indirect or improper motive other than furtherance of justice or vindication of the law in prosecuting—Held, there being absence of malice, claim for damages was not maintainable. A. I. R. (19) 1932 Bom. 259, Disting.

(f) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 41, R. 33 — Power to reverse decree against respondent who has not appealed.

Where a suit for malicious prosecution against a municipality and its Chairman in his official capacity is decreed by the trial Court and the decree is reversed in appeal by the municipality alone on a ground common to both the defendants the appellate Court can also reverse the decree against the respondent Chairman who has not appealed. [Para 22]

Annotation: ('44-Com.) Civil P.C., O. 41 R. 33 N. 6. B. C. Barua and S. C. Chaudhury - for Appellant.

J. C. Sen-for Respondents.

Ram Labhaya J.— This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of damages on account of the alleged malicious prosecution of the plaintiff by defendant 1, the Chairman of the Tinsukia Municipal Board, and defendant 2, the Board itself. The learned Munsiff of Dibrugarh found that the suit was not within time though the prosecution of the plaintiff at the instance of the defendants was without reasonable and probable cause. He inferred malice from the absence of reasonable and probable cause. The suit, however, was dismissed as barred by time.

[2] On appeal, the learned Additional Subordinate Judge held that the suit was within time. He agreed with the other findings arrived at by the learned Munsiff and as a result decreed the plaintiff's claim with costs against defendants. The Tinsukia Municipal Board (defendant 2) has appealed.

[3] In appeal both the findings arrived at by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge have been assailed. The first contention relates to the question of limitation. It is urged that the suit was barred by time. The plaintiff was prosecuted for not taking a license for the storage of lime. He was discharged on 11th December 1946. The suit was instituted on 20th March 1946. It is pointed out that under S. 820, Assam Municipal Act, the suit should have been instituted within three months from the date of the accrual of the cause of action and this not having been done it is therefore barred by time. The plaintiff, however, claims that he is entitled to add to the period of three months allowed to him by S. 320, Assam Municipal Act the period of one month's notice which he was bound to give to the defendant before being able to institute the suit. If this period of one month is allowed to him, the suit would be within time. The question, therefore, is whether the period of notice can be added to the period of limitation allowed by S. 320, for the institution of a suit against the Municipal Board or any of its officers.

[4] Section 320 provides that:

"No suit shall be brought against any Board or any of its officers, or any person acting under its direction for anything done under this Act, until the expiration of one month next after notice in writing has been delivered or left at the office of such Board."

In cl. (2) it provides that:

"Every such action shall be commenced within three months next after the accrual of the cause of action, and not afterwards."

It is obvious that one month's notice was a necessary prerequisite for the institution of the suit. This is common ground. The controversy is on the second clause of the section which allows three months for the institution of the suit. The period of time allowed for the suit is again undeniably three months. The question is how this period is to be computed or whether in computing this period of three months, the period of notice is to be excluded from computation or not.

[5] Section 320, Assam Municipal Act covers all suits against the Board or any of its officers for anything done under the Act. The suit for malicious prosecution would be covered by it. This is not disputed. The period provided for such a suit is only three months. The Indian Limitation Act provides a different period of limitation for suits for damages or compensation for malicious prosecution.

[6] Section 29, cl. (2), Limitation Act, provides

"Where any special or local law prescribes for any suit, appeal or application a period of limitation different from the period prescribed therefor by sch. 1, the provisions of S. 3 shall apply, as if such period were prescribed therefore in that schedule, and for purpose of determining any period of limitation prescribed for any suit, appeal or application by any special or coal law—(a) the provisions contained in S. 4, Ss. 9-18, and S. 22 shall apply only in so far as, and to the extent to which, they are not expressly excluded by such special or local law."

[7] Section 820, Assam Municipal Act does provide for a period of limitation different from that provided in the Indian Limitation Act for suit, for compensation for malicious prosecution. If Ss. 9.18 apply, S. 320 would be read subject to S. 15 (2), Limitation Act which embodies a general provision to the effect that in computing the period of limitation prescribed for any suit of which notice has been given in accordance with the requirements of any enactment for the time being in force, the period of such notice shall be excluded. The general rule will not be applicable if as laid down in S. 29 (2) the special or local law prescribing a period of limitation different from that provided in Sch. 1, Limitation Act, expressly excludes the application of S. 15. Now, whatever may be said of the implications of S. 320, it certainly does not in express terms exclude the operation or application of S. 15 or other sections of the Limitation Act which would apply by virtue of 18. 29, Limitation Act. The learned counsel for the appellant has referred us to the language of ol. (2) of S. 320, Assam Municipal Act, which is as follows:

(8) He points that the words "and not afterwards" would show that the Legislature intended that the plaintiff suing a Municipal Board had only three months from the date the cause of action accrued. No suit could be instituted afterwards. The implication of the requirement, he argues, would be that notice of one month must be given within this period and that it cannot be added to the period of suit. We do not think such an intention can be attributed to the Legislature. It cannot be gathered from the language of the clause under consideration. It merely provides a period of limitation in emphatic language. It does not deal with the principles or rules governing the computation of the period. It is in its nature like the clauses of Sch. 1, Limitation Act by which periods of limitation for different kinds of suits are laid down. The Assam Municipal Act is admittedly not exhaus. tive so far as the statement of the law of limitation is concerned. It does not embody a complete code of limitation. Where therefore it specifies or prescribes a period for a suit, the method of computing that period would be regulated by the general rules laid down in the Limitation Act for that purpose unless it is expressly laid down to the contrary. The learned counsel himself finds it difficult to contend that the application of S. 15 (2) has been expressly excluded. It was held in Chhagan Lal v. Thana Municipality, A. I. R. (19) 1932 Bom. 259 at p. 266; (56 Bom. 135) that

"express exclusion is clearly exclusion by specific words in that behalf and not by a process of logical reasoning or implication from the words of the special or local law."

In that case a provision (S. 167, Bombay District Municipal Act) analogous to S. 320, Assam Municipal Act was being considered. The provision laid down the period of notice first and then laid down the period of six months for suits against the Board. The arrangement of the section was held not to imply necessarily that the period of notice was not to be excluded in computing the period of limitation. The learned Judges relying on Banga Chandra v. Kailash Chandra, A. I. R. (7) 1920 Cal. 325; (58 I. O. 189) and Rewarchand Fatehchand v. Karachi Municipality, A. I. R. (17) 1930 Sind 93; (24 S. L. R. 344), held that:

"Section 167, Bombay District Municipal Act was subject to S. 15 (2), Limitation Act and a plaintiff instituting a suit for damages for malicious prosecution against the Municipality was entitled to exclude the period of one month's notice from the period of limitation prescribed by S. 167, for the suit."

(9) I am in full agreement with this view and hold that S. 320, Assam Municipal Act is subject to S. 15 (2), Limitation Act as the operation of S. 15 (2) has not been excluded by anything contained in the Assam Municipal Act. The plaintiff, therefore, is entitled to exclude the period of one month when computing the period for this suit. In this view of the matter the suit is not time barred.

[10] The second point pressed is that the prosecution of the plaintiff by the Municipal Board has not been proved to be malicious and that no case has been made out for any award of damages. Facts bearing on the question may be briefly stated.

[11] The Tinsukia Municipal Board by its resolution, dated 16th May 1946, resolved that a license fee of Rs. 25 be imposed for the storage of lime. The resolution was to take effect from 1st April 1946. The Chairman of the Board (defendant 1) sent a notice to the plaintiff on 24th June 1946, demanding Rs. 25 as license fee for storage of lime under S. 239, Assam Municipal Act. The plaintiff informed the Chairman on 1st July 1946, that he was not manufacturing any lime and may be exempted from the levy. The Chairman again by his letter No. 459, dated 16th July 1947, directed him to pay the fee of Rs. 25 and take a license. The plaintiff pleaded by his letter, dated 28th July 1947, that S. 239 of the Municipal Act had no application to his case. On this, the Chairman of the Board again informed the plaintiff that the tax for the stor. age for lime had been levied by the Board under 8. 236 of the Municipal Act, and that if he failed to pay it, action would be taken against him even though he was not manufacturing lime. The plaintiff re-iterated his view of the law that 236 could not apply to his case as he was not manufacturing lime. In his view mere storage of lime for sale was not such as act to which S. 236 could apply. He, therefore, intimated to the Chairman that in case be was prosecuted, both the Chairman and the Board would be liable in damages.

[12] A complaint was lodged against the plaintiff. Summons were issued in the first instance and later in order to procure his attendance, a warrant of arrest had to be issued. The Magistrate ultimately held that the action of the Board in levying a fee for the storage of lime was not covered by S. 236 of the Act. He found that the demand was not legal, and discharged the plaintiff on 11th December 1946. Plaintiff now alleges that the prosecution was malicious and claims damages in consequence.

[13] The resolution of the Tinsukia Munici. pal Board was passed at a meeting of the Board on 16th May 1946. A similar resolution was passed by the Dibrugarh Board on 16th April 1946. The resolution of the Tinsukia Board states that the Board has considered the Deputy Commissioner's letter No. 1567-9, dated 23rd February 1945 as also letter No. 150, dated 26th April 1946 from the Chairman of the Dibrugarh Board. Fees for a number of trades were fixed by this resolution. The storage of lime was one of the several items covered by the resolution. The letter from the Deputy Commissioner as also the letter from the Chairman of the Dibru. garb Board, which are referred in the resolution, have not been placed on the record and their contents are not known. It has, however, been proved that the Dibrugarh Municipality also imposed a fee on the storage of lime by its resolution, dated 16th April 1946.

[14] When prohibiting the storage of lime within municipal limits without a license, the Board purported to act under S. 236. This section does lay down that within such local limits as may be fixed by the Board at a meeting no place shall be used without a license for certain purposes specified in the section. Manufacture of lime is one of such purposes. But it is not denied from the side of the defendants that plaintiff was not manufacturing lime when the resolution in question was passed. He was merely storing it for sale. Storage for sale is obviously not the same as its manufacture. The learned counsel for the appellant has not contended that storage for sale of lime can be covered by the words "manufacture of lime." The only other clause which may be relied by the defendant (appellant) is the one which deals with a business from which offensive or unwholesome smell may arise. It is not contended that stored lime would give rise to unwholesome smell but it is suggested that the business may be regarded as offensive. Assuming that storage of lime for sale can possibly by regarded as an offensive trade within the meaning of 8. 236, the Board could only define limits within which storage of lime for sale may not take place without a license. A Board would be exceeding its powers if it prohibited the storage of lime anywhere within the municipal limits without a license, for the question whether a trade is offensive has a very obvious connection with the locality in which it is carried on. If lime is stored far away from the habitation where no one is residing in the neighbourhood, the storage of lime may not offend unless offence is sought by going to the place. It is obviously for this reason. that S. 236 merely authorises the Board to define limits within which certain dangerous or offensive trades may be carried on. The Municipality can merely regulate certain trades by defining the areas where they may be carried on within municipal limits. If the Municipality merely imposes a fee for carrying on such a trade without defining any limits as regards locality, the action of the Municipality would defeat the very purpose of the section. The principle underlying the section is that dangerous or offensive trades may be at such places that their dangerous or offensive character ceases to be a source of risk or inconvenience to the people residing within municipal limits, but it is recognised that the trades covered by the section though dangerous or offensive can be carried on within municipal limits. When the Board prohibited the storage of lime without defining the limits within which this trade could be carried on, it exceeded its powers and completely lost sight of the purpose underlying the section. It also fixed a fee of Rs. 25 for a license to store and sell lime. Under cl. (2) of S. 59, Assam Municipal Act, the scale of fees in respect of the issue and the renewal of a license which may be granted by the Board under the Act if it does not amount to a tax covered by cl. (1) of the section must be with the approval of the appropriate higher authority before the fee becomes chargeable. There is no allegation that the necessary approval of the higher authority was obtained in respect of the fees fixed by the resolution of 16th May 1946. In the absence of any allegation and in view of the fact that if such approval had been obtained it could have been easily proved, no presumption can be made in favour of the Board on this point. The basis of the suit was that the prosecution was malicious or, in other words, the action of the Municipality was actuated by some indirect motive. Considerable emphasis was also laid on the illegality of the action taken by the Municipality. In spite of this no effort has been made to show that the fees levied were approved by competent authority. In these circumstances, the fee was not legally recoverable and the plaintiff could not have been prosecuted for his failure to obtain a license on payment of the prescribed fee. The complaint against the plaintiff was without re. asonable and probable cause for reasons given above.

[15] The Courts below have inferred malice from the absense of reasonable and probable cause and it is here that they have fallen into an error. The plaintiff in order to succeed in a suit for damages for malicious prosecution has to prove (1) that he was prosecuted by the defendant, (2) that the proceedings complained of terminated in favour of the plaintiff if from their nature they were capable of so terminating, (8) that the prosecution was instituted against him without any reasonable or probable cause, (4) that the prosecution was instituted with a malicious intention, that is, not with the mere intention of carrying the law into effect or in furtherance of justice but with some indirect or improper motive. This was so held in Balbhad. dar Singh v. Budri Sah, 80 C. W. N. 866: (A. I. R. (18) 1926 P. O. 46), relied on by the learned counsel for the appellant and in Ram Chandra v. Krishna Rao, 32 Bom. 259: (10 Bom. L. R. 279) relied on by the learned counsel for the respondent.

[16] It is apparent that the learned counsel are agreed on the question of principle and it is not necessary to consider authorities bearing on the point in any considerable detail.

proved the necessary ingredients which go to make a prosecution malicious. He was no doubt prosecuted. The prosecution terminated in his favour. He was discharged. We have also come to the conclusion that there was absence of reasonable and probable cause. The first three requirements of the rule stated above do stand satisfied. The question that remains to be considered is whether the elements of malice or the existence of some indirect motive or intention other than the mere intention of carrying law into effect has been made out by direct evidence or can be inferred from facts and circumstances proved in the case.

[18] From the facts proved in this case, it appears that the only objection raised by the plaintiff to the demand from the Board was that the storage of lime was not such a trade to which S. 296 could be applied. The objection came after the resolution of the Board when the demand was made. In making the demand, the Chairman was acting in conformity with the resolution of the Board. The Board was influenced in passing the resolution by letters from the Deputy Commissioner and from the Chairman of the Dibrugarh Municipal Board. A similar resolution imposing license fee for storage of lime was passed by the Dibrugarh Municipal Board also. The Chairman in view of the fact that the Board had passed the resolution after considering letters from the Deputy Commissioner and the Chairman of the Dibrugarh Municipal Board disregarded the protest from the plaintiff. The objection from the plaintiff cannot be regarded as something that was apparent. There was room for difference of opinion. A Municipal Board could honestly though erroneously believe that it could regulate storage of lime for sale treating as a trade which may give offence. The plaintiff has not suggested that there was any personal hostility against him from any quarter or that any member or employee of the Municipal Board had any motive to cause him injury. Malice, in point of fact, was not alleged.

[19] What remains to be seen is whether legal malice or the existence of some indirect or improper motive can be inferred from the proved facts of the case. Now, all that has been proved is that the demand by the Board was not legal and plaintiff was not bound in law to meet it. His refusal to pay did not amount to any offence under the Municipal law. His prosecution in these circumstances was without reason. able and probable cause. It is noteworthy, however, that the only point on which plaintiff resisted the demand was that the sale of manufactured lime was not such a trade to which 8. 236, Municipal Act could apply. The reasons on which we have come to the conclusion that the prosecution of the plaintiff was without reasonable and probable cause did not occur to the plaintiff and it seems that they were notbrought to the notice of the Chairman. They have been brought out in the course of the present suit. We are thus asked to infer malice or the existence of some indirect motive other than the vindication of law or the furtherance of justice from the solitary circumstance that the Chairman ignored the interpretation of S. 236 which plaintiff placed on it and which subsequently was accepted in the criminal Court. We do not think that it necessarily follows from this circumstance that the Chairman and even the Board were actuated by any indirect motive. The Board was influenced in its decision by the example of the Dibrugarh Municipality. There was also the Deputy Commissioner's letter. The Board passed a resolution dealing with several trades including the storage of lime. The Chairman felt bound to give effect to the resolution of the Board inspite of the fact that plaintiff differed from the Board in its interpretation of S. 236. We think there was some room for difference of opinion, particularly in the circumstances under which the resolution of the Board was passed. These do not leave any doubt as to the bona fides of the Board. The object was not to victimise a trade or any individual. The Chairman could not disregard the resolution and the difference of opinion between the Board and the plaintiff could only be resolved in a Court of law. We do not discover any basis for the belief that the Chairman or the Board had any indirect motive in prosecuting the plaintiff. The resolution of the Board has been found to be in excess of its powers. The Board also fail. ed to obtain the approval of the higher authority as regards fees it imposed for license. These sins of omission and commission do not necessarily lead to the inference that the Board was actuat. ed by malice in instituting criminal proceedings against the plaintiff. Mistakes as to the limits of jurisdiction are not rare even in the legal atmosphere where Judges have trained lawyers to assist them. Municipal Boards are dominated by laymen generally. The chances of honest mistakes are greater. The Board in this case did not take legal advise. But failure to take advice may at the most imply carelessness on the part of the Board, particularly when it was following another Board in the action that it took. The action of the Board may even be regarded as hasty or rash. It may be suggestive of excessive enthusiasm in the furtherance of municipal purposes but it does not give any indication of indirect motive. If malice could be inferred from the illegal nature of the action alone, the task of Municipal Boards would be rendered extremely difficult. In a particular case it may be possible to infer improper motive from the obvious or the apparent illegality of the action taken. But it is not in every case that because there is absence of reasonable or probable cause for a prosecution that a Judge would be justified in inferring malice. Where there is something more to indicate the existence of indirect or improper motive besides the mere absence of reasonable or probable cause, a finding that the prosecution was malicious would be justified.

[20] Mr. Sen has urged that legal malice or the existence of indirect motive was inferred in Chhagan Lal v. Thana Municipality, A. I. B. (19) 1932 Bom. 259 : (56 Bom. 135), even though there was no direct evidence on the point. That case is easily distinguishable from the present case on facts. It was found in that case from the evidence of municipal servants that facts on which the prosecution was based did not exist to their knowledge and that the conduct of the plaintiff (in that case) would not bring him within any penal clause of the Act. The Board had consulted its legal adviser but did not follow his advice. Besides, malice in point of fact was alleged and Baker J. in delivering his judgment summed up his conclusion in that case in the following words:

"The cumulative effect of all these circumstances beginning with the fact that the Municipality, who must be presumed to have special knowledge of the circumstances, based their action on a wrong interpretation of law and on facts which did not exist, that some of the plaintiff's applications were admittedly kept back, and some of the alterations which he is charged as having done without permission were done after the conclusion of the criminal proceedings, can only lead to the inference that there was some indirect motive other than the desire to vindicate the law in the prosecution of the plaintiff."

[21] Nanavati J. the other learned Judge composing the Division Bench, went even further. It did not seem to him improbable that the General Board itself was influenced by the desire to get cheaply the plaintlff's land for widening the street. It is obvious that the learned Judges did not infer malice from a mere wrong interpretation of law. There were circumstances in the case which strongly suggested the existence of an improper motive. We do not find anything in common between the facts proved in the two cases and do not feel justified in holding on the facts of this case that an indirect or improper motive other than furtherance of justice or the vindication of the law prompted the prosecution of the plaintiff. The claim for damages, therefore, must fail.

the Board as also against the Chairman of the Board as also against the Board itself. The appellate decree was against both the defendants. The Board alone has appealed. The Chairman is a respondent. The learned counsel for plaintiff respondent has pointed out that the decree has become final against the Chairman and cannot now be disturbed he not having appealed. We do not think this decree should stand even against the Chairman. The trial Court held that the Chairman had been sued not in his personal capacity but in his capacity as a Chairman. This finding was not disturbed in appeal. The decision of the appellate Court proceeds on a basis common to both the defendants. Malice was not attributed to the Chairman in his personal capacity. There is no basis for making any distinction between one defendant and the other. We, therefore, decide to reverse the decree against both the defendants acting under O. 41, R. 33, Civil P. C.

(23) The result is that the appeal is allowed; the order of the lower appellate Court is reversed and plaintiff's suit dismissed against both the defendants. In view of the findings arrived at by us, we leave the parties to bear their own costs in all the Courts.

[24] Thadani C. J. - I agree in the result, but would add a few words.

[26] In my opinion, S. 320, Assam Municipal Act has no application to a suit for damages for malicious prosecution, for the plain reason that malicious prosecution is not something done under the Act; indeed, if anything, it is something done outside the Act. A suit for damages for malicious prosecution is governed by Art. 23, Limitation Act.

[26] I am content to allow the appeal on the simple ground that the plaintiff has failed to prove malice, without going into the question whether the Board exceeded its powers in prohibiting the storage of lime without defining the limits within which this trade could be carried

Second Appeal No. 1554 of 1947, D/- 16-1-1950.

(a) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 54 - Sale of right of redemption.

Ram Labhaya J.—The mortgagor's right to redeem, where property is in the possession of the mortgages, is intangible property and its sale, even where the value of the property is less than Rs. 100, can be effected only by a registered instrument and not by delivery of possession.

[Para 18]

Thadani C. J. contra — Sale of property by the mortgager which he had given in an usufructuary mortgage is a sale of tangible property and can be effected in favour of the mortgages in the case of property of the value of less than Rs. 100 by delivery of possession, if the change in the character of possession can be fairly regarded as delivery of possession.

B. C. Barua - for Appellant.

P. Chaudhuri and J. C. Medhi - for Respondent.

Ram Labhaya J. — This appeal arises out of a redemption suit which was decreed by the trial Court. Plaintiff was granted a decree for possession without payment of any money as the defendant (mortgagee) having remained in possession for over 12 years from the date of the mortgage was held not entitled to any mortgage money by reason of provisions contained in the Assam Moneylenders' (Amendment) Act 1943.

(2) On appeal, the learned Additional Subordinate Judge giving effect to the defendant's plea held that mortgaged land had been sold to the defendant mortgagee on 23rd December 1934 in consideration of the mortgage loan and one bigha of the land which the mortgagee had transferred to the mortgagor and that the mortgage had been extinguished by conduct of the parties. As a result of this finding he dismissed the plaintiff's suit. He has come to this Court on second appeal.

[3] The land in suit was mortgaged to defendant-respondent by registered mortgage deed. The mortgage was for Rs. 500 and for a period of three years. Possession was handed over to the mortgagee who was to pay the land revenue. The mortgager agreed to pay the money within the stipulated period of three years and agreed further that on his default the mortgagee would be entitled to enjoy the land as security for the money. But he reserved to himself the right to get the land released on payment of the money.

[4] The defence set up was that on plaintiff's failure to repay the loan of Rs. 500 within the stipulated period fixed in the mortgage deed, plaintiff sold the mortgaged land to the mortgagee in consideration of the mortgage debt and a bigha of defendant's land which was transferred to the plaintiff. Reliance was placed on certain copies of Chitha, Exs. (b) and

(c) and endorsements on these documents. These endorsements show that on the basis of plaintiff's admission to the effect that the mortgaged land had been sold to the defendant, land was mutated in the name of the mortgagee in possession. Since then defendant-respondent has remained in possession.

[5] The correctness of the order of the learned Subordinate Judge has been assailed on the ground that there was no valid sale either of the land or of the equity of redemption and plaintiff was thus entitled to the redemption of the property and his right of redemption was not lost or extinguished. If land was sold for a consideration of Rs. 500 plus one bigha of land, the sale could only be by a registered document. An oral sale followed by a mutation would not confer any valid title on the vendee. If the transaction is treated as a sale of the 'right to redeem or the equity of redemption' then too the sale was of intangible property and could be made only by a registered instrument. In either case, therefore, there was no sale by which the right of redemption could be extinguished or destroyed.

[6] In support of the contention that a sale of the equity of redemption is a sale of intangible property, the learned counsel relied on Hushmat v Jamir, 23 C. W. N. 513 : (A. I. R. (6) 1919 Cal. 325), Ramasami v. Chinnal Asari, 24 Mad. 449, Mathura Prasad v. Chandra Narayan 48 I. A. 127: (A. I. R. (8) 1921 P. C. 8) and on the dissenting judgment of Sulaiman J. in Sohanlal v. Mohanlal, 50 ALL. 986: (A. I. R. (15) 1928 ALL. 726 F. B.). The learned counsel for the respondent contended, relying on Pir Bakhsh v. Mangal, 16 P. R. 1892 F. B. and Pitambar Khemji v. Rajaram, 60 Bom. 220: (A. I. R. (23) 1936 Bom. 175) that what was sold was the right to redeem the property in consideration of one bigha of the land. The sale was of tangible property and as the plaintiffappellant had not shown that it was for more than Rs. 100, the sale was valid. He further pointed out that such delivery of possession as was possible in the circumstances of case had been effected and no registered deed was necessary to complete the sale.

[7] The case of the defendant in the trial Court was that the land was sold to him in consideration of the original debt and a bigha of land. In Pir Bakhsh v. Mangal, 16 P. B. 1892 F. B., where occupancy rights in land which had been mortgaged for Rs. 400 were sold absolutely on payment of a further sum of Rs. 99 by the mortgagee, a Full Bench of the Punjab Chief Court held on a true construction of the document the sale was of the equity of redemption for a sum of Rs. 99. The Bombay case Pitambar Khemji v. Rajaram, 60 Bom. 220, also lends support to this view. The contrary view was however, expressed in a Calcutta case Barsik Nandi v. Gurudas Pal, 46 C. L. J. 573: (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Cal. 107) where it was held that a sale by a mortgagor of all his right and interest in the immoveable property subject to the mortgage, in consideration of the mortgagee foregoing his right to recover the mortgage debt and the interest thereon, must be registered where the mortgage debt exceeded one hundred rupees even though the value of the mortgaged property was less than one bundred. I am inclined to the view which prevailed with the Full Bench of the Punjab Chief Court. The mortgagor can sell only his right to redeem when the property is under a mortgage. In essence the sale is of his existing interest in the property. He cannot sell what he himself does not own or possess. His right is compendiously described as the right to redeem, or the equity of redemption. The sale in this case, therefore, would really be that of the equity of redemption.

[8] This leads us to the question whether sale of the equity of redemption is sale of tangible or intangible immoveable property. The learned counsel for the respondent emphasises that the right to redeem, which is also described as the equity of redemption is tangible property and its sale is covered by S. 54, cl. (3), T. P. Act, which provides that in the case of tangible immoveable property of the value of less than one hundred rupees, the transfer may be made either by a registered instrument or by delivery of property. He urges that the requirement of the section as regards delivery was satisfied by the mutation proceedings to which the plaintiff was a party. The word 'tangible' has not been defined in the Act. The section appears to divide immoveable property into three categories, viz., (1) tangible immoveable property of the value of Rs. 100 and upwards, (2) reversion or other intangible things and (3) tangible immoveable . property of a value of less than Rs. 100.

[9] Reversion and other intangible things are also treated as immoveable property. In the case of tangible immoveable property of the value of Rs. 100 and upwards and also in the case of a reversion or other intangible things, the sale only can be made by a registered instrument. So far as the third category is concerned, viz., tangible immoveable property of a value of less than Re. 100 the transfer may be made either by a registered instrument or by delivery of property. The manner in which delivery of tangible immoveable property is to take place is also specified in the section. It is effected when the seller places the buyer, or such person as he directs in possession of the property.

[10] The word 'tangible' occurring in the section, according to its dictionary meaning connotes something perceptible to touch. It follows, therefore, that it should be capable of being touched. It should admit of possession or that it should be capable of being possessed. It should be such that it could be delivered by one person to another. It is for this reason that in this class of cases delivery of property or change of possession is taken as a substitute for regis. tration. In the case of a mortgage where the mortgagee is in possession, the mortgagor has no right to immediate possession or enjoyment of the profits of the property. He can recover possession only on payment of the mortgage money. His right is not capable of being touched or possessed. Its possession cannot pass. A trans. fer of the right of redemption is the transfer of a right in property as distinguished from the property itself. The property is in the possession of the mortgagee. The mortgagee can sell his right and can part with possession. He can deliver it to his transferes. When selling mortgagee rights, he is selling something tangible. Similarly, a mortgagor who has borrowed money on the security of the property but is having the property in his possession, may sell the property and may deliver it. He is then selling the property and delivering its possession. It is tangible property then. But a mere sale of the right to redeem cannot be regarded as a sale of tangible immoveable property if the word 'tangiable' is taken in its literal or dictionary sense and no other meaning can be given to it in the absence of any definition of the word by the Legislature. This was the meaning assigned to the word 'tangible' by Sulaiman J. in Schanlal v. Mohanlal, 50 ALL, 986 : (A. I. R. (15) 1928 ALL. 726 F.B.). The view also finds support from Hushmat v. Jamir, 23 C. W. N. 513: (A. I. B. (6) 1919 Cal. 825) and Ramasami v. Chinnal Asari, 24 Mad. 449.

[11] In Hushmat v. Jamir, 28 O. W. N. 513: (A. I. R. (6) 1919 Cal. 825), land was mortgaged to the defendant on the stipulation that he was to remain in possession for a fixed period in satisfaction of the debt and interest. Subsequently the mortgagor sold one out of two plots mortgaged to the defendant and thus paid off the mortgage and took back the other plot. The sale was by an unregistered document. The mortgagor sued for the recovery of possession. It was held that the property being in possession of the mortgagee, the sale was of the equity of redemption and being a sale of an intangible thing, could under S. 54, T. P. Act, be effected only by a registered document. Walmsley J. was further of the view that the sale was nevertheless ineffective for want of delivery of possession. Bhashyam Ayyangar J., also gave expression to the same view vide: Ramawami v. Clainnal Asari, 24 Mad. 449 on p. 463

[12] The learned counsel for the appellant has also referred us to the observations of Viscount Finly in Mathura Prasad v. Chandra Narayan, 48 I. A. 127: (A. I. R. (8) 1921 P.C. 8). The observations relied on appear on page 132 of the report and are as follows:

"Their Lordsnips cannot accept the suggestion made on behalf of the appellants that for the purposes of S. 54, some sort of constructive possession resulting from the delivery of the alleged instrument of transfer might be sufficient. For this purpose there must be a real delivery of the property."

(13) The learned counsel has argued that their Lordships distinguished constructive possession from actual delivery which S. 54 insists on. He derived support from these observations for showing that a thing which was not capable of delivery, could not be regarded as tangible.

[14] The above view did not find favour with the majority of learned Judges composing the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Sohan Lal v. Mohan Lal, 50 ALL. 986: (A.I.B. (15) 1928 ALL. 726 F.B.) The majority view was followed in Phequ Mian v. Syed Ali, 15 Pat. 772: (A. I. B. (24) 1937 Pat. 178) and in Tukaram v. Atmaran, A.I.B. (26) 1939 Bom. 31: (I.L.B. (1939) Bom. 71).

[15] In the Allahabad case, the mortgage was usufructuary. It was for a sum of Rs 1000. A deed of sale was executed in respect of the mortgaged property by the mortgagor in favour of the mortgagee for a sum of Rs. 90. The deed was not registered. After the death of the mort. gagor, bis beir professed to sell the properties to the plaintiffs in that case. They brought a suit for redemption. The learned Judges were of the view that it was not necessary to determine the nature of the property which was transferred subsequently by the mortgagor's heir. But as the question whether a mortgagor's estate is tangible immoveable property or an intangible property had been debated at the Bar, they thought it proper to say something on the point. The remarks, therefore, are obiter. The majority view was that the owner of immoveable property who has parted with some of his rights in the shape of mortgage and lease remains still the owner of the property. There can be no objection to this view. The mortgagor no doubt retains ownership of the property even after be has mortgaged it with possession to someone else. The learned Judges then proceeded to hold that if the mortgagor makes a transfer of his interest, he makes a transfer of the property itself and not merely of an abstract right or of certain rights out of his total bundle of rights originally owned by him. With great respect to the learned Judges, I find it difficult to agree with this view. The mortgagor can only transfer his right and interest which he has at the time of sale. He cannot sell anything more. When considering whether a sale is of tangible immoveable property or intangible immoveable property, the right and interest of the seller on the date of the sale is to be considered. That would be the determining factor. The mortgagor sells his interest and his interest is merely the right to redeem. It may not be confused with the equity of redemption though it is often described as the equity of redemption. The right of redemption is a legal right in India. This right is heritable as well as alienable. If sold, the transferee gets the right to redeem the property on payment of the mortgage money. The right of redemption may be owned by the transferee but it cannot be possessed as land or a house or other admittedly tangible property can be. I can discover no warrant for the proposition that a mortgagor who may be described as the owner of the property without the right of immediate possession when selling his right is selling the property. An owner may agree to a curtailment of his right by agreement and where such a curtailment of right has occurred by a transaction of mortgage or lease, the owner merely sells the residue of ownership which is still his. In this view of the matter there can be no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the sale of a mortgagor's estate or his right to redeem is no more than the sale of something intangible.

[16] The learned Judges pointed out a difficulty which would arise if this view was accepted. They pointed out that in the case of a simple mortgage, the mortgagor would sell tangible property and in the case of a usufructury mortgage, the mortgagor would sell something intangible. This distinction they thought could not be made on principle. The mortgagor in the two cases could not be in a different position. Far from being a difficulty in the case, it seems to me that the interests of the mortgagor in the two cases are distinct and they cannot be placed in the same group or class. In a simple mortgage, the mortgagor has got possession of the property. He may sell the property and he may deliver its possession. A tangible thing passes by such transaction but the same cannot be said in the case of the right of a mortgagor who has given his property to another by way of mortgage with possession.

[17] The Patna and the Bombay cases do not give new or different reasons for the view that a mortgagor's estate even when the property is in the possession of a mortgagee is tangible immoveable property within the meaning of section 54.

ments on both sides I feel no hesitation in adopting the view that the mortgagor's estate or his right to redeem where property is in the possession of a mortgagee is something intangible and its sale is possible only by a registered instrument. In this view of the matter, it is not necessary to consider whether the delivery of possession has taken place in this case as required by law. The property being intangible could not be validly transferred by mere delivery of possession even assuming that it did take place in the manner required by law.

[19] A second contention raised by the learned counsel for the respondent was that the vendee in this case was protected by the provisions contained in S. 53A, T. P. Act. We find no force in this contention. Section 53A applies only in cases where a person contracts to transfer for consideration any immoveable property by writing signed by him or on his behalf. In thiscase the transaction is admittedly oral. There is no written agreement and the mere admission of the mortgagor before the revenue authorities even though in writing cannot be regarded as a written contract between the parties. The statement also does not give all the terms of the transfer. Even the consideration is not mentioned. The case, therefore, does not fall within the ambit of Section 53A.

[20] The third contention was raised somewhat faintly. It was to the effect that following the mutation in defendant's favour a patta was issued in his favour by the revenue authorities under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation and this patta amounted to a settlement which could not be challenged in a civil Court. Reliance was placed on S. 154 (1) (a) of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, which debars civil Courts from exercising jurisdiction if questions as to the validity or effect of any settlement or as to whether the conditions of any settlement are still in force are raised. This section comes into operation only if there is no express provision in the regulation to the contrary. Section 39 of the Regulation is such a provision and affords a complete answer to the contention. This section provides that no person shall, merely on the ground that a settlement has been made with him, be deemed to have acquired any right to or over any estate, as against any other person claiming rights to or over that estate. If, therefore, a settlement was granted to the defendants and they had no legal right in the property, it would be competent to the civil Court not only to declare the title of the plaintiff but also to put him in possession by ejectment of the defendant. This was the view taken in Askar Mian v. Sahed Ali, 23 C. W. N. 540 : (A. I. R. (5) 1918 cal. 21) and I entirely agree with it. It was in view of the language of S. 39 of the Regulation and the decision in Askar Mian v. Sahed Ali, 23 C. W. N. 540: (A. I. R. (5) 1918 Cal. 21), that the learned counsel did not press the point ceriously.

[21] The last contention was that the mort. gage in this case is not usufructuary and therefore it is not hit by the provisions contained in the Assam Moneylenders' (Amendment) Act, 1943. The contention is sound. The mortgage in this case is anomalous. It was for a period of three years. The possession was given to the mortgages but there is a provision to the effect that if the mortgagor failed to pay the mortgage money within the stipulated period of three years, the mortgagee would be entitled to enjoy the mortgage land as security for the money. A covenant to pay the mortgage money exists in the mortgage deed. It is there in express terms or at least by necessary implication. The mortgage, therefore, is a combination of a usufructuary and a simple mortgage and as such can only be described as anomalous. The plaintiff, therefore, cannot redeem the property without payment of the mortgage money. The case does not fall under S. 5 (2), Assam Moneylenders' (Amendment) Act of 1948 which covers usufructuary mortgages only. The result is that though plaintiff is entitled to redeem, he cannot do so without paying the mortgage money.

[22] In my opinion, therefore, the plaintiff can be given a decree for redemption on payment of the mortgage money. In the circumstances of the case I would leave the parties to bear their own costs.

[23] Thadani C. J .- This is a second appeal from the judgment and decree of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge, A.V.D., dated 21st January 1947, by which he set aside the judgment and decree of the trial Court which had decreed the plaintiff's suit for redemption, with no order as to costs.

[24] The plaintiff-appellant brought a suit for redemption of the property in suit, mortgaged with possession to the defendant-respondent by a registered deed, dated 16th February 1928. The appellant sought to redeem the mortgage with. out payment in virtue of the provisions of the Assam Moneylenders' (Amendment) Act of 1948, and further made a claim for Rs. 100 as meene profits.

[25] The defence to the suit was that the mortgaged property was sold to the defendant in 1934 in terms of the mortgage-deed which provided that the property will stand transferred to the mortgagee as owner on the failure of the mortgagor to discharge the mortgage debt within the stipulated period.

[26] On the pleadings, the trial Court framed the following issues:

1. Did the plaintiff validly sell the mortgaged fland on 27th January 1936 and if so, has the plaintiff lost the right of redemption?

2. Is the plaintiff entitled to the meane profits claimed?

3. Is the suit bad for misjoinder of causes of action? 4. To what other relief is the plaintiff entitled ?

[27] As a result of its findings, the trial Court decreed the appellant's prayer for redemption of the mortgaged property, but did not award to the plaintiff mesne profits.

[28] The lower appellate Court, however, came to the conclusion that having regard to the documentary evidence adduced by the mortgagee, such as Exs. B C B (2) and C (1), the mortgagee had succeeded in proving that delivery of the property was made to him in pursuance of a contract to sell the property in suit. The lower appellate Court stated that Ex. B (1) shows that the mortgagor sold 6B. OK. 2L, the subject matter of the mortgage, to the mortgagee, and the recital contained therein empowered the mortgagee to get a patta in his own name for this land; Ex. B (2) shows that the mortgagor sold this land to the mortgagee, and the Mandal who wrote the endorsement, Ex. B (2), has supported the mortgagee's case that Ex. B (2) was written at the instance of the mortgagor. It also relied upon the fact that the revenue authorities. partitioned the lands covered by the patta in 1936; the mortgaged lands were taken out from the mortgagor's patta and entered in the patta of the mortgagee; that the Sub-Deputy Collector entered the names in the mutation register in accordance with the partition in consultation with the mortgagor and the mortgagee. The lower appellate Court also relied upon the fact that the sale included not only the mortgaged land but one bigha, which was not the subjectmatter of the mortgage, and this was later in 1936 partitioned with the consent of the mortgagor and delivery of the partitioned property consisting of the mortgaged land and the one bigha which was not the subject matter of the mortgage, was made to the mortgagee in pursuance of the partition.

[29] Two questions arise for decision in this appeal: (1) Whether the right to redeem is tangible or intangible property? (2) Whether the delivery of the property agreed to be sold was on the facts of this case made within the meaning of S. 54, T. P. Act? These were the only questions pressed before us, the value of the property agreed to be sold as being of the value of less than hundred rupees not being disputed: either in the Courts below or before us.

[80] The Allahabad High Court in Schon Lal v. Mohan Lal, 50 ALL. 986: (A. I. R. (15) 1928 ALL. 726 F. B.) had occasion to consider these questions. All the three learned Judges were agreed that there could be no delivery of possession within the meaning of S. 54, T. P. Act, in respect of property agreed to be sold by the mortgager to the mortgagee while the property was held by the mortgagee under a usufructuary mortgage. But on the question whether the right to redeem was tangible or intangible property, Mukerji and Kendall JJ., took the view that "the sale by a mortgagor of his interest in property of which he has made a usufructuary mortgage, is a sale of 'tangible immovable property."

Sulaiman A. C. J., made a distinction between a simple mortgage and a usufructuary mortgage, and took the view that in the case of usufructuary mortgage, the mortgagor had no right to immediate enjoyment of the property and observed:

"A mortaged property itself is undoubtedly 'tangible', but the interest of the mortgagor in the property, when the mortgage is usufructuary, is not identical with the property itself, as some interest has already passed to the mortgagee, including the right to remain in possession and appropriate the profits. The interest which the mortgagor possesses is not itself capable of being touched nor is it such that an actual delivery of its possession can be effected by the mortgagor to the mortgagee. It seems difficult to conceive of a thing as being tangible when it is not capable of actual delivery of possession. Although, therefore, the mortgagor is the legal owner of the usufructuarily mortgaged property, whatever rights he possesses, so long as the mortgage subsists, cannot be treated as 'tangible' No case has been cited before us where it has ever been suggested that the interest of a mortgagor in the case of a usufructuary mortgage is 'tangible' immovable property. On the other hand, there are numerous authorities to the effect that such an interest is 'intangible.' Rahmat Ali v. Mahomed Mazar Hasan, 11 A. L. J. 407 at pp. 409-10: (19 I. C. 818); Ramasami Pillai v. Chinnan Asari, 24 Mad. 449 (463); Mahendra Bahadur Singh v. Chandra Pal Singh, 24 O. C. 155: (A. I. R. (8) 1921 Oudh 124) Hushmat v. Jamir, 52 I. C. 558: (A. I. R. (6) 1919 Cal. 325).

[31] It is plain that Sulaiman A. C. J., was influenced by the fact that no authority had been brought to his notice in which it held that a right to redeem a usufructuary mortgage is 'tangible' property. A few years later in 1936, the Patna High Court had occasion to consider this question in Pheku Mian v. Syed Ali, 15 Pat. 772: (A. I. R. (24) 1937 Pat. 178). Khaja Mohamad Noor J., delivering the judgment of the Division Bench, observed:

"Taking up the first point, namely, whether the right left in a mortgagor after he gives his property in usufructuary mortgage, is an intangible or a tangible property, the learned Advocate has referred us to a decision of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Hushmat v. Jamer, 23 Cal. W. N. 513: (A. I. R. (6) 1919 Cal 325). Where it was held that the sale of equity of redemption which was an intangible thing could, under S. 54, T. P. Act, be effected only by a registered document." "On the other hand, there is a decision of a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Sohan Lall, v. Mohan Lal. 50 All 986: (A. I. R. (15) 1928 All 726) where Mukerji and Kendall, JJ. held that the sale by a mortgagor of his interest in the property which he has given in usufructuary mortgage, is the sale of a tangible immovable property. Now the term 'equity of redemption' is a remnant of the old doctrine of English law where the mortgagor after having mortgaged his property lost all legal rights therein and the only right which was left to him was the equitable right of redemption which he could enforce only in equity Courts. This distinction of legal and equitable rights was never recognised by the Indian Legislature where the right of both the mortgagor and the mortgagee in a mortgaged property is a legal right determined by the statute. Strictly speaking, in India the term 'equity of redemption' is misapplied to the right of the mortgagor. Under the Indian law, mortgage is a transfer of interest in an immovable property and not a transfer of the property itself. There is some interest left in the mortgagor and that interest is in the tangible property."

[32] Khaja Mohamad Noor J. then quoted with approval a passage in the judgment of Mukerji J. in the case reported in Sohan Lal v. Mohan Lal, 50 ALL. 986: (A. I. R. (15) 1928 ALL. 726 (FB.). The passage reads:

"In the case of a mortgage in England, as pointed out by that crudite jurist, Holland, the mortgagee, from the date of the mortgage, becomes the 'legal' owner of the property and nothing is left in the mortgagor except what has been called 'a bare equity of redemption'. The Indian Legislature has intentionally refused to import the expression 'equity of redemption', and for ample good reasons. It had, however, to use the expression 'right to redeem' (see S. 60, T. P. Act). But the expression has been used in an entirely different sense. A 'right to redeem' is not the same thing as 'an equity of redemption' in England. In India, a host of people, besides the mortgagor himself, are allowed to exercise the right of redemption (see S. 91, T. P. Act). One of these persons is a judgment-creditor of the mortgagor. Certainly, the interest of a judgment-creditor of the mortgagor and the interest of the mortgagor himself in the property mortgaged are not indentical. It would, therefore be very wrong to substitute the expression 'right to redeem' for the English expression of 'equity of redemption', and then to say that the 'right to redeem' possessed by a mortgagor is an intangible property."

[33] Khaja Mohamad Noor J., then referred to the case of Dawood Saheb v. Moideen Batcha Sahib, A. I. R. (12) 1925 Mad. 566: (87 I. C. 331) in which it is stated:

The position has changed even in England since the passing of the Law of Property Act, 1925. The mortgagee no longer holds a legaliestate in the mortgaged property. The mortgagor is the owner at law. On the whole, I am inclined to agree with the view taken by the majority of the Judges of the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court which seems to be more in consonance with the conception of the rights of a mortgagor and a mortgagee according to the Indian law. Therefore, in my opinion, the right of a mortgagor in the property which he has given in usufructuary mortgage, is a legal right in a tangible immovable property."

[34] Yet in another case reported in Tukaram v. Atmaram, A.I.B. (26) 1939 Bom. 31: (I. L. R. (1939) Bom. 71), Broomfield J., in delivering the judgment of the Division Bench, observed:

"Prior to this Full Bench Case Sohan Lal v. Mohan Lal, 50 All. 986 : (A. I. R. (15) 1928 All. 726 F. B.). the view taken by the Allahabad High Court and also by the Madras High Court in Ramaswami v. Chinnal Asari, 24 Mad. 449, was that the equity of redemption in a simple mortgage is tangible because the mortgagor is in possession, but in a usufructuary mortgage, it is intangible because he is not in physical possession. Conversely, as to the mortgagee's interest, it is intangible if the mortgage is a simple mortgage, but tangible if the mortgage is a usufructuary mortgage. But "sale" is defined in S. 54, T. P. Act, as a transfer of ownership and "mortgage" is defined by contrast in S. 58 as a transfer of an interest, and having regard to these definitions, the basis of the distinction sought to be made is not very obvious. There is no difficulty about the interest of a simple mortgagee. That is clearly intangible property; but the real reason is, I should say, not that the mortgagee is not in possession of tangible property but that he is not the owner. The interest which he owns is a right to recover his money out of the property. But can it be said that the usufructuary mortgages is in any better position in this respect? It is true that he is in possession of tangible property, but he is not the owner of it and cannot transfer the ownership of it. What he owns and can transfer is an interest in the property entitling him to remain in possession and enjoy the profits until the debt is paid, and that is intangible. On the other hand, the mortgagor is the owner of the property itself, and can transfer the property itself subject to the mortgage, and whether the mortgage is with or without possession, if the mortgagor transfers his rights, that may well be regarded, in my opinion, as a sale of tangible property. The definition of rale says nothing about possession, and though the purchaser is normally entitled to get possession of the property sold at once, it is not always or necessarily so. No doubt it is correct to say, as Sulaiman Ag. C. J., says in Sohan Lal v. Mohan Lal, 50 All. 986: (A I.R. (15) 1928 All. 726 F.B), that a tangible thing must be capable of being possessed, but to say that in the case of a sale, it must be capable of being immediately possessed by the transferee seems to me to be adding something to the definition of sale for which there is no warrant. As at prezent advised, therefore, I am of opinion that the decision of the majority of the Court in Sohan Lal v. Mohan Lal, 50 All. 986 : (A.I.B. (15) 1928 All. 726 F.B.), is correct."

[85] With all respect, I find myself in agreement with the view expressed by the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court and relied upon by the Patna and the Bombay High Courts that the sale of the property by the mortgagor which he has given in an usufructuary mortgage, is a sale of tangible property, and not intangible property.

[86] The next question is whether in this case, the sale not being registered, there was delivery of the property agreed to be sold within the meaning of s. 54, T. P. Act. I have given considerable thought to the observations of the learned Judges of the Full Bench in the case reported in Sohan Lal v. Mohan Lal, 50 ALL. 986: (A.I.R. (15) 1928 ALL. 726 F.B.), in which all the three Judges took the view that in an usufructuary mortgage, there can be no delivery of possession inasmuch as the mortgagee was in possession all along. The learned Judges, however, conceded that there can be a change in the character of the possession in pursuance of an unregistered sale. It is true that they considered the question of the change in the character of the possession in relation to the question of adverse possession, but it seems to me that if on the facts of a case, the change in the character, of the possession can be fairly regarded as delivery within the meaning of S. 54, T. P. Act, there is no reason why effect should not be given to it. It appears to be settled law that delivery of possession within the meaning of S. 54, T. P. Act, need not necessarily be made at the time of the sale; it can be made afterwards. The Patna High Court in a case reported in Pluku Mian v. Syed Ali, 15 Pat. 772 : (A. I. R. (24) 1937 Pat. 178), had occasion to consider this aspect of the case. In the present case, the facts are much stronger than the facts of the Patna case. It is clear from the judgment of the lower appellate Court that the land agreed to be sold in this case did not consist only of the mortgaged land, but an additional piece of land measuring a bigha, which was not the subjectmatter of the mortgage. The land in suit being agricultural property, the patta appertaining to the property was originally granted by the revenue authorities, to the mortgagor. In 1928, when the property was mortgaged the patta was still in the name of the mortgagor. But in 1934 when the mortgagor sold the mortgaged property and a bigha, which was not the subject-matter of the mortgage, proceedings for a perfect or imperfect partition were instituted before the revenue authorities, apparently at the instance of the mortgagee, and at this partition, the mortgagor was also present, and according to the Mandal of the locality (D. W. 2), the S. D. C., ordered partition and mutation of names after consulting both the mortgagor and the mortgagee. Upon this partition, the mortgaged property and the property which was not the subject-matter of the mortgage, were allotted to the mortgagee. This allotment upon partition at which the mortgagor was present, although made by the revenue authorities, must, in my opinion, be regarded as an act of delivery by the mortgagor to the mortgagee, within the meaning of S. 54, T. P. Act, and real delivery within the meaning of the decision of the Privy Council reported in Mathura Prasad v. Chandra Narayan, 48 I. A. 127 : (A. I. R. (8) 1921 P. C. 8).

[87] The learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court were not dealing with facts such as are present in this case. If in this case, a partition had not been made by the revenue authorities in the presence of the mortgagor and the mortgagee, or if the mortgagor had objected to the partition. I would have in all probability followed the decision of the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in its entirety. But having regard to the partition and allotment, to which apparently the mortgagor assented, the assent of the mortgagor to partition and allotment amounts, in my opinion, to delivery of property by the mortgagor to the mortgagee within the meaning of S. 54, T. P. Act.

[38] In this view, I would confirm the judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court and dismiss the appeal.

[39] Thadani C. J.—In this case, a difference of opinion having arisen between my learned brother and myself—my learned brother taking the view that the judgment and decree appealed from should be modified, and I taking the view that it should be confirmed, the provisions of sub-s. (2) of S. 98, Civil P. C., are attracted. The result is that the judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court is confirmed.

N. M. Dam - for Appellant!

Thadani C. J.—This is a second appeal from the judgment and decree of the learned Subordinate Judge, Cachar, dated 7th January 1946, by which he set aside the judgment and decree of the trial Court which had dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs.

[2] The facts material to the appeal are these. The plaintiff and defendant 4 referred certain matters in dispute between them to the arbitration of defendants 1-3. The arbitrators gave their award on 20th october 1943, which was duly filed in Court and numbered as a suit. The plaintiff objected to the award and sought to have it set aside. Defendant 4 supported the award and contended that it was not liable to be set aside. The trial Court, however, came to the conclusion that the award was liable to be set aside, and instead of setting aside the award, decreed the plaintiff's suit a matter only of terminological inexactitude. The lower appellate Court reversed the judgment and decree of the trial Court, thereby refusing to set aside the award.

[3] The question for our consideration iswhether a second appeal is competent. Section 39 (1), Arbitration Act of 1940 provides for an appeal against an order setting aside or refusing to set aside an award. There is no provision in the Arbitration Act which provides for a second appeal against an order setting aside or refusing to set aside an award. Mr. Dam for the appellant contended that the subject-matter of the award was one which could not be referred to arbitration, and that the preceedings, therefore, in the Courts below were not proceedings under the Arbitration Act but must be regarded as a suit, and a second appeal was competent under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. We are unable to accept this contention. Section 32, Arbitration Act is in these terms:

"32. Notwithstanding any law for the time being inforce, no suit shall lie on any grounds whatsoever for a decision upon the existence, effect or validity of an arbitration agreement or award, nor shall any arbitration agreement or award be set aside, amended, modified or in any way affected otherwise than as

Under S. 30, Arbitration Act, an award shall not be set aside except on one or more of the following grounds, namely: (a) that an arbitrator or umpire has misconducted himself or the proceedings; (b) that an award has been made after the issue of an order by the Court superseding the arbitration or after the arbitration proceedings have become invalid under S. 35; (c) that an award has been improperly procured or is otherwise invalid.

[4] Clause (c) of S. 30 is wide enough to cover, an award which is sought to be challenged on the ground that the subject-matter of the reference was not capable of being referred to arbitration. The trial Court in this case set aside the award on the ground of misconduct of the arbitrators. The lower appellate Court took the view that there was no misconduct, and that the subject matter of the award was properly referred. Mr. Dam conceded that if the proceedings before the Courts below are to be regarded as proceedings under the Arbitration Act, a second appeal was incompetent. We have already observed that the present proceedings were proceedings under the Arbitration Act, and that they cannot be regarded as a suit in view of the appeal does not lie, it should be treated as an application in revision under the provisions of S. 115, Civil P. C. We do not propose to treat the appeal as an application in revision for two reasons—(1) The respondent has not appeared and it would entail an adjournment of the proceedings for a formal application to be made under the provisions of S. 115, Civil P. C., regarding which a notice must be served on the respondent; (2) the subject matter of the proceedings is a small sum of Rs. 50.

(6) The result is that the appeal is dismissed with no order as to costs, as the respondent has not appeared.

Held that the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the application for execution. [Paras 7 & 8] Annotation; ('44-Com.) Civil P. C., S. 37 N. 4.

D. N. Medhi-for Appellant. S. K. Ghose-for Respondent.

Thadani C. J.—This is a second miscellaneous appeal from an order of the learned District Judge, L. A. D., dated 2nd March 1949, by which he set aside an order of the learned Subordinate Judge, Lower Assam Districts, dated 19th December 1947, in M. Ex. Case No. 9 of 1947, entertaining an execution application in regard to a decree which had been passed by the Sadar Munsiff of Gauhati, having jurisdiction to try suits up to Rs. 2000, but who was succeeded by a Munsiff who had jurisdiction to try suits up to Rs. 1000 only.

[2] In due course the decree-holder sought to execute the decree by filing an application before the successor Munsiff who took the view that as the decree sought to be executed was for a sum exceeding his pecuniary jurisdiction in the matter of the trial of suits, he was not competent to execute the decree, and returned the application for presentation to the proper Court. The decree-holder did not appeal against the order of the Munsiff of Gauhati and elected to file the execution application before the Subordinate Judge of Gauhati. The judgment debtor objected to the execution of the decree by the Subordinate Judge contending that as he had not passed the decree, he was not competent to execute it. The learned Subordinate Judge disallowed the objection.

[3] Against the order of the learned Subordinate Judge, the judgment debtor filed an appeal before the District Judge who set aside the order of the learned Subordinate Judge, relying upon a decision of the Calcutta High Court reported in Atdus Sattar v. Mohinimohan Das. 87 C. W. N. 679: (A. I. R. (20) 1933 Cal. 684).

[4] Mr. Medhi for the decree holder has referred us to a decision of the Calcutta High Court reported in Lutchman v. Maddan Mohan, 6 Cal. 513: (7 C. L. R. 521) but we do not think it assists the contention of Mr. Medhi that the Subordinate Judge, Gauhati, notwithstanding the fact that the Munsiff's Court still exists, and has not ceased to exercise jurisdiction, has jurisdiction to entertain the application. From the judgment of Field, J., it is clear that in that case the Court that had passed the decree had ceased to exist, Field J., observed:

"The words in S. 649 (corresponding to S. 37, Civil P. C., 1908) which have reference to the Court which passed the decree ceasing to exist, refer to a class of cases not uncommon in these provinces, in which a Small Cause Court having been in existence for a certain number of years, has afterwards been abolished by an order of the Local Government. The application for execution of a decree passed by such an abolished Court must now be made to the Munsiff who would have jurisdiction to entertain the suit in which such decree was made, if such suit were instituted at the time when application for such execution is made. Another example is, where the Sudder Ameen who had jurisdiction throughout the whole of the district with a pecuniary limit exceeding that of a Munsiff was abolished as such, the officer who was Sudder Ameen becoming the Munsiff at head-quarters with a local jurisdiction limited to a single Munsiff usually that at head quarters. A decree passed by such a Sudder Ameen who had a local jurisdiction over the whole district could, therefore, be executed in the Court of the Munsiff before whom a suit would now be instituted in respect of the claim for which the decree was passed by the Sudder Ameen The words 'cease to have jurisdiction to execute it' in S. 649 (S. 37, Civil P. C.) were intended to meet such a case as the following: for example, where an Additional or Subordinate Judge, attached to more than one district, having passed a decree in one district, leaves this district and sits in another district under the provisions of S. 15, Bengal Civil Courts Act, such Additional or Subordinate Judge is a Court. When such a Court is sitting in a district other than that in which the decree was passed, it has not ceased to exist, but it has ceased to have jurisdiction to execute that particular decree. Under the provisions of S. 649, application for execution can then be made to the Court which at the time of making the application would have jurisdiction to entertain the suit in which the decree was passed."

[5] Mr. Medhi for the decree-holder has conced. ed that the Munsiff's Court at Gauhati has not been abolished, nor has it ceased to exercise jurisdic. tion within its territorial limits. We do not think there is any conflict between this decision of the Calcutta High Court and that reported in Abdus Sattar v. Mohini Mohan Das, 37 C. W. N. 679: (A. I. R. (20) 1933 Cal. 684). The facts reported in Abdus Sattar v. Mohini Mohan Das, 37 C. W. N. 679: (A. I. R. (20) 1933 Cal. 684) are on all fours with the facts of the present case. In 37 C. W. N., as here a decree for over Rs. 1000 was passed by a Court which was presided over by an officer who had pecuniary jurisdiction to try suits valued up to Rs. 2000. An application for execution of the decree was made to the same Court, but at a time when it was presided over by an officer who had jurisdiction to try suits valued up to Rs. 1000 only. Mitter J. referred to a decision of the Pains High Court reported in Iswari Prasad v. Farhat Hussain, A. I. R. (3) 1916 Pat. 3: (2 Pat. L. J. 113), and to another decision of the Calcutta High Court reported in Kartick Nath v. Tilokdhari Lall, 15 Cal. 667, which do not accept the view that if the successor Court has reduced pecuniary jurisdiction in the matter of the trial of suits, the decree passed by its predecessor for an amount exceeding the successor Court's pecuniary jurisdiction is not ca. pable of execution by the successor Court.

[6] Mr. Medhi next referred us to a decision of the Chief Court, Sind, reported in Narain Das v. Saindad, A. I. R. (31) 1944 Sind 173: (I. L. B. (1944) Kar. 33). The Sind decision in no way goes counter to the decision of the Caloutta High Court reported in Abdus Sattar v. Mohini Mohan Das, 37 C. W. N. 679: (A. I. R. (20) 1933 Cal. 684). The Full Bench decision of the Madras High Court reported in Seeni Nadan v. Muthuswami, 42 Mad. 821: (A. I. R. (7) 1920 Mad. 427 (F. B.)), also does not assist Mr. Medhi. The question for decision of the Full Bench in that case, as stated by Wallis C. J. was "whether a litigant who has been authorised to bring his suit in a particular Court and has obtained a decree in such Court in his favour, which he is strictly bound to execute within the time limited in Art. 182, is not entitled to apply as of course to that Court as the proper Court for the purpose of saving limitation under the Article, or whether, when he decides to apply for execution possibly at the last moment, he is bound to stop and inquire whether the limits of the territorial jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree have been altered, and, if so, whether the immovable proparty which is the subject of the suff or the place where the cause of action arose was within the limits of the transferred area, on pain of losing his right to execute under the article if he omits to make these inquiries or comes to a wrong conclusion when he makes them." The point for the decision of the Full Bench was

"whether the Court which passed the decree is a proper Court for execution within the meaning of cl. (5) of Art. 182, Limitation Act, notwithstanding the fact that the jurisdiction which it had at the time of the decree was taken away from it and assigned to another Court at the time of the presentation of the application for execution."

We do not think it lays down anything that is in conflict with the view taken in Abdus Sattar v. Mohini Mohan Das, 37 C. W. N. 679: (A. I. R. (20) 1933 Cal. 684). In the latest decision of the Calcutta High Court reported in Masrab Khan v. Deb Nath Mali, A. I. R. (29) 1942 Cal. 321: (I. L. R. (1942) 1 Cal. 289), Mukherjea J. observed

"the expression 'jurisdiction to execute it' as used in S. 37 (b), Civil P. C., does not mean and include the competency of the Court to entertain an application for execution of the decree. Even, if in the circumstances of a particular case, a Court cannot effectively execute the decree, that would not mean that it has ceased to have jurisdiction to execute it. It still remains the competent Court for purposes of execution."

[7] In none of the cases to which Mr. Medhi has invited our attention it is laid down that notwithstanding the fact that a Court has not ceased to exist or ceased to exercise jurisdiction, the Court which had pecuniary jurisdiction to try the suit would be regarded as a Court capable of executing the decree within the meaning of s. 37 (b), Civil P. C.

(8) We think the learned District Judge has taken the correct view and properly set aside the order of the learned Subordinate Judge, dated 13th December 1947. We affirm the order of the learned District Judge, and direct that the execution application be returned to the decree-holder by the learned Subordinate Judge of Gauhati for presentation to the proper Court. If and when it is presented again, it will be subject to all objections at the hearing.

Thadani C. J .- This is an appeal under S. 30, Workmen's Compensation Act directed against an order dated 17th October 1946, passed by the Additional Deputy Commissioner, Lakhimpur, purporting to act as Commissioner under the Workmen's Compensation Act. The order is in these terms:

"Read the causes shown by the contractor, Sardar Mohan Singh. Admittedly the deceased and injured coolies received their injuries while doing work given by the contractor. Apparently those persons were coolies who were engaged in loading and unloading logs. These coolies are "Workmen" vide explanatory note, p. 60, Workmen's Compensation Act. Considering all the points and facts of the case, I find that Sardar Mohan Singh is liable to pay compensation. Office to issue notice.

Sd/-S. I. Chaudhury, Addl. D. C. & Commer., W. C. Lakhimpur, 17-10-1946."

Mr. Barooah for the appellant, Sardar Mohan Singh, has contended that the learned Additional Deputy Commissioner, Lakhimpur, had no jurisdiction to entertain proceedings brought under the Workmen's Compensation Act, as only the Deputy Commissioners in Assam have been appointed ex officio Commissioners under the Workmen's Compensation Act. We issued notice to the Government Advocate to satisfy us whether the Additional Deputy Commissioner, Lakhimpur, who passed the order appealed from, was ex officio Commissioner under the Workmen's Compensation Act. Mr. Barman frankly stated that he is unable to satisfy us that the Additional Deputy Commissioner, Lakhimpur, is an ex officio Commissioner under the Workmen's Compensation Act. This statement alone, made by Mr. Barman, is sufficient for the purpose of quashing the order in question and ordering a re-trial of the claims made. We would have in any case quashed the order appealed from even if the learned Additional Deputy Commissioner was in fact ex officio Commissioner, for the plain reason that the order passed by him is not in accordance with the procedure laid down in the Workmen's Compensation Act. For instance, the procedure laid down under S. 10A (4) has not been followed, in that when the employer Mohan Singh disclaimed liability, the Commissioner should have informed the dependents of the deceased workmen that it was open to them to prefer a claim for compensation. It does not appear from the record that the dependants made any claim at all. Again the provisions of s. 25, Workmen's Compensation Act have not been complied with.

[2] We think this is a matter in which the order appealed from must be set aside, and the proceedings remanded for re-trial by the Deputy Commissioner, Lakbimpur himself, with direction that the proceedings be heard and determined according to law, bearing in mind the provisions of Ss. 10A (4) and 25, Workmen's Compensation Act.

Ram Labhaya J.—I agree.

Second Appeal No. 1906 of 1947, D/-31st January 1950.

Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act (III [3] of 1913), S. 20-Certificate sale-What passes to purchaser at such sale.

A purchaser at a sale in execution of a certificate under the Public Demands Recovery Act acquires nothing but the right, title and interest of the certificate debtor at the time of the sale.

Hence, where the judgment-debtor has already parted with all his interest in the property long before the certificats sale, the purchaser acquires nothing by the gale. [Paras 10, 11]

M. N. Roy_for Appellants. J. C. Sen and M. N. Mahanta-for Respondents.

Judgment.— This appeal arises out of a suit for declaration of title to and confirmation of possession or in the alternative for khas possession of the land in suit.

[2] The suit was decreed in part by the trial Court. The decree was in respect of an area of 11 B. 4 K. 7 L. of land in thirty years patta No. 395 of village Majhirgaon of mouza Ramsha Rani. Defendants appealed from the decree. Plaintiffs put in cross-objections. The appeal was allowed; cross-objections were disailowed. The result was that the suit was dismissed in its entirety. Plaintiffs have appealed to this Court.

(3) The learned counsel for the appellants has not pressed for a decree in respect of the area not allowed to him by the trial Court. He has merely asked for the restoration of the decree of the Court of the first instance by which the suit was decreed in respect of 11 B. 4 K. 7 L. The controversy, therefore, is narrowed down to the rights in this area.

[4] The land in dispute originally belonged to Hutharam Gaonbura, defendant 4, in this case. He mortgaged it with other lands to Garhal Goalia Co-operative Bank on 24th September 1924. Defendants 1 and 2, the contesting defendants in this case, purchased this land from defendant 4 on 80th June 1925. Some years after the Bank went into liquidation, the liquidator had the land sold in execution of a certificate made under the Public Demands Recovery Act of 1913. It was purchased by the liquidator himself on 19th May 1936. He sold it to plaintiffappellants on 20th March 1942. They applied for a mutation in their favour on the strength of the sale-deed. This:claim was resisted by defendants 1 and 2, who had purchased the land in 1925 long before its sale under the Public Demands Recovery Act. The mutation in plaintiffs' favour was refused. This led to the suit from which the present appeal arises. [5] The facts above stated are not in dispute. It is, however, contended by the learned counsel for the appellants that the liquidator of the Bank had all the powers of a registrar in the exercise of which he could make an award and direct that the amount due be realised from the mortgagesecurity. Such an award, he contends, was given and the certificate was based on the award. The case, therefore, according to him, was covered by Laxman Madhoji v. Dhamori Co operative Credit Society, A. I. R. (20) 1933 Nag. 211: (142 1. C. 487), in which it was laid down that a decision given by the Registrar directing the sale of the property comprised in the mortgage deed did not militate against O. 34, R. 14, Civil P. C. The correctness of the proposition laid down in the Nagpur case is not at all in question. What is disputed is whether the liquidator ever made an award directing sale of the property. The learned Second Additional Judge came to the conclusion that there was absolutely no evidence on the record in support of the alle. gation that the liquidator made an award or passed an order directing the sale of the property mortgaged. He referred to the statement of P. W. 1, the successor of the liquidator, and observed that he was not aware of the contents of the award or the requisition for a certificate. The liquidator himself was not examined. There was thus, according to him, no basis for the finding that the award or the requisition made any mention of the mortgaged property or asked for its sale. The learned Judge found further that there was no evidence on the record showing that the certificate directed sale of the mortgaged property in enforcement of the security. These are findings of fact. They are not open to question at this stage and the learned counsel for the appellants has made no attempt to challenge them. The Nagpur case in these circumstances can have no application to the facts of this case.

[6] The learned counsel has also relied on two other cases. The first of these is Kalu Sharin v. Abhoy Charan. 25 C. W. N. 253: (A. 1 3. 1921 Cal. 157). This case has no bearing a the question now before the Court. The sale in this case was not under the Public Demands Recovery Act.

[7] The second case is reported in Ananda Chandra v. Jhulon Singh, 33 C. W. N. 305: (A. I. R. (16) 1929 Cal 409). In this case a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court laid down that it was not open to a defendant to challenge a sale held under the Public Demands Recovery Act by way of defence in a suit for possession brought by the purchaser. This proposition is unquestionably correct. But the respondents are not challenging the sale. Their contention is that a purchaser at a sale in execution of a certificate under the Public Demands Recovery Act acquires nothing but the right, title and interest of the certificate debtor. This contention does not militate against the view taken in Anandachandra v. Jhulon Singh, 33 C. W. N. 305: (A. I. R. (16) 1929 Cal. 409) which is therefore of no avail to the appellants.

[8] I now proceed to examine the hurdle placed in the way of the learned counsel from the respondents' side. It has been contended that the effect of a sale under the Public Demands Recovery Act is to pass to the purchaser merely the right, title and interest of the certificatedebtor. Reliance has been placed in support of this proposition on Nanda Kumar v. Ajodhya Sahu, 16 C. W N. 351: (11 I. C. 465) and Lachmi Narain Singh v. Nandkishore, 29 Cal. 537: (6 C. W N. 484). These authorities no doubt support this proposition but they are under the Public Demands Recovery Act of 1895.

[9] In Nanda Kumar v. Ajodhya Sahu, 16 C. W. N. 351: (11 I. C. 465), Mookerjee, J. examined the provisions of the Act which were then in force and came to the conclusion in view of the scheme of the Act and the provisions contained in S. 10 and sub-s. (2) of S. 19 of that Act that the Public Demands Recovery Act did not contemplate the realisation of the security and if a sale was held under that Act, the security must be deemed to have been abandoned.

[10] It is noteworthy that the Public Demands Recovery Act of 1895 did not contain any express provision to the effect that a purchaser at a sale in execution of a certificate shall acquire nothing more than the right, title and interest of the certificate debtor. Section 10 of the old Act merely provided that from and after the date of notice of the certificate on the certificate debtor, the certificate shall bind all immovable property of the judgment-debtor within the jurisdiction of the District Collector in the same manner as if it had been attached under the provisions of the Civil P. C. S. 19 (2) embodied a provision to the effect that the certificate under the Act shall be executed in the manner provided in Chap. XIX, Civil P. C., for the enforcement of decrees for money. Section 10 now has been replaced by S. 8, Public Demands Recovery Act of 1913, which provides that from the date of the service of notice on the Certificate debtor all private transfer or delivery of immovable property situated in the district in which the certificate is filed, or of any interest in such property shall be void against any claim enforceable in execution of the certificate. It further provides that the amount due from time to time in respect of the certificate shall be a charge upon the immovable property of the certificate-debtor, wherever situated, to which every other charge created subsequently to the service of the said notice shall be postponed. This section provides greater facilities for the realisation of the amount due under the certificate. The whole of the amount is charged on the entire immovable property of the certificate-debtor. There is no provision in the new Act which would correspond to S. 19 (2) of the old Act, but S. 20 provides in express terms that :

"Where property is sold in execution of a certificate, there shall vest in the purchaser merely the right, title and interest of the certificate-debtor at the time of the sale, even though the property itself be specified."

There was no such provision in the old Act. The scheme of the Act was in the main the basis for the view consistently held in the Calcutta High Court that what passed to the purchaser at a certificate sale was merely the right, title and interest of the certificate-debtor at the time of sale. Section 20 gives statutory recognition to that view and thus shuts out all speculation as to the intention of the Legislature. There are no provisions in the new Act on the lines of those which are contained in O. 34, Civil P. C. It cannot be argued in view of the express provision contained in S. 20 of the present Act that the purchaser can acquire the right, title and interest not only of the mortgagor but that of the mortgagee which would happen if the sale is for the realisation of the security. In fact, the effect of S. 8 of the present Act is to remove all distinction between the property mortgaged and that which is free from the mortgage. The amount of the certificate becomes automatically a charge on the entire property of the certificate debtor, and what is sold at a certificate sale is not the property but merely the existing interest of the judgment-debtor at the time of the sale. Section 20 emphasises that it is merely the right, title and interest of the certificate debtor that passes leven though the property itself is specified.

[11] It has now to be found out what interest Hutharam, pro forms defendant 4, had at the time of sale in favour of the liquidator. It is not denied that the land had been sold to defendants and 2 in 1925 long before the certificate sale.

The equity of redemption vested in them and not in the judgment-debtor at the time of sale. He had no title in the property then. The Bank took advantage of the summary and more effective procedure provided by the Public Damands Recovery Act with the result that what could be sold at the certificate sale was the existing interest of the judgment-debtor, if he had any. In this case he having already parted with all his interest in the property, the liquidator acquired nothing by the sale. The conclusion arrived at by the learned Second Additional Judge is therefore correct.

Under certain circumstances decision of issues between co-defendants, even though not incorporated in the decree, may operate as res judicata. The conditions necessary for a finding to operate as res judicata between co-defendants are that there should be a conflict of interest between co-defendants and that it should be necessary to resolve the conflict in order to give rellef to the plaintiff. The conflict or the issue must have been finally decided and the co-defendants must have been either necessary or at least proper parties in the former suit. [Para 21]

Notwithstanding that a sult has been dismissed against a defendant, he has the right of appeal if he is aggrieved by the decree. The question whether he is aggrieved by the decree is a question of fact to be determined in each case according to its peculiar circumstances. In order to find out whether a defendant is aggrieved by a decree dismissing the suit against him, it is not merely the form but the substance of the decree and the judgment that should be looked into. Where the point adversely decided to such a defendant is directly and substantially in issue and where it will operate as res judicata in subsequent proceedings, the defendant should have the right of appeal against the decree though the particular finding is not embodied or incorporated in the decree.

Section 52 prevents not merely the transfer of Immovable property when any right to it is directly and specifically in question but it also prevents dealing with the property otherwise. Partitioning the property is certainly dealing with it. A partition may or may not be regarded as a transfer. It does, however, alter the mode of enjoyment of the property and can produce a result very similar to transfer in certain cases. In any case, the language of the section is wide enough to cover a partition.

Annotation : ('50-Com.) T. P. Act, S. 52, N. 27. K. R. Borcoah and B. C. Barua-for Appellant. S. K. Ghose, R. K. Goswami, B. N. Deka and S. C. Sarma - for Respondents.

Ram Labhaya J. — The suit out of which this appeal arises was for a declaration, first, of right and title to and confirmation of possession of 40 bighas of land covered by thirty year B. K. Patta No. 8 of village Barmakhibaha, Mouza Tihu and secondly, that defendant 1 had acquired no right, title and interest in respect of the land in suit by the auction sale of the land in her favour held in execution of her mortgage decree against Dharmanath, defendant.

[2] The suit was decreed in the Court of the learned Additional Munsiff of Gauhati. On appeal the decree of the trial Court was reversed by the learned Additional Judge, A. V. D., and the suit dismissed.

[3] Defendant 2 has appealed, plaintiff-respondent, whose suit has been dismissed, has filed cross objections. The learned counsel for Mt. Tarupriya Debya, defendant-respondent, has raised a preliminary objection. He urges that both the appeal and the cross-objections are not competent. The appellant has no right of appeal as the suit was dismissed, and plaintiff-respondent has got no right to file cross objections against a co-respondent when he is not seeking any relief against the appellant.

[4] The relevant facts are as follows: Three brothers, namely, Madhanath, Prananath and Chandranath jointly owned land measuring 835B 12 L. of N. K. patta No. 2/33. Prananath died leaving a son Kanunath. The land was partitioned between the two brothers and their nephew Kanunath. An area measuring 278 B. 1 K. 171 L. fell to the share of Chandranath. He had two sons, Dharmnath and Anantanath. This Anantanath is the plaintiff in the case.

[5] On 23rd March 1919, Dharmanath, son of Chandranath, Kanunath, son of prananath and Madhu, son of Madhunath, sold 168-B. of land to one Kameswar. Each of the three purported to sell 56 bighas. Dharmnath's brother Ananta was a minor at the time of sale. Kameswar, the wendee, discovered this fact after the sale. He prevailed upon Dharmanath to execute a fresh deed of sale by which the entire 56 bighas of land were conveyed to Kameswar from the share of Dharmanath alone. Kameswar evidently took this step to protect himself against any future attack from the minor. He later brought a suit for a declaration of his right to the entire land purchased by him, viz., 168 bighas from the three vendors. His suit was decreed. On 3rd April 1923, he obtained a separate patta for this land. At that time patta No. 8 covering an area of 220.B. 1 K. 171 L. (which increased to 223.B. 1 K. 17½ L. in 1923.28 Resettlement Opera. tion) was issued in the name of Dharmanath and Anantanath.

[6] The result of the sale to Kameswar was that the share of Dharmanath was reduced by 56 bighas. The share of Anantanath remained in taot.

[7] On 2nd June 1924 Dharmanath mortgaged 40 bighas of land to Bhubindra Narayan Bhattacharyya, defendant 2. On the same day he mortgaged 48 bighas to Mt. Tarupriya Debya, defendant 1.

[8] The family, consisting of the two brothers Dharmanath and Anantanath, owed some money to the Kamrup Land Mortgage Bank, Ltd., and also to one Lalit Chandra Dutta. To pay off these debts, they sold an area of 86.B. 1 K. 8 L. of land to Lalit Chandra Dutta on 26th June 1933. Lalit got a separate patta (No. 17) for the area sold to him. The share of Dharmanath was reduced by another 43 bighas. The area left with him after the sale came to 40-B. 1 K. 17 L., while Anantanath owned 96.B. 19 L. of land in Patta No. 8.

[9] On 25th April 1935, Anantanath got his name mutated with respect to 96-B. 19 L. of patta No. 8. It was alleged in the plaint by Anantanath that as a result of the partition. Dharmanath got certain area in specified dags.

[10] On 13th May 1935, Dharmanath sold to Bhubindra Narayan, defendant 2, 40 bighas of land from patta No. 8 in consideration of the mortgage debt which had been incurred by him on 2nd June 1924. The vendee got a separate patta (No. 19) issued in his name in respect of the area sold to him on 30th August 1939.

[11] Mt. Tarupriya, the other mortgages from Dharmanath, instituted a suit for sale of the mortgaged property on the basis of the mortgage of 2nd June 1924. Dharmanath was the sole defendant in the case. The suit was decreed on 31st March 1935. She then had the property sold. It was purchased by her at the auction sale on 19th August 1937. Symbolical possession was delivered to her on 22nd July 1938.

[12] Mt. Tarupriya, defendant 1, applied for mutation in her favour on the basis of the auction sale. Her application was rejected. She appealed. The Deputy Commissioner allowed her appeal without annulling the patta in favour of defendant 2. The order was upheld by the Revenue Tribunal.

[19] Plaintiff, Anantanath, feeling aggrieved by the order of the Revenue Tribunal, has instituted this suit. His case in short was that Dharmanath had sold 56 bighas of land to Kameswar, 43 bighas to Lalit Chandra Dutta and 40 bighas to defendant 2. The last sale was on 13th May 1935. On this date his share in the land of patta No. 8 was reduced to 1 K. 171 L. in dag No. 567. The rest belonged to the plaintiff. The sale in execution of the decree of defendant 1 came in 1937 when Dharmanath owned only an area measuring 1 K. 17 L. He, therefore, asked for a declaration that the sale in her favour was invalid and inoperative. It is noteworthy that he admitted that the private sale in favour of Bhubindra Narayan, defendant 2, was valid and binding. The relief was claimed only against defendant 1, the sale in whose favour was the latest in point of time. Defendant 2 was impleaded only as a pro forma defendant. No relief was asked for against him. He, in turn, fully supported the plaintiff.

fendant. Her case was that the sale in favour of Kameswar was not from the share of Dharmanath alone. The sale in favour of Lalit was collusive and fraudulent and the sale in favour of defendant 2 was hit by the doctrine of list pendens. In consequence, she contended that defendant Dharmanath was the owner of the land sold at her instance and purchased by her. There were other defences raised but we are not concerned with them at this stage of the litigation.

[16] The two issues relevant to the question

now before us were as follows:

Issue No. 5; Whether the alleged sale in favour of one Kameswar Chakravarty was only from the share of Dharmanath alone as alleged in the plaint?

Issue No. 6: Whether the alleged sale in favour of Lalit Chandra Dutta and defendant 2, Bhubladra Bhattacharjya are legally operative and binding on defendant?

[16] The suit was dismissed (?) in the trial Court. The learned Munsiff found in favour of the plaintiff on both the issues (5 & 6). His finding was that the sale to Kameswar was undoubtedly from the share of Dharmanath and the sales in favour of Lalit and Bhubindra were both valid and binding and on the date of the auction sale in favour of defendant 1 Dharmanath was only entitled to about 1 K. 17½L. He, therefore, granted plaintiff the declaration that he had prayed for against defendant 1. She appealed.

[17] The learned Additional Judge allowed the appeal. He agreed with the trial Court that the of Dharmanath alone. He further agreed with the view that the sale in favour of Lalit was valid and binding. But as regards the sale in favour of defendant 2 (Bhubindra) his finding was that it was hit by the doctrine of lis pendens and was, therefore, subject to the title of defendant 1, which she acquired by her sale in execution of her mortgage decree. It will be observed that the sales in favour of Lalit and defendant 2 had been directly challenged by defendant 1, and they formed the subject-matter

[18] It is clear that plaintiff could get the relief asked for if the sale in favour of defendant 2 as also the previous sales by Dharmanath from his share had been held to be valid and binding on defendant 1. She was stoutly resisting this claim. Defendant 2 in his own interest supported the plaintiff though arrayed on the same side with defendant 1. The legal effect of the sale in his favour was a matter which was in controversy between the two defeadants. This controversy had to be resolved before plaintiff could get the relief he had prayed for. In fact, the sale to defendant 2 was admitted as valid in the plaint. Defendant 1 contested its validity to the extent that it prejudiced her rights. The matter thus was directly and substantially in issue. It was also heard and finally decided. Defendant 2 was a necessary or at least a proper party to the suit. The appellate decree dismissing the suit rests on the finding that the sale to defendant 2 and the partition between plaintiff and his brother both came during the pendency of the mortgage suit instituted by defendant 1 and therefore could not affect the result of that litigation.

[19] In spite of the fact that the suit has been dismissed and the decree in terms does not embody the finding adverse to defendant 2, he has appealed. The decree merely dismisses the suit. The finding adverse to defendant 2 though not incorporated in the decree, forms the basis of the decree undeniably. The question is whether defendant 2 has, in these circumstances, the right of appeal from the decree.

[20] The question is by no means easy as there is considerable conflict of judicial authority

circumstances decision of issues between co-defendants even though not incorporated in the decree, may operate as res judicata. Section 11, Civil P. C., provides that no Court shall try any suit or issue in which the matter was directly and substantially in issue in a former suit between the same parties or between parties under whom they or any of them claim, if other conditions of S. 11 are satisfied. It is clear that an issue between the same parties as distinguished from a suit when directly and substantially in issue shall operate as res judicata if it was beard and finally decided. The conditions necessary for a finding to operate as res judicata between co. defendants are that there should be a conflict of interest between co-defendants and that it should be necessary to resolve the conflict in order to give relief to the plaintiff. The conflict or the issue must have been finally decided and the co.defendants must have been either necessary or at least proper parties in the former suit. All these conditions are fulfilled in present case. The issue as to the sale in defendant's favour arose between plaintiff and defendant 1. Plaintiff accepted the validity of the sale in defendant's favour. Both plaintiff and defendant 2 were ranged against defendant 1 so far as this issue was concerned. It is obvious that it was heard and finally decided and its decision was necessary for the disposal of the plaintiff's suit, defendant 1 was necessary party and defendant 2 was at least a proper party if not a necessary one. The finding on the issue, therefore, must operate as res judicata against defendant 2 in any subsequent litigation between defendant 1 and defendant 2.

[22] The authority on the proposition that in the circumstances stated above an issue would operate as res judicata between co.defendants is voluminous with a strikingly large consensus of legal opinion. There is no trace of any serious conflict. Mr. Ghose has not questioned this proposition; he has merely argued that even if the finding against defendant 2 is res judicata, he has no right of appeal as the finding is not incorporated in the decree. In these circumstances I shall refer only to Kishun Parshad v. Durga Prasad, A. I. R. (18) 1931 P. C. 231: (133 I C. 721) in support of the proposition.

[23] Section 96, Civil P. C. allows appeals from decrees. 'Decree' means a formal expression of an adjudication which so far as the Court expressing it conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit. As stated above the contention of Mr. Ghose is that a mere finding not incorporated in the decree gives no right of appeal. In the circumstances of this case I have come to the conclusion that the finding on Issue 6, so far as defendant 2 is concerned, will operate as res judicata in any subsequent litigation between him and defenddant 1. If he is denied the right of appeal, it would be a case of manifest injustice. Mr. Ghose, however, relies on Niamut Khan v. Phadu Buldia, 6 Cal. 319: (7 C. L. R. 227), a Full Bench decision. He points out, relying on this Full Bench decision, that the defendant could have the finding incorporated in the decree before appealing and if he has failed to take the necessary steps for being able to appeal, he cannot complain of any injustice. In this Full Bench case, plaintiff had prayed for the enhancement of rent. The plea was that the rent was not enhanceable. It was held that the defendant was precluded from denying that the rent of the tenure was enhanceable by reason of the fact that the question had been decided in a former litigation between the parties. The former suit was also for enhancement of rent. The defences raised were that no notice of enhancement had been given and that the rent was not enhanceable. The suit was dismissed on the ground that no notice had been given. But the Munsiff had stated in the judgment that he considered the rent enhanceable. He did not believe in the genuineress of the documentary evidence produced by the defendant. The decree merely ordered that the suit should be dismissed. The finding that the rent was liable to be enhanced was not embodied in the decree. The learned Judges held that though defendant had no right of appeal against the finding by reason of its absence from the decree, it would still operate as res judicata. They observed that "the material findings in each case should be embodied in the decree and if they are not, it is incumbent on the parties to avoid their being bound by decision against which they have no right of appeal, to apply to have the decree amended so that it may be in between co-defendants, the decision in the case does support Mr. Ghose's contention to this extent that if a finding is not incorporated in the decree, there is no right of appeal against it in a defendant against whom the suit is dismissed. It is, however, worthy of note that the finding that rent was liable to enhancement did not form the basis of the decree It was also not necessary for the decision of the plaintiff's case and these are features which distinguish this decision from the present case.

[25] The next Calcutta case which bears on the point is Krishna Chandra v. Mohesh Chandra, 9 C. W. N. 584. This has been relied on by the learned counsel for the respondent. In this case Woodroffe J. held "on a review of the authorities that a defendant has the right to appeal notwithstanding that the suit has been dismissed as against him, if he is aggrieved by the decree."

He further held

"that the question whether a party is aggrieved by a decree is a question of fact to be determined in each case according to its peculiar circumstances."

The suit before him was for recovery of rent which had fallen in arrears. It was instituted against 5 defendants. The first 3 defendants were described as tenant-defendants. The holding of which they were alleged to be tenants was put up for sale at the instance on defendant 5. Defendant 4 was the auction-purchaser of the holding and was alleged to have purchased it on behalf of and as benamidar of the first 3 defendants. A decree for rent was prayed for against the first 3 tenant-defendants. These defendants denied that they had any concern with the land or that defendant 4 was their benamidar. Defendant 4 supported them. He alleged that he was the sole owner of the tenancy rights and the real tenant. He denied that any rent was due to the plaintiffs.

against defendant 4. Their case was that he was a mere benamidar. An ex parte decree was passed against the first 3 defendants. Defendant 4 applied to have the ex parte decree set aside and also the sale held thereunder which was alleged to have taken place after fraudulent suppression of the sale proclamation. The suit was restored and the sale was set aside. The learned Munsiff found that the tanant-defendants had no connection with the jumma in suit and that defendant 4 was not their benamidar. He, therefore, decreed the claim against defendant 4 and dismissed it against the first 3 defendants.

contending that the first 3 defendants and not defendant 4 were their tenants. The learned District Judge in appeal held that defendant 4 had nothing to do with the case. He, therefore, set aside all previous orders obtained by defendant 4. The result was that the ex parte decree was restored. It was argued in the High Court that as the effect of the ex parte decree which had been restored was to dismiss the suit against the appellant (defendant 4), he could not appeal against the decree which was in his favour. The learned Judge referring to Jamna Singh v. Kamarunnissa, 3 ALL. 152 (F.B.), at pp. 156,157 observed that "It may reasonably be assumed that any party to the suit in which a decree is passed may, if he is dissatisfied with it, appeal from it."

The Code does not expressly say by whom an appeal may be preferred. He, however, inferred from the language of S. 577. Civil P. C. of 1882, which corresponds to O. 41, R. 32 of the Code of 1908, that parties who are allowed to appeal are those who may desire that a decree should be varied or reversed. The test for determing whether there was a right of appeal that found favour with him was the common sense consideration that 'there can be no appeal when there is nothing to appeal about.' It follows from this that only those parties who are adversely effected by the decree may appeal. Applying the test, he proceeded to observe that "In some cases a suit may be dismissed as against the defendant and yet the latter may have a right of appeal."

The ratio for this view was that "it is not because the suit is formally dismissed as against the defendant that no appeal lies but because such dismissal is ordinarily not merely no grievance but an actual benefit to the defendant. In such cases there would be nothing to complain of. But if there is something to complain of then notwithstanding that the suit is dismissed against him he may appeal."

If the decree was apparently favourable to the defendant but was really unfavourable when seen in the light of the record and could prove injurious to him, then the defendant would be aggrieved and could appeal. Whether a party is aggrieved by such a decree is a matter to be decided on the facts of each case. The earlier Full Bench case Niamut Khan v. Phadu Buldia, 6 cal. 319: (7 C. L. R. 227 F. B.) was not referred to or discussed. The decisions in these two Calcutta cases are not reconcilable.

[28] The view of the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court as expressed in Niamut Khan v. Phadu Buldia, 6 cal. 319: (7 c. L. R. 227 F. B.) was followed by the majority of the Court composing a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Jamait Unnissa v. Lutfunnisa, 7 ALL. 606 (F. B.). Oldfield and Mahmood JJ., dissented from this view.

[29] Oldfield J., was of the view that the decree to agree with the judgment, should contain the material points for determination arising out of the claim and material for the decision thereon and if this has not been done, the defect is a good ground of appeal notwithstanding that the decree, on its face, may be altogether in favour of the appellant and notwithstanding that he may not have applied for amendment of the decree or for review of judgment.

[30] Mahmood J. agreeing in the conclusion arrived at by Oldfield J., held that the finding of the first Court on the validity or otherwise of the deed in question in that suit was not a mere obiter dictum but was binding upon the defendant as res judicata notwithstanding the fact that the suit against her was dismissed on another ground:

"that whatever has the force of res judicata is necessarily appealable and that the word "from" as used in S. 540 (now S. 96, Civil P. C.) and the expression "objection to the decree" in S. 561, Civil P. C. of 1882 (which corresponds to O. 41, R. 22) refer not only to matters existing on the face of the decree but also to those which should have existed but do not exist there; and that the defendant in the present case was aggrieved or injured by the omission in the decree of the first Court, and therefore, entitled to file objections to it, and, for the same reason, to appeal to the High Court."

The learned Judge was definitely of the view that failure on the part of the defendant to have the decree amended did not make her incapable of obtaining the same result by the exercise of her right of appeal.

[31] It will be observed that the view so forcefully and lucidly expressed by Mahmood J., is completely in accord with the view expressed by Woodroffe J., in Krishna Chandra v. Mohesh Chandra, 9 C. W. N. 584.

[32] In Jamna Das v. Udey Ram, 21 ALL. 117:(1898 A. W. N. 201), plaintiffs sued as second assignees of a debt for its recovery and implead. ed other assignees, the original debtors, and certain persons whom they alleged to have been prior assignees of the debt, but whose assignment, according to them, had become void through non-fulfilment of the conditions upon which it was made. They got a decree against the original debtors. An appeal by the first assignees was dismissed on the ground that there was no decree against them. On second appeal, it was held that the appeal would lie inasmuch as the decree, though not a decree against the appellants, necessarily implied a finding that the assignment to the appellants, upon the basis of which they resisted the plaintiffs' claim had become void.

[33] The learned Judges of the Division Bench in this case did not agree with the contention that it was necessary for the appellants to procure an entry in the decree of the finding that the assignment in their favour had become voil as the decree as it stood necessarily implied a finding to that effect.

reported in Jamait Unnissa v. Lutfunnissa, 7 ALL. 606 (FB) was not referred to though the view taken in the case is in consonance with the rule enunciated by Mahmood J., in his judgment by which he dissented from the majority of the learned Judges composing the Court.

[35] There are two more cases from the Allahabad High Court which have been brought to our notice in the course of the argument. These are Nirmal Singh v. Zamiruddin Khan, A. I. R. (22) 1935 ALL. 984: (159 I. C. 447) and Nirmal Singh v. Zamiruddin, A. I. R. (24) 1937 ALL. 369: (169 I. C. 395). The last case was relied on by the learned counsel for the respondent.

[36] In Nirmal Singh v. Zamiruddin Khan, A. I. R. (22) 1935 ALL. 984: (159 I. C. 447), Allsop J., relied on Jamna Das v. Udey Ram, 21 ALL. 117: (1898 A. W. N. 201), and held that a vendor who was the pro forma defendant in the suit was aggrieved by the decree even though the suit had been dismissed. The suit was for the recovery of arrears of rent by a person who claimed to be the proprietor on the basis of a sale in his favour by the pro forma defendant. The tenants pleaded that they were themselves the proprietors. The suit was dismissed on the finding that the tenants were proprietors. The plaintiff did not appeal. The pro forma defendant was allowed to appeal though the suit was dismissed. The basis of the decision was that the finding between co. tenants might operate as res judicata. As a result the case was remanded to the lower appellate Court for disposal of the appeal on merits. This was a decision in second Appeal No. 1021 of 1933 decided on 27th August 1935, from the decision of the District Judge of Bareilly dated 5th April 1933. The same case came up before a Division Bench of the Court in December 1936. The decision is reported in Nirmal Singh v. Zamiruddin, A. I. B. (24) 1937 ALL. 368: (169 I. C. 395). The learned Judges held that the pro forma defendant had no right of appeal. They, however, based their conclusion on the view that the finding adverse to the appellant will not operate as res judicata between him and the codefendant as they were arrayed on the same side. This decision has been relied on by the learned counsel for the respondent. It obviously does not help him for the ratio decidendi in the case was that the decision in the case would not operate as res judicata in any subsequent litigation. If this conclusion could be arrived at in a case, there would be no right of appeal in the defendant against whom the suit has been dismissed. The ratio adopted would also show that the view that prevailed with the learned Judges was not in consonance with the rule enunciated by the majority of the Judges in the Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court reported in Jamait Ummissa v. Lutfunnissa, 7 ALL. 606 (F. B.).

[37] In Madras the view expressed by Woodroffe J., in Krishna Chandra v. Mohesh Chandra, 9 C. W. N. 584 has been consistently followed. In Yusuf Sahib v. Durgi, 30 Mad. 447: (17 M. L. J. 260), one Yusuf obtained an ex parte money decree against Timma as yejman of an Aliyasantana family. Timms sued the other members of the family for a declaration that the family property was liable for the payment of certain debts incurred by him including that due to Yusuf for which an ex parte decree had been passed against him. Yusuf and other creditors were parties to the suit. The suit was dismissed. After this, on the basis of the ex parte decree in his favour Yusuf attached certain immovable property of the family in execution of his decree against Timma. The other members of the family objected to the attachment. The objection petition was dismissed They then instituted a declaratory suit both against Yuguf and Timma for a declaration that the attached property was not liable to be sold in execution of the decree against Timma. The Courts below decreed the suit holding that Yusuf was bound by the decree in the declaratory suit instituted by Timma. Yusuf appealed. It was held that the decision in the previous declaratory suit in which Timma was the plaintiff was on a matter raised and actively contested between co-defendants and operated as res judicata in the subsequent suit in which such co-defendants were arrayed as plaintiff and defendant. It was further held that where a decision dismissing a suit is in fact wholly against the defendant, such defendant can appeal against it. In coming to this conclusion the learned Judges observed as follows:

"We are inclined to take the view of Woodroffe J., in Krishna Chandra v. Mohish Chandra, 9 C. JV. N. 584 and to hold that Yusuf had a right to appeal, the decree dismissing the suit being so far as he was concerned wholly against him except in regard to the immaterial question of costs."

[38] In Venkates Warlu v. B. Lingayya, A. I. R. (11) 1924 Mad. 689: (47 Mad. 633), Kumaraswami Sastri, J., following Krishna Chandra v. Mohish Chandra, 9 C. W. N. 584 and Yusuf Sahib v. Durgi, 30 Mad. 447: (17 M. L. J. 260) held

"that where the point adversely decided to the defendant is correctly and substantially in issue and where in other proceedings the matter would be res judicata, it would be contrary to all principles of justice and equity to hold that he is precluded from agitating the matter in appeal merely because the suit was decided in his favour on some other ground."

[39] In Raghava Aiyengar v. Irula Thevan,
A. I. R. (13) 1926 Mad. 974: (97 I. C. 346), Krishan, J. following Venkateswarlu v. B. Lingayya,
A. I. B. (11) 1924 Mad. 689: (47 Mad. 683) held that though the decree was formally in favour of the mortgagors there were findings against their contentions on which the Court acted when dismissing the plaintiff's suit and therefore they had a right of appeal.

[40] In Tansukh Rai v. Gopal Mahto, A. I. R. (16) 1929 Pat. 586: (8 Pat. 617), a Division Bench of the Patna High Court expressed the view that there was no right of appeal to a party against a finding which is against him when the decree is not based on it and the decree is in his favour.

[41] It is clear that even according to this view a party will have the right of appeal if the adverse finding forms the basis of the decree even though the decree may be in his favour.

[49] It is fairly obvious from a review of the authorities considered above that the weight of all recent authority is in favour of the view expressed in Krishna Chandra v. Mohesh-chandra, 9 C. W. N. 584. The Full Bench case of the Calcutta High Court reported in Niamut Khan v. Phardu Buldia, 6 Cal. 319: (7 C. L. B. 227 F. B.) was decided in 1880. It was followed by the majority of the learned Judges composing the Full Bench in Jamait Unnisa v. Lutfunnissa. 7 ALL. 606 (F. B.) in 1885. Since then these Full Bench decisions have not been referred to or relied on in recent cases consider. ed above and the view that has prevailed is that notwithstanding that a suit has been dismissed against a defendant, he has the right of appeal if he is aggrieved by the decree. The question whether he is aggrieved by the decree is a question of fact to be determined in each case according to its peculiar circumstances. In order to find out whether a defendant is aggrieved by a decree dismissing the suit against him, it is not merely the form but the substance of the decree and the judgment that should be looked into. Where the point adversely decided to such a defendant is directly and substantially in issue and where it will operate as res judicata in subsequent proceedings, the defendant should have the right of appeal against the decree though the particular finding is not embodied or incorporated in the decree. This is in accord with the dictum of Savigny that "everything that should have the authority of res judicata is, and ought to be, subject to appeal, and reciprocally an appeal is not admissible on any point not having the authority of res judicata."

Following the rule stated above I come to the conclusion that the defendant-appellant should not be denied the right of appeal in this case. The finding on Issue No. 6 was necessary for the decision of the case as set up by the plaintiff. The matter was in issue between the plaintiff and defendant 2, on one side and defendant 1 on the other. It will operate as res judicata in any subsequent litigation between the defendants. Even though it is not incorporated in the decree. the right of appeal against it exists in defendant 2. The grounds of appeal are mainly directed against this finding though the relief which the appellant seeks is not expressly stated. His learned counsel would have been content if it could have been held that the fiinding on Issue No. 6 would not have the authority of res judicata in any subsequent litigation but this is not possible. In my opinion, the appeal, therefore, should be heard and disposed of on merits.

[43] The preliminary objection is directed also against cross objections put in by the plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed. The only point raised in the cross objections is that the decree of the lower appellate Court has not been correctly drawn up inasmuch as plaintiff respondent though held entitled to 96 B. 19 L. from the land of patta No. 8 this finding or concluclear that all that the plaintiff seeks to achieve by his cross-objections is a declaration that he is entitled to his 96 B. 19 L. His position in the plaint was somewhat different. He then wanted a declaration that the sale in favour of defendant 1 was ineffectual and inoperative. He now apparently does not press that position and leaves the controversial issue for contest between the co-defendants. His appeal therefore is not directed against the co-respondent alone. It is directed equally against the appellant.

[44] The preliminary objection raised by Mr. Ghose, therefore, ought not to prevail. The general rule which has prevailed in the High Courts of Allahabad, Bombay, Calcutta and Patna and the Judicial Commissioner's Courts of Upper Burma and Peshawar is that the right of respondent to urge cross objections should be limited to his urging them against the appellant and it is only by way of exception to this general rule that one respondent may urge crossobjections as against the other respondents. Following this view a Division Bench of the Lahore High Court held in Jan Mahomed v. P. N. Razdon, A. I. R. (31) 1944 Lah. 433: (218 I. C. 183), that a respondent cannot file crossobjections against a co-respondent when he has not appealed from the decree and the crossobjections do not in any way affect the appellant. I am in respectful agreement with this view.

[45] In this case, considering the relief asked for in cross objections, it cannot be said that the cross-objections do not affect the appellant. In fact, if the relief asked for is allowed to plaintiff-respondent either the appellant or the defendant-respondent may be affected. The plaintiff in merely asking for a declaration of title with respect to 96 bighas in his favour is leaving the codefendants to fight out their own battle between themselves. The cross-objections cannot be regarded as directed solely against a co-respondent and would not be incompetent, therefor.

[46] My conclusion, therefore, is that both the appeal and the cross-objections should be disposed of on the merits. The preliminary objection raised by Mr. Ghose is overruled.

[47] The appeal by defendant 2 is directed against the finding that the sale in his favour was made during the pendency of the mortgage suit instituted by defendant 1 and is therefore hit by the rule of lis pendens embodied in 8.52, T. P. Act. The effect of the operation of the rule obviously is that rights acquired by defendant 2 by the decree in her favour and the subsequent auction sale in execution would not be affected by the sale. The learned counsel for defendant appellant urges that 8.52 would not apply inasmuch as the immovable property which formed the subject-matter of the suit was not properly or adequately described. We do not think there is any force in this contention.

[48] Dharmanath had mortgaged 40 bighas out of his share to defendant 1. The suit was for sale of the mortgaged property and 40 bighas out of the share of Dharmanath from the lands of patta No. 8 were sold in execution of the mortgage decree in favour of defendant 1. There can thus be no dispute about the identity of the property sold. The sale in favour of defendant 1 is of specified land from the lands of patta No. 8.

[49] The two sales cannot stand together and cannot be given effect to fully. There is an essential conflict between the two. In these circumstances the sale in favour of defendant 2 could not affect the rights acquired by defendant 1 in the litigation which culminated in the sale of the property in her favour. [50] The learned counsel next pointed out that S. 52 creates a prohibition against transfers of property with respect to which any right is directly and specifically in question. He contended that a partition would not be such a transfer and, therefore, the partition of land between the plaintiff and Dharmanath would not be within the mischief of the section. The learned counsel has not produced any authority in support of this proposition, and we do not think his reading of the section is correct. The section, prevents not merely the transfer of immovable property when any right to it is directly and specifically in question but it also prevents dealing with the property otherwise. Partitioning the property is certainly dealing with it. A partition may or may not be regarded as a transfer. It does, however, alter the mode of enjoyment of the property and can produce a result very similar to transfer in certain cases. In any case the language of the section is wide enough to cover a partition. The learned Second Additional Judge was perfectly correct in the view that both the partition between plaintiff and Dharmanath and the sale in favour of the appellant could have no adverse effect on the result of the litigation in favour of defendant 1. The learned counsel has not cited any authority in support of the proposition that S. 52 does not cover partitions. On the other hand, the interpretation we have placed on S. 52 receives support from Ishwar Lingo Desai v. Dattu Gopal, 37 Bom. 427 : (19 I. C. 885). The learned counsel, therefore, cannot urge that partition would bind defendant 1 and thus enable Dharmanath to dispose of specified dags out of the lands of patta No. 8 to defendant 2 during the pendency of her mortgage suit.

[51] The last point taken up by the learned counsel was that the finding that the sale in favour of defendant 2 (appellant) was in contravention of the provisions of S. 52 is likely to prejudice his rights even on the basis of his mortgage which was created in 1924. We think these fears are absolutely groundless. All that the Courts below have decided was that Dharmanath sold 43 bighas of land to Lalit Chandra. On that date he admittedly owned more than 48 bighas though perhaps the entire area then owned by him was subject to encumbrances. He had mortgaged 40 bigbas to defendant 1 and 48 defendant 2 in 1924. On the date of sale to Lalit, he certainly owned in excess of what he was selling but he could sell only his rights in that area. After the sale to Lalit he was still the owner of 40B. 1K. 172L. The total area before the sale that he owned was 83B. 2K. 112L. The mortgages covered 88 bighas. The area thus sold was encumbered but all questions which may arise between defendants 1 and 2, the mortgagees on one side and Lalit on the other or between the two mortgagees do not arise in this case. They have not been raised either by the plaintiff or by defendant 1; nor have they been heard and decided. The fears of the learned counsel in this respect are absolutely unfounded. The finding against defendant 1 is limited to the sale transaction in his favour and that transaction too is affected by the finding only to the extent to which it militates against the rights of defendant 1 which she acquired in pursuance of her mortgage decree.

[52] The appeal for the reasons given above must fail. The cross-objections can meet with no better fate. The relief claimed now is that it be declared that plaintiff was the owner of 96B. 19L., from the land of periodic patta No. 8. It is pointed out that the learned Second Additional Judge came to that conclusion and it was necessary that this finding should have been incorporated in the decree. We do not think this prayer can be granted. The relief originally claimed by the plaintiff was that he was the exclusive owner of certain specified dags and that the auction sale in favour of defendant 1 was inoperative and unenforceable except to the extent of a small area in one specified dag. He now wants a declaration to the effect that he is entitled to an unspecified area measuring 96B. 19L., out of the entire lands of the patta. The relief now claimed is entirely different and even in excess of that claimed in the plaint.

[53] We do not think that the plaintiff is entitled to have the declaration of ownership with respect to 98B. 19L., incorporated in the decree in this case. So far as the relief claimed in the plaint is concerned, he is obviously not entitled to it. The cross-objections too, therefore, must be disallowed.

(51) The parties have been left to bear their own costs in the Courts below. But defendantrespondent shall recover her costs in this Court from the appellant as well as the plaintiff whose cross-objections have been disallowed.

[55] Thadani C. J.—I agree that the appeal and cross-objections should be dismissed, but would refrain from expressing my view as to whether the appeal is competent, as it is not necessary, for the purposes of our decision.

[56] For the same reason, it is not necessary to express my opinion as to whether the decision on issue 6 would operate as res judicata between defendants 1 and 2 in a suit should one be brought by one against the other defendant.

Revenue Appeal No. 65 and Rule No. 63 of 1949, D/- 3-3-1950, against order of Deputy Commissioner, Goalpara, D/- 25-4-1949.

Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (I [1] of 1886), S. 66 — Survey of land in person's favour — Premium enhanced without his knowledge — Ejectment.

A land was surveyed in the name of A and was given a number. Payment at the rate ordered was made and A came into possession with the consent and the knowledge of the revenue authorities as a person on whom the land was settled. He was not made aware of the order by which premium at enhanced rate was made payable and there was no refusal on his part to ray at this rate. A applied for a settlement again on receiving notice to vacate and expressed his willingness to pay the sum to make up the deficiency of the premium calculated at the enhanced rate.

Held, that in the circumstances ejectment of A without affording him an opportunity to take the settlement on reasonable terms was not desirable.

Judgment.— This appeal under S. 147-B. Assam Land & Revenue Regulation is directed against the order of the learned Deputy Commissioner, Goalpara, dated 25th April 1949, by which he disallowed an objection petition put in by the appellant and ordered encroachment made by him on Government land to be removed.

[2] The land in question was admittedly surveyed in the name of the appellant in 1931 when he applied for its settlement. He paid premium at the rate of Rs. 500 per bigha. The area of the dag was 1 K. 8 L. The number assigned to it was 854. The record does not show if the land revenue payable was fixed. The appellant claims that the amount payable by him as land revenue was Rs. 6 15 per annum and that he paid the revenue for some years. The Deputy Commissioner in his report dated 27th April 1949, has denied the truth of the statement that land revenue was paid after the settlement. There is no proof of payment on the record.

[3] After the survey of the land and payment of the premium at the rate mentioned above, a second order was passed by Khan Bahadur T. Ali, the then Deputy Commissioner, by which the premium payable was fixed at Bs. 3,500 per bigha and in pursuance of this order a notice was issued by the Assistant Settlement Officer on 5th November 1931 demanding premium at the rate of Rs. 35 per lecha for the dag in question. The further payment required to make up the deficiency was not made. The appellant contends that the notice demanding payment at the rate of Rs. 35 per lecha or Rs. 3500 per bigha was never served on him.

[4] There is no proof of the service of the order on him. One joint notice was issued to several persons concerned. It cannot be ascertained from the signatures appearing on the notice as to whether appellant was served. The Deputy Commissioner has dismissed this plea as an easy one. He states that as a man of prudence the appellant should have asked for the patta of the land. The learned Government Advocate also finds himself unable on this record to contend that the notice demanding further payment was served on the petitioner.

[5] Since 1931, the appellant has remained in possession. He did not obtain any patta for the land. It is admitted by his learned counsel that the Commissioner's confirmation for the settlement in appellant's favour, though necessary, was not obtained. This would presumably be owing to the fact that the further payment that was ordered was not made. The fact, however, remains that the appellant cannot claim the status of a settlement holder. But his learned counsel argues that the settlement proceedings in the case of the appellant ought to be treated as pending proceedings. His case was not disposed of by grant or refusal of a settlement. What happened was that the Deputy Commissioner originally promised settlement on payment of a premium at a certain rate. The land was surveyed. It was given a number. Payment at the rate ordered was made. The appellant came into possession with the consent and the knowledge of the revenue authorities as a person on whom the land was settled. He was not made aware of the order by which premium at enhanced rate was made payable. There was no refusal on his part to pay at this rate.

[6] There is considerable force in the contention raised. The appellant is not a settlementholder speaking strictly. He, however, was offered settlement on payment of a certain sum which he actually paid and got possession of the property. After that if any further sum became recoverable as premium, the revenue authorities had to recover it by serving a notice of demand. There is no proof that any such notice was served. There was thus no obligation on the part of the appellant to pay any more sum; nor can it be said that the appellant was guilty of any default. It may be that he was aware of the order as the notice issued was meant for quite a large number of persons including the appellant. But that knowledge alone will not create an obligation, nor could refusal to pay the amount be inferred from it. There was nothing to prevent the revenue officers from order. ing eviction if they believed that the notice of demand had been served and payment not made within the date stated therein. This course was not adopted. Appellant was in possession with their permission and if they did not do anything to recover the money or to obtain a refusal to pay at the enhanced rate, the consequence of their omission may not be visited on the appellant. He certainly has not been guilty of any fraudulent conduct and could well demand settlement even under R. 15 by reason of his occupation of the land, on which he has built some structure also, for about 18 years. The petitioner evidently applied for settlement again on receiving notice to vacate and expressed his willingness to pay the sum to make up the deficiency of the premium calculated at the enhanced rate. Under R. 66 the Deputy Commissioner has the authority to settle waste land in towns subject to the confirmation of the Provincial Government. He, therefore, may refuse settlement. But the question that arises in this case is whether he was justified in refusing settlement which had been offered by his predecessor in office some 18 years before even though the appellant was willing to make up the deficiency in the premium for the nonpayment of which he cannot be blamed in law. The refusal would involve ignoring the order of the Deputy Commissioner who offered the settlement and accepted the premium at the original rate. Apart from this, it would not be equitable in the peculiar circumstances of this case to order eviction without offering the appellant an opportunity to have the settlement of the land on reasonable terms. His possession for all these years was not that of a trespasser. If the settlement proceedings in his case have not been finalised and there has been no grant refusal of settlement, the officers

Government cannot hold themselves entirely free from blame. If notice of eviction had been served on him when payment was not made within the date fixed by the notice issued in November 1931, the Government would either have received the money it demanded or the appellant would then have been evicted. The appellant has not by any conduct on his part prevented the officers of the Government from taking necessary action. In these circumstances, ejectment of the appellant without affording him an opportunity to take the settlement on reasonable terms does not seem to be desirable.

[7] For the reasons given above, the appeal is allowed and the case is sent back to the Deputy Commissioner for disposal of the application for settlement according to law in the light of the directions given above.

Second Appeal No. 991 of 1947, D/- 21-2-1950, from judgment and decree of Special Sub-J., A. V. D., D/. 17-4-946.

(a) Registration Act (1908), S. 49 (a) - Partition deed not registered-Admissibility-Arrangement as to part of property it can be regarded as transfer -Transfer of Property Act (1882), Ss. 53A and 54.

The plaintiff and defendants who were brothers and members of a joint Hindu family partitioned their ancestral and self-acquired properties among which was a house in respect of which it was agreed between them that if the plaintiff paid two-thirds value of the house to the defendants the house would be allotted to him. The partition was effected by an unregistered deed which did not say "we have divided our property" but said "we divide our property" and further stated that if any one objected, it would not be tenable on the strength of this document. The plaintiff having pald two-thirds value of the house to the defendants and having been resisted by them filed a suit for declaration of his title and for possession:

Held that the parties purported to effect a partition of their properties by this deed which fell within the purview of S. 49, cl. (a), Registration Act, and though the deed was admissible in evidence for the purpose of proving the factum of partition, it could not be used for the purpose of proving that a particular property was allotted to the plaintiff upon partition as his share.

[Para 8] Held further (assuming that S. 53A, T. P. Act applied to a partition) that the house could not be isolated from the general scheme of partition and the arrangement in respect thereof could not be regarded as a transfer within the meaning of S. 53A or S. 54, T. P. Act. [Para 8]

(c) Transfer of Property Act (1882), S. 53A-Act done in furtherance of contract - Payment of eonsideration.

Per Thadani C. J .- An act which can be regarded as having been done in furtherance of the contract must consist of something more than mere payment of the consideration.

Per Ram Labhaya J .- Payment of consideration for a transfer of immoveable property where transferee has in part performance of the contract taken possession of the property or part thereof or where he being already in possession continues to remain in possession in part performance of the contract can be an act done in furtherance of the contract.

B. C. Barua and N. Goswami-for Respondents.

Thadani C. J .- This is a second appeal from the judgment and decree of the Special Subordinate Judge, A. V. D., dated 17th April 1946, by which he affirmed the judgment and decree of the trial Court which had dismissed the plaintiff's suit with no order as to costs.

[2] The plaintiff brought a suit for a declaration of his right, title and interest in the property in suit and for possession. The plaintiff and the defendants are brothers, and until 16th Ashar 1850 B.S., were members of a joint Hindu family. They owned certain ancestral and self-acquired movable and immovable properties, which they partitioned on 16th Ashar 1850 B. S. Among the properties involved in the partition was the house in suit, valued at Rs. 120, and it was agreed between the three brothers that on the appellant paying a sum of Rs. 80 to the other two brothers for their share, the house would stand allotted to the appellant. The appellant paid Rs. 80 to his brothers, the two defendants, but later when he attempted to dismantle the house and remove the materials, the defendants resisted him, as a result of which he brought the present suit.

[8] The defence to the suit was a denial of the averments made by the plaintiff.

[4] Upon the pleadings, the trial Court framed the following issues:

1. Whether the house in question was legally allotted to the share of the plaintiff? If not, whether the plaintiff is entitled to get his title declared in respect of the house?

2. What relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled to?

[5] On the first issue, the trial Court held that the partition of all the properties belonging to the three brothers was effected by a partition-dead, which was inadmissible in evidence, not having been registered, and accordingly dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

[6] The lower appellate Court agreed with this finding and held that the provisions of s. 91, Evidence Act were a bar to the reception of oral evidence as to the terms of the partition deed.

[7] Mr. Ghose for the plaintiff-appellant has contended that the Courts below were in error in holding that the partition was effected by a deed, that the deed was only a memorandum of partition which had been previously effected between the parties; assuming that partition was effected by a deed and that the deed was required to be registered, nevertheless under the provisions of S. 49, Registration Act, it was permissible to use the deed for collateral purposes; in any case, the value of the property allotted to the share of the plaintiff being less than Rs. 100, the document was not required to be registered, the sale having been completed by delivery of possession to the plaintiff in pursuance of the agreement.

[8] We are unable to accept any of the contentions raised on behalf of the appellant. The partition deed is in these terms:

"Partition deed, executed by Taranath Sarma, Hang-sanath Sarma and Gopinath Sarma, on 16th Ashar 1350. We divide our property, ancestral, self-acquired, movable and immovable, all debts, income, homestead, rupit land and others in equal three shares as detailed in the following paragraphs. We shall have no objection to that hereafter. If any objects, it will not be tenable on the strength of this document. To this effect we execute this deed in sound mind and health:

Division of Movable property.

We divide in equal three shares the bell-metal and brass utensils and other copper utensils.

The house on the eastern side, the cow-shed and gate-house, these three remain with Taranath. The house on the northern bhits on the western side and the house on the southern side and the thatched roof of the corrugated iron sheet house remain with me Hangsanath. The house on the northern side in the middle portion, the gate-house of the southern side and store-house on the western side remain with Gopinath. The C. I. sheet house minus the posts is valued at Rs. 120, out of which Rs. 40 having been paid each to Taranath and Hangsanath, the C. I. sheet house remain with me Gopinath.

It is plain from the terms of the deed that the entire property belonging to the three brothers, and not only the house in dispute, was partitioned. We cannot isolate the house from the remaining property partitioned. The factum of the alleged partition as a whole cannot be gathered from the evidence of the plaintiff and his witnesses who have not said a word in their evidence about the general partition, but confined their evidence to the allotment of the house in dispute. We can find no justification for splitting the contents of the partition deed, isolating the property in suit, thereby encouraging a party to evade the provisions of the Registration Act or the Evidence Act. Moreover, the deed does not say "we have divided our property;" it says "we divide our property," making their intention clear that they were dividing the property in accordance with the deed itself, and not by any oral agreement. Their intention is further made clear by the words

"If any one objects, it will not be tenable on the strength of this document. To this effect we execute this deed in sound mind and health."

This recital leaves little room for doubt that the parties purported to effect a partition of their properties by this deed a - deed which falls within the purview of s. 49, cl. (a), Registration Act. It may be conceded that the dead was admissible in evidence for the purpose of proving the factum of partition, but it cannot be used for the purpose of proving that a particular property was allotted to the appellant upon partition as his share. As regards the contention that the proviso to S. 49, Registration Act permits an unregistered deed to be used as evidence of part performance of a contract for the purposes of S. 53-A, T. P. Act, 1882, I do not think S. 53A has any application to a partition. Mr. Ghose argued that taking over of the entire house on payment to the defendants of their 2/3rd share amounts to a transfer within the meaning of Ss. 53A and 54, T. P. Act. Assuming that S. 53 A applies to a partition, the allotment of this particular house was part and parcel of the general partition of the properties belonging to the family and this particular arrangement which the three brothers arrived at between themselves, must be regarded as an arrangement to adjust the equitiesbetween them, and does not amount to a transfer of the property. For instance, so far as the other properties are concerned, they were not allotted to the respective parties for any consideration, but as a result of the partition. We cannot, therefore, isolate the house in question from the general scheme of partition and regard it as a transfer within the meaning of S. 53-A or S. 54,1 T. P. Act.

Madras High Court reported in Ahobilachariar v. Tulsiammal, A. I. R. (14) 1927 Mad. 830: (103 I. C. 281), but the facts of that case are entirely different from the facts before us. In the case before us, the alleged partition took place sometime in 1944, and shortly afterwards the plaintiff brought the present suit in 1944. There is nothing on the paper book before us to satisfy us that the plaintiff, in pursuance of the partition, was in possession of this house. On the contrary, it appears that soon after the alleged partition, his two brothers resisted his attempt at taking possession. In the Madras case, possession of the property, upon partition, extended over a number of years, and that fact may have influenced the learned Judge to apply by implication the terms of S. 53-A, T. P. Act. It is to be observed that S. 53-A was not referred to in express terms by the learned Judge of the Madras High Court.

[10] In the Madras case, apparently Ramesan J. was influenced by the fact that the division in status had lasted from 1910 to 1918 and that the brothers lived as divided brothers. In this case, as we have observed, the alleged partition took place in 1944 and shortly afterwards a suit was brought in 1944. It is, therefore, not possible to say, on the facts of this case, that the plaintiff was in possession of the house in dispute in pursuance of the partition. Assuming in this case that the plaintiff was already in possession, and that he continued in possession in part performance of the contract, the question arises whether he did some act in furtherance of the contract. The act relied upon by Mr. Ghose is the payment of Rs. 80 to the two brothers. But the payment of Rs. 80 was the consideration for the contract, and cannot unequivocally be regarded as an act in furtherance of the contract. An act which can be regarded as having been done in furtherance of the contract must consist of something more than mere payment of the consideration. We have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the plaintiff has failed to bring his case within the purview of 8. 53A, T. P. Act.

[11] The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

[12] Ram Labhaya J.—I agree in the conclusion reached by my Lord the Chief Justice. I wish, however, to add a few remarks of my own.

[13] I agree with the view that the document in question was a deed of partition by which the property was actually partitioned. It was not a memorandum of any fact which had already been accomplished. It was, therefore, within the mischief of S. 17, Registration Act, and, therefore, inadmissible in evidence for showing that a particular portion or part of the property was allotted to a particular party. It could be used only for showing divided status.

[14] I am also inclined to agree that s. 53A, T. P. Act has no application to partitions. The section covers all transfers for consideration. A partition does not seem to be such a transfer as is referred to in that section. Persons between whom a property is partitioned are co-sharers. The ownership of their shares vests in them before partition. They do not acquire that ownership for consideration on partition. It merely effects the mode of enjoyment of the property. Before partition all co-sharers are in joint enjoyment by virtue of being co-sharers. After partition they agree to enjoy their shares separately. The change in the manner of the enjoyment of the property should not amount to a transfer.

[15] Mr. Ghose has relied on Ahobelachariar V. Tulsiammal, A. I. R. (14) 1927 Mad. 830 : (103 I. C. 281), for showing that the equitable doctrine of part performance can apply to partitions. This case was decided before S. 53A was enacted. It is no authority for the proposition that partitions are covered by the language of the section, the case having been decided at a time when the section did not exist. The doctrine itself could have applied then even to partitions as S. 53A was not there to regulate its application. There is no justification left now for the application of that rule of equity to partitions. This, however, is a question which need not be decided in this case as even assuming that S. 53A applies to partitions it cannot be relied on by the plaintiff as he himself is suing for possession of the property. The section can be relied on only by a transferee in possession. Even if plaintiff is treated as a transferee, he not being in possession of the property, the section does not come into play at all. To attract the application of the section it is necessary that the transferee should have taken possession of the property or any part thereof or the transferee being already in possession should have continued in possession in part performance of the contract. If this requirement is not satisfied, it is not necessary to consider whether some other act has been done in furtherance of the contract.

[16] Payment of consideration for a transfer of immovable property where transferee has in part performance of the contract taken posses. sion of the property or part thereof where he being already in possession continues to remain in possession in part performance of the contract can be an act done in furtherance of the con. tract. I regret I am unable to agree to the proposition that even where a transferee is in possession of the property in part performance of the contract, the payment of the consideration cannot be regarded as an act in furtherance of the contract. I do not find any warrant for that proposition in the language of the statute, nor has any authority been cited in its support. If possession of the property has not passed, mere payment of consideration may not be regarded as an act in furtherance of the contract as such an act may be equivocal. But where transferee has taken possession the only act that he may be in a position to perform in many cases would be the payment of consideration. In fact, in another case, No. S. A. 1784 of 1944 I have taken the view that the tender of consideration by a transferee in possession not accepted by the transferor was an act in furtherance of the contract within the meaning of S. 53A. This view. however, does not affect the result of the case. The transferee is not in possession. He is suing for it. He cannot, therefore, avail of the provisions contained in S. 53A. The appeal, therefore. must be dismissed.

Under S. 7 the vehicle in which the articles are carried cannot be one of the items of property in respect of which an order made under the Act has been contravened and having regard to the restricted scope of the section the general provisions of S. 517, Criminal P. C. cannot override the specific provisions [Paras 2, 4, 6]

D. N. Medhi - for Petitioner.

B. C. Barua Govt. Advocate (Jr.) - for the State.

Thadani C. J .- This is a revision application under the provisions of S. 439, Criminal P. C., directed against an order passed by the Magistrate, First Class, Golaghat, dated 8th october 1948, by which in addition to ordering confiscation of cloths, yarn and sugar, in respect of which offences under S. 7 of Act XXIV [24] of 1946 (Central) were committed, he confiscated to Government the truck which was used in the commission of the offence.

[2] It is contended on behalf of the applicant that the order passed by the learned Magistrate purporting to be an order under the provisions of S. 517, Criminal P. C., was in reality, an order passed in pursuance of S. 7 of Act XXIV

[24] 1946, which is in these terms:

"7. (1) If any person contravenes any order made under S. 3, he shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three years or with fine or with both, and if the order so provides, any Court trying such contravention may direct that any property in respect of which the Court is satisfied that the order has been contravened, shall be forfeited to His Majesty:"

It is plain from the language of S. 7 that the order of forfeiture must be directed against any property in respect of which the Court is satisfied that the order has been contravened. The property in respect of which the order has been contravened, consists of cloths, yarn and sugar. The vehicle in which these articles were carried. is not one of the items of property in respect of which an order made under Act XXIV [24] of 1946 has been contravened.

[3] Previous to the enactment of Act XXIV [24] of 1946, which is an Act of the Indian Legis. lature and which received the assent of the Governor-General on 19th November 1916, there was an order passed by the Government of Assam on 27th September 1916 which contained the following provision:

"A Court trying any contravention of this order may, without prejudice to any other sentence which it may pass, direct that any cloth or yarn in respect of which it is satisfied that such contravention has occurred, shall be forfeited to His Majesty."

The language of S. 7 of the Central Act, in so far as it relates to forfeiture, is strikingly similar to the language of S. 20, Assam Cotton Cloth and Yarn Dealers Licensing Order, 1946, dated 27th September 1946.

[4] Mr. Medhi for the petitioner contends that having regard to the restricted scope of 8. 7, which does not empower a Court trying a contravention under Act XXIV [24] of 1946 to forfeit to the State the vehicle in which property which is the subject-matter of the contravention, is carried, the general provisions of S. 517, Criminal P. C. cannot serve to override the specific provision contained in S. 7 of Act XXIV [24] of 1946. In support of his contention, he has referred us to two decisions of the Bombay High Court reported in Hansraj v. Emperor, A. I. R. (31) 1944 Bom. 292: (46) Or. L. J. 482 F. B.) and Raghunath Krishna V. Emperor, A. I. R. (34) 1947 Bom. 239: (I. L. B.) (1946) Bom. 1063) and a decision of the Lahore High Court reported in Abdul Majid v. Emperor, A. I. R. (32) 1945 Lah. 149: (47 Or. L. J. 130 F. B.). In Hansraj v. Emperor, A.I.R. (31) 1944 Bom. 292: 46 Cr. L, J. 482 F. B.). Divatia J. observed:

"The words 'if the order so provides' which cannot be regarded as redundant, must be given their plain meaning, and that meaning, in my view, is that although an order of confiscation can be made by the Court in its discretion under S. 517, that discretion is not to be exercised in those cases in which the appropriate authority issuing the order did not think it desirable that such discretion should be used. Rule 81 (4) imposes special penalty for special offences created by that rule consisting in the contravention of any order made under the rule, and when it expressly says that the order of confiscation can be made if it is so provided in the order which is being contravened, it must be take to mean that if the order is silent about it, no order of confiscation, and in some orders issued before the amendment, the power of disposal of of property can be made."

Lokur J. observed: "Penal statutes have to be strictly construed in favour of the subject. This is particularly so in the case of enactments which create new offences for meeting an emergency and seek to penalise acts which, in normal times, would not amount to an offence."

In the second case reported in Raghunath Krishna v. Emperor, A. I. B. (34) 1947 Bom. 239 : (I. L. B. (1946) Bom. 1063), the Division Bench consisting of Sen and Gajendragadkar JJ., followed the previous decision of the Full Bench of the Bombay High Court reported in Hansraj v. Emperor, A. I. R. (31) 1944 Bom 292 : (46 Or. L. J. 482).

[5] The Full Bench of the Lahore High Court, Abdul Majid v. Emperor, A. I. R. (32) 1945 Lah. 149 : (47 Cr. L. J. 130) consisting of Harries C. J., Teja Singh and Khosla JJ., also took the same view as was taken by the Full Bench of the Bombay High Court.

Harries C. J., obeserved:

"It appears to me clear that R. 81, sub-r. (4), Defence of India Rules, impliedly limits the operation of S. 517, Criminal P. C. To hold otherwise would to bold that the words 'if the order so provides' in R. 81, sub-r. (4), Defence of India Rules are redundant and absolutely meaningless. If the learned Magistrate could confiscate this oil, though the order was ellent as to confiscation, then the words which I have referred to, mean nothing whateoever. On the other hand, if the argument of the petitioner be accepted that confiscation can only be ordered if the order so provides, then due weight and meaning is given to these words. Meaning must be given to every word in a Section, wherever possible, and the natural construction of R. 81, sub-r. (4), Defence of India Ruless, is this is that if the order, contravention of which is alleged, provides for confiscation, then the property which is the subject-matter of the proceedings, can be confiscated. On the other hand, if the order does not so prowide, then there is no power of confiscation."

[6] With respect, we are in agreement with the view expressed by the learned Judges of the Bombay and Lahore High Courts.

[7] The result is that the application is allowed, the order of the learned Magistrate confiscating the truck (Ex. I) is set aside.

[8] The security bond furnished by the petitioner is discharged.

Under S. 19 of the Act, the appointment of an arbitrator is contemplated only when there is no agreement between the Government and the owners of the property. It does not contemplate appointment of an arbitrator for the purpose of settling disputes involving rights of parties in the matter of the apportionment of the compensation. There is, therefore, no question of appointing an arbitrator when there is an agreement between the parties as regards the amount of compensation fixed by the Government.

Further relief.'

Where certain lands are acquired by Government and certain amount is fixed as compensation, a suit for declaration of the right of the plaintiffs to the entire amount of compensation set apart for the defendants, who claim to be occupancy tenants of the acquired land, to which Government is not a party, is not hit by the proviso to 8. 42, as there is no further relief which can be claimed against the defendants.

The words "and the period of requisition thereof shall end" in sub-r. (3) of R. 75A, Defence of India Rules, mean that when there is requisition followed by acquisition without surrendering the property the rights of the claimants have to be determined as though there was no requisition in the first instance. of, vis-a-vis Government.

Obiter. - No question of tenancy, contractual or statutory, arises between the Government and the owner of the property upon regulation under the Defence of India Rules. What happens is that upon requisition when the Government take possession of the property, the claimants are kept out of it, and as the Government take possession in pursuance of their statutory powers they must pay compensation for such possession, and one of the ways in which such compensation might be determined is to determine what rent the landlord would receive if he were to let or had let out the property to a tenant: A. Thadani C. J.—This is a First Appeal from the judgment and decree of the learned Special Subordinate Judge, A. V. D., dated ath January 1948, by which he decreed the plaintiff's suit for a declaration that the defendants had not acquired occupancy right in the lands in suit, and that the plaintiffs alone were entitled to the compensation awarded for the acquisition of the lands, with no order as to costs.

[2] Twenty-three plaintiffs brought the present suit against 121 defendants for a declaration that the defendants had not acquired any occupancy rights in the lands described in schedule Kha, and that they alone were entitled to compensation for the acquisition of the lands.

[3] The facts material to the appeal are these: The lands in suit are situated in the village of Garpandu Kumarpara in mouza Ramcharani. Periodic patta N. K. No. 10 comprises an area of 22 bighas 3 kathas 16 lessas; periodic patta N. K. No. 6, an area of 23B-2K-9L; periodic patta N. K. No. 14, an area of 45B-2K-9L; periodic patta N. K. No. 14, an area of 45B-2K-9L; periodic patta N. K. No. 18, an area of 23B-1K-1L; N. K. patta No. 19 an area of 23B-1K-1L; N. K. patta No. 3 comprises an area of 45B-2K-9L; and N. K. patta No. 4, an area of 25B. 0K-17L.

[4] Out of patta No. 10 comprising an area of 22B-3K 16L, the area acquired was 8B-1K-10L; the compensation for this area acquired was assessed at Rs. 2075. Out of patta No. 6 comprising an area of 23B.2K. 9L, an area of 5B.0K.-7L was acquired; the compensation for this area being assessed at Rs. 1272-8; out of patta No. 14 comprising an area of 45B 2K-9L, an area of 5B 0K-3L was acquired, the compensation for this area being assessed at Rs. 1257-4; from patts No. 18 comprising an area of 23B 1K-17L, an area of 2B UK-11L was acquired, the compensation for this being assessed at Rs. 626-8; from patta No. 17 comprising an area of 23B-1K-1L, an area of 2B. OK 1L was acquired, the compensation being assessed at Rs.: 302.8; from patta No. 19 comprising an area of 23B-11L, an area of 2B-3K-9L was acquired, the compensation being assessed at Rs 672-8; from patta No. 8 comprising an area of 45B-2K-9L, an area of 3B-1K 15L was acquired, the compensation being assessed at Rs. 837-8; out of patta No. 4 comprising an area of 28B.0K-17L, an area of 1B-3K-5L was acquired, the compensation being assessed at Rs. 530. The total compensation for the area acquired amounts to Bs. 7477.

[5] Patta No. 10, at the date of the requisition, stood in the name of plaintiffs 1, 2, 3 and pro forma defendants 101 to 114; patta No. 6 stood in the names of plaintiffs 4 to 6, and pro forma defendants 95 to 100; patta No. 14 stood in the names of plaintiffs 10 to 20; patta No. 18 stood in the names of plaintiff 7 and pro forma defendants 95 and 115 to 118; patta No. 17 stood in the names of plaintiff 8 and pro forma defendants 117 and 118; patta No. 19 stood in the names of plaintiffs 9 and proforms defendants 95, 117 and 118; patta No. 3 stood in the names of plaintiffs 21, 22 and pro forms defendants 119 and 120; patta No. 4 stood in the names of plaintiff 23 and pro forms defendant 121.

[6] The lands described in Schedule Kha were requisitioned by the Government of India under its Notification No. 132/41/67, dated 6th May '42. In due course, notices were issued for evicting the plaintiffs and the defendants who were then in occupation of the busti lands. In due course, the plaintiffs and the defendants handed over possession of the lands requisitioned to the Military authorities. Three years later on 25th May '45, the lands which had been previously requisitioned, were permanently acquired for the Railway Department under the Defence of India Act, and notices were duly served on the plaintiffs and the defendants on 25th May '45, by which the Government required the parties to submit within a month their claims for compensation for the houses, trees and crops standing thereon.

[7] The Land Acquisition Staff of Gauhati assessed the value and prepared lists showing the plaintiffs and the defendants as being entitled to compensation. The Land Acquisition Officer took the view that the defendants as occupancy tenants, were entitled to 2th of the amount assessed as compensation. The plaintiffs objected to the setting apart of 2th share of the amount assessed for the benefit of the defendants, and contended that they were entitled to the whole amount. The Deputy Commissioner, Kamrup, passed an order requiring the plaintiffs within one month from 20th March '46 to file a suit for a declaration that the defendants were not entitled to get any share of the compensation assessed. In due course, the plaintiffs brought the present suit for a declaration.

[8] In the plaint, the plaintiffs described the defendants as tenants-at-will. The defendants denied that they were tenants-at-will and contended that they had acquired occupancy rights; they conceded that the distribution as proposed by the Deputy Commissioner was just and equitable.

[9] On the pleadings, the trial Court framed the following issues: (1) Whether the suit is bad for multifariousness? (2) Whether the defendants are tenants-at-will or are occupancy and permanent riots? (3). Whether the tenancy was determined as alleged and defendants lost their occupancy rights? (4) Whether the defendants are entitled to any portion of the valuation made by the Acquisition Officer? (5) Whether the suit is barred by waiver and acquiescence? (6). Whether the plaintiffs have put proper court-fee ? (7) What relief or reliefs, if any, are the parties entitled to ?

the defendants had already received compensation for the houses and crops and that the relationship between them and the defendants as landlords and tenants at will had terminated on the requisition of the property by Government in 1942. As a result of its findings on the issues framed, the trial Court decreed the plaintiffs' suit negativing the right of the defendants to any share of the compensation assessed.

[11] Mr. Borah for the appellants has contended that the suit, as framed, did not lie, that in any case, the suit was incompetent as the plaintiffs' rights and remedies were governed by R. 75-A, Defence of India Rules, framed under the Defence of India Act, 1935, which is in these terms:

"75A. Requisitioning of Property.—(1) If in the opinion of the Central Government or the Provincial Government, it is necessary or expedient so to do for securing the defence of British India, public safety, the maintenance of public order or the efficient prosecution of the war, or for maintaining supplies and services essential to the life of the community, that Government may by order in writing requisition any property, moveable or immoveable, and may make such further orders as appear to that Government to be necessary or expedient in connection with the requisitioning:

Provided that no property used for the purpose of religious worship and no such property as is referred to in R. 66 or in R. 72 shall be requisitioned under this

(2) Where the Central Government or the Provincial Government has requisitioned any property under sub-r. (1), that Government may use or deal with the property in such manner as may appear to it to be expedient, and may acquire it by serving on the owner thereof, or where the owner is not readily traceable or the ownership is in dispute, by publishing in the official Gazette, a notice stating that the Central or Provincial Government, as the case may be, has decided to acquire it in pursuance of this rule.

(3) Where a notice of acquisition is served on the owner of the property or published in the official Gasette under sub-r. (2), then at the beginning of the day on which the notice is so served or published; the property shall vest in Government free from any mortgage, pledge, lien or other similar encumbrance, and the period of the requisition thereof shall end.

the Central Government or the Provincial Government requisitions or acquires any moveable property, the owner thereof shall be paid such compensation as that Government may determine :

Provided that, where immediately before the requisition, the property was, by virtue of a hire purchase agreement, in the possession of a person other than the owner, the amount determined by Government as the total compensation payable in respect of the requisition or acquisition shall be apportioned between that person and the owner in such manner as an arbitrator appointed by the Government in this behalf may decide to be just.

Government may, with a view to requisitioning any property under sub-r. (1) or determining the compensation payable under sub-r. (4), by order—

(a) require any person to furnish to such authority as may be specified in the order such information in his possession relating to the property as may be so specified;

(b) direct that the owner, occupier or person in possession of the property shall not without the permission of Government, dispose of it or where the property is a building, structurally alter it till the expiry of such period as may be specified, in the order.

- (51) Without prejudice to any powers otherwise conferred by these Rules, any person authorised in this behalf by the Central Government or the Provincial Government may enter any premises and inspect such premises and any property therein or thereon for the purpose of determining whether and, if so, in what manner, an order under this rule should be made in relation to such premises or property, or with a view to securing compliance with any order made under this rule.
- (6) Any orders made, and any action taken, under or in relation to Rr. 76, 79 or 83 before 16th May 1942, shall be deemed to have been made or taken under or in relation to this Rule and to be as valid as if this rule had been then in force.
- (7) If any person contravenes any order made under this rule, he shall be punishable with imprisonment for a term which may extend to three years or with fine or with both."
- [12] The record of the case shows that the notices of acquisition were duly served not only upon the plaintiffs but also upon the defendants. It is reasonable, therefore, to suppose that the Government regarded both the plaintiffs and the defendants as owners of the property. The only other class of persons which is recognised under R. 75-A are the hire-purchasers under a hire-purchase agreement. The rest of the sub-rules of R. 75-A deal with the procedure to be followed in determining the compensation payable under sub-r. (4).
- [18] Mr. Borah's contention that the present suit was not competent in virtue of S. 19, Defence of India Act, we think, is not well founded. Section 19, Defence of India Act is in these terms:
- "19. Compensation to be paid in accordance with certain principles for compulsory acquisition of immovable property etc.—Where by or under any rule made under this Act any action is taken of the nature described in sub-s. (2) of S. 299, Government of India Act, 1985, there shall be paid compensation the amount of which shall be determined in the manner, and in accordance with the principles, hereinafter set out, that is to say:

(a) Where the amount of the compensation can be fixed by agreement, it shall be paid in accordance with such agreement.

(b) Where no such agreement can be reached, the Central Government shall appoint as an arbitrator a person qualified under sub-s. (8) of S. 220 of the abovementioned Act for appointment as a Judge of a High Court.

(c) The Central Government may, in any particular case, nominate a person having expert knowledge as to the nature of the property acquired, to assist the arbitrator, and where such nomination is made, the person to be compensated may also nominate an assesgor for the said purpose.

(d) At the commencement of the proceedings before the arbitrator, the Central Government and the person to be compensated shall state what in their respective opinions is a fair amount of compensation.

(e) The arbitrator in making his award shall have regard to:

- (i) the provisions of sub-s. (1) of S. 23, Land Acquisition Act, 1894, so far as the same can be applicable; and
- (ii) whether the acquisition is of a permanent or temporary character.
- (f) An appeal shall lie to the High Court against an award of an arbitrator except in cases where the amount thereof does not exceed an amount prescribed in this behalf by rules made by the Central Government.
- (g) Save as provided in this section, and in any rule made thereunder, nothing in any law for the time being in force shall apply to arbitrations under this Section.
- (2) The Central Government may make rules for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this section.
- (3) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing powers such rules may preecribe -
- (a) the procedure to be followed in arbitrations under this section;
- (b) the principles to be followed in apportioning the costs of proceedings before the arbitrator and on

(c) the maximum amount of an award against which no appeal shall lie."

[14] Mr. Borah contends that the proper remedy of the plaintiffs was to seek arbitration under S. 19, Defence of India Act 1935, and not to bring a suit. The contention is manifestly based upon a misunderstanding of the provisions of S. 19 of the Act. Under S. 19 of the Act, the appointment of an arbitrator is contemplated only when there is no agreement between the Government and the owners of the property. Section 19 does not contemplate appointment of an arbitrator for the purpose of settling disputes involving rights of parties in the matter of the apportionment of the compensation. The question of apportionment of compensation as between the claimants is not to be decided under the Defence of India Act or the rules framed thereunder. Mr. Borah attempted to argue that there was no agreement between the Government on the one hand and the plaintiffs and the defendants on the other as to the amount of compensation to be fixed. So far as the plaintiffs are concerned, their Advocate has frankly stated that his clients have never disputed the compensation fixed by Government and that, in fact, all the parties had agreed to the amount so fixed. This statement of the plaintiffs' advocate is substantiated by what the defendants have stated in para. graph 5 of their written statement which is in these terms. [After quoting Para. 5, his Lordship proceeded:] We are satisfied that there was an agreement between the plaintiffs and the defendants on the one hand and the Government on the other as to the amount fixed as compensation by Government.

[15] It was next contended by Mr. Borah that the suit being one for a declaration only without any consequential relief, no decree could have been passed in view of the provisions of S. 42, Specific Relief Act. The proviso to

S. 42 is in these terms:

"Provided that no Court shall make any such declaration where the plaintiff, being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so." It is plain that in this case the plaintiffs are, not able to seek any further relief as against the defendants. The plaintiffs' suit is clearly for a declaration of their right to the entire sum of Bs. 7000 odd set apart by Government for the benefit of the defendants. The amount claimed by the plaintiffs is not in the possession of the defendants; it is in the possession of Government who are ready to pay it to the plaintiffs if their right to it is declared by a Court of law. The Government not being a party, the plaintiffs cannot obtain relief in the matter of the payment of the amount from Govern. ment by a decree.

[16] Out of the 121 defendants 94 have appealed. Mr. Borah for the appellants has drawn our attention to an inconsistency in the operative part of the judgment in which it is declared that the defendants have no occupancy rights in the busti lands, whereas the finding of the trial Court on issue No. 2 is in these terms:

"I hold that the defendants were occupancy ryots. at the time they were made to vacate these lands." Mr. Borah contends that upon this finding, the defendants were clearly entitled to the entire: sum of Rs. 7,000 odd which has been set apart. as their share, the share of the plaintiffs having-been withdrawn by them.

[17] Mr. Ghose for the respondents has attempted to explain the inconsistency by stating that what the learned Judge meant was that notwithstanding the fact that the defendants were occupancy tenants at the date of the requisition, they were not so at the date of the acquisition, the relationship between the plaintiffs and the defendants as landlords and tenants having ceased at the date of the requisition. The explanation, though plausible, is not convincing. Occupancy ryots are not, in the strict sense of the word, mere tenants to whom the right to enjoy the property alone has been transferred; occupancy rights are heritable and transferable and cannot be regarded merely as rights accruing upon a lease. I am unable to accept the position that when there is a requisition of property under the Defence of India Rules in the first instance, followed by acquisition without surrendering the property, the rights of the claimants have to be ascertained first with reference to the requisition and, if those rights cease upon requisition, they must be regarded as extinct if there is a subsequent acquisition, even though there is no surrender in the interval. The acceptance of this contention would militate against the words " and the period of requisition thereof shall end " in sub-r. (3) of B. 75A, Defence of India Rules. These words in sub-r. (3) mean that notwithstanding the fact that when there is requisition followed by acquisition, the rights of the claimants have to be determined as though there was no requisition in the first instance. I, therefore, propose to examine the finding of the trial Court whether the appellants have established their status as occupancy tenants.

(18) Mr. Borah argued that all the appellants have succeeded in establishing their status in view of the fact that the plaintiffs failed in their allegation that they were tenants at will. It is true that the plaintiffs failed to establish that the defendants were tenants at will, but it was not the case of the plaintiffs that the defendants were occupancy tenants; that was the case of the defendants, which they had to establish. The question, therefore, arises whether all the defendant appellants have succeeded in proving their status as occupancy tenants. The evidence on this issue is to be found at pp. 28, 29, 81, 84, 85 and 114 of the paper-book. [After discussing the evidence and holding that only defendant 21 has succeeded in establishing his status as occupancy tenant and that defendants 60 and 61 have not, his Lordship proceeded.]

[19] The only reliable evidence which appears on the record is Ex. F a copy of a cheeta of 30 years of Ramcharani mouza, 1923-28. Mr. Ghose for the respondents contended that Ex. F has not been duly proved. We are, however, unable to entertain this objection for the first time in this Court. No objection appears to have been taken to the reception of Bx. F at the trial. Mr. Ghose contends that even if Ex. F were taken into consideration, it serves to establish that defendants 21, 82 and 87 only were occupancy tenants. We think this contention must be upheld. Mr. Borah for the defendants was unable to point out from Ex. F that any other defendants had acquired occupancy rights. Exhibit F contains, with the exception of defendants 32 and 37, the names of persons who are not defendants in the suit. Mr. Borah urged that the other defendants did not give evidence at the trial because they relied upon the evidence of the three defendants and the 2 other witnesses; that, in any case, the failure of the defendants other than defendants 21, 82 and 87 to depose to their status was due to the manner in which the suit was framed-suit in which 23 plaintiffs had impleaded 121 defendants, notwithstanding the fact that the title of the plaintiffs and the defendants was to be found in different pattas. In other words, in his submission, as the suit was bad for multifariousness the plaintiffs were not entitled to take exception to the failure of the defendants other than defendants 21, 32 and 37, to depose to their status. It is to be observed, however, that this aspect of the case was not argued or pressed in the Court of first instance. For the first time; Mr. Borah raised this question in reply to the respondents' advocate's address. Even so, we decided to permit Mr. Borah to address us on this aspect of the case.

[20] It is plain that unless Mr. Borah succeeds in taking the suit out of the purview of O. 1, R. 3, Civil P. C., the objection as to multifariousness must fail. Order 1, R. 3 is in these terms:

"3. Who may be joined as defendants—All persons may be joined as defendants against whom any right to relief in respect of or arising out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative, where, it separate suits were brought against such persons, any common question of law or fact would arise."

[21] Mr. Borah contends that the plaintiffs right to relief in this case does not arise out of the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions, so as to attract the provisions of R. 3. But we think the plaintiffs' right to relief clearly arises out of the compensation determined by Government for the land acquired under the Defence of India Rules. We are unable to accept Mr. Borah's contention that the act or transaction in this case is not the compensation assessed by Government but rather a series of acts or transactions resulting in the deprivation of the rights of the plaintiffs and the defendants in the property acquired. It is truethat upon acquisition, the plaintiffs and the defendants lost all rights in the property, but it is equally true that upon a statutory acquisition under the Defence of India Rules, no rightsremained with the persons whose lands were so acquired, except the right to compensation. The right to relief, therefore, of both the plaintiffs and the defendants arose as a result of the amount fixed by Government as compensation In this view, it is plain that if separate suits had been brought against the defendants or each of them by the plaintiffs or each of them, the common questions of law and fact would have been (1) whether the defendants were occupancy tenants (2) what compensation, if any, were they entitled to?

[22] The legal position of the Goverment vis.a.vis the persons whose lands are acquired under the Defence of India Rules has been stated by the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court in "Province of Bengal v. Board of Trustees for the Improvement of Calcutta," A. I. R. (33) 1946 Cal. 416: (227 I. C. 117). With respect, I agree with all that the learned Judges have stated except in one particular, where the learned Judges have regarded the position of Government vis-a-vis the owners of the property upon requisition as amounting to a statutory tenancy in favour of Government. With all respect, I do not think any question of tenancy, contractual or statutory, arises between the Government and the owners of the property upon requisition under the Defence of India Rules. What happens is that upon requisition when the Government takes possession of the property, the claimants are kept out of it, and as the Government have taken possession in pursuance of their statutory powers, they must pay compensation for such possession, and one of the ways in which such compensation might be determined is to determine what rent the landlord would receive if he were to let or had let out the property to a tenant. If the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court meant this when they said that there was a statutory tenancy created between the Government and the persons who were kept out of possession upon requisition under the Defence of India Rules, I would be content to endorse it.

[23] On the merits of the appeal, we have come to the conclusion that defendants 21, 32 and 37 only have established their status as occupancy tenants. The Calcutta High Court had occasion to consider the right of occupancy ryots upon acquisition of land under the Land Acquisition Act. Garth C. J., delivering the judgment of the Division Bench observed:

"The parties who usually suffer most from lands being taken for Government purposes are either the rycts with right of occupancy, or the holders, whoever they may be of the first permanent interest above the occupying ryots. The actual occupier is of course turned out by the Government, and if he is a ryot with a right of occupancy, he loses the benefit of that right, besides being driven possibly to find a holding and a home elsewhere; and the holder of the tenure immediately superior to the occupying ryots, whatever the nature of his holding may be, loses the rent of the land taken during the period of his holding. These two classes, therefore, would, generally speaking, be entitled to the larger portion of the compensation, and if the darpainidar in this Instance belongs to the latter class, the larger portion of the compensation ought presumably, to have gone to him."

We have accordingly come to the conclusion that defendants 21, 32 and 37 who have established their status as occupancy ryots, should be awarded compensation. There is no evidence before us to indicate to what share of the com. pensation determined by Government an occupancy ryot is entitled, vis-a-vis the owner. In the absence of such evidence, it is to be supposed that if compensation is awarded to more than one person and their shares inter se cannot, with any degree of certainty, be ascertained, they would be entitled to an equal share. Happily in this case it is not necessary to determine the shares of defendants 21, 32 and 37 as they have claimed a stated sum and Mr. Ghose has stated that the plaintiffs will not withdraw the amount claimed by these 3 defendants. We would accordingly modify the judgment and decree of the trial Court by declaring the right of the plaintiffs to the entire amount lying in deposit with Government less the amount which has been claimed by defendants 21, 32 and 37.

[24] The trial Court made no order as to costs of the suit presumably in view of the peculiar circumstances of the case. We allow the appeal to the extent of the modification to which we have referred, with no order as to costs.

Criminal Revn. No. 57 of 1949, D/- 17th March 1950. Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 133 (1)—Channel used by public—Obstruction.

Where a channel can lawfully be used by the public for 6 months when there is water in it, the application of S. 133 is clearly attracted if the people are prevented by the obstruction created by the person proceeded against from plying boats in the channel. J. C. Sen and R. K. Chaudhury-for Opposite Party.

Order.—An order under S. 137 (3), Criminal P. O. directing removal of an obstruction from a water channel within 14 days of the order was passed against 8 persons on 30th June 1949. On a petition of revision against this order, the learned Sessions Judge, L. A. D., after considering the evidence in the case came to the conclusion that question involved was one of fact and that there was no sufficient ground for a reference of the matter to this Court. He rejected the petition therefore.

[2] Three out of the 8 persons against whom the order was made have come up on revision to this Court.

[3] The case for the O. P. Kalicharan Namasudra, on whose complaint the order in question was passed, was that the petitioners along with others had constructed a bund over a channel which opened up during the rains, in order to catch fish there. It was also stated that this act was likely to lead to a breach of the peace. The petition was sent to the O/O. Hajo Police Station for enquiry and report. From the report it appeared that the petitioners with others had constructed a bund in the channel which connected Pitkati Beel to Lakbaitari river. The enquiry further revealed that there was apprehension of the breach of the peace also. The police report formed the basis of the proceedings under S. 183, Criminal P. C.

[4] The case of the 2nd party was that the channel in question was not a public one and S. 133, Criminal P. C., had no application to the facts of the case.

Namasudra, two other witnesses were examined on his behalf. The petitioners examined only one witness, the Mandal of the lot in which the channel is situate. The complainant's witnesses stated that the obstruction in question prevented people from plying boats in the channel. The witness on behalf of the 2nd party admitted that a bund had been constructed by the petitioners for purposes of catching fish. He stated that it did not cause any obstruction to boats as whenever boats came near the bund it was opened.

[6] On this evidence the learned Magistrate passed the order, the correctness of which has been assailed by this revision petition. The learned Judge was evidently of the view that the members of the public had access to the channel for 6 months when there was water in the channel and that they could lawfully ply boats therein. This finding receives support from the statement made by the Mandal of the lot who appeared as a witness on behalf of the petitioners.

[7] The learned counsel for the petitioners contends that the channel was private property and the dispute between the parties relates to private rights. Section 183, therefore, he argued, could not be applied to the facts of this case. In support of his contention he relied on In re Jaswantsangji Fatesangji, 22 Bom. 988 and Jagannath Sahu v. Parmeshwar Narayan, 86 ALL, 209: (A. I. R. (1) 1914 ALL, 218: 15 Cr. L. J. 229).

(8) In the Bombay case it was decided that where a dispute arose between the proprietors of two talukdari villages situate on the banks of a river about the diversion of the course of the river by means of a dam and a trench made by one of them in the current of the river, and each talukdar claimed the river as his own private property, S. 193, Criminal P. C., had no application.

[9] In the Allahabad case, it was held "that a field, which is on a lower level than the adjoining fields and over which the surplus water of those adjoining fields used to flow into a tank, even if it could be described as a channel, is not such a channel as could lawfully be used by the public, and action cannot be taken under S. 133, Criminal P. C. for the removal of any obstruction from it."

The learned counsel for the opposite party has no quarrel with the interpretation placed on S. 133 in these cases. He points out that in this case the channel could lawfully be used by the public for 6 months when there was water in it. If this finding is correct, the application of S. 133 is clearly attracted.

[10] I have no reason to differ from the finding arrived at in the Courts below. In these circumstances, the authorities relied on by the learned counsel for the petitioners would not apply and the order of the learned Magistrate would not be without jurisdiction.

[11] The learned Magistrate has pointed out in his report dated 3rd January 1950 that the obstruction in the channel has already been removed. This makes the dispute somewhat academic. There is no reason for interference. The petition of revision, therefore, is dismissed.

V.R.B. Revision dismissed.

Rukmini Kumar Das — Appellant v. The Chairman of the Silchar Municipal Board and another—Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 28 of 1949, D/- 18-3-1950, from judgment and decree of Sub-J., U. A. D. D/-28-2-1949.

Municipalities — Assam Municipal Act (I [1] of 1923), Ss. 320 and 286—Plaintiff served with notice by Chairman of Municipal Board calling upon plaintiff to turn off water connection from his premises — Suit by plaintiff against Municipal Board for permanent injunction — Notice under S. 320 held necessary — Notice of Chairman held act of Board within S. 286. [Paras 9 and 10]

S. K. Ghose and P. Chaudhuri — for Appellant. N. M. Dam — for Respondents.

Thadani C. J.—This is a second appeal from the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge, U. A. D., dated 28th February 1949, by which he affirmed the judgment and decree of the trial Court which had dismissed the plaintiff's suit, with no order as to costs.

[2] The plaintiff-appellant brought a suit against the Silchar Municipal Board for a permanent injunction restraining the Board from turning off a water-pipe connection from a building in occupation of the plaintiff within the municipal area of Silchar.

[8] The defence taken to the suit was that the plaintiff's failure to comply with the provisions of S. 320, Assam Municipal Act was a bar to the institution of the suit. Both the trial Court and the lower appellate Court upheld the defence.

[4] The relevant part of S. 320, Assam Municipal Act is in the these terms:

"320. No suit shall be brought against any Board or any of its officers, or any person acting under its direction for anything done under this Act, until the expiration of one month next after notice in writing has been delivered or left at the office of such Board, and also (if the suit is intended to be brought against any officer of the said Board or any person acting under its direction) at the place of abode of the person against whom such suit is threatened to be brought, stating the cause of suit, the nature of the relief sought, the amount of compensation claimed, and the name and place of abode of the person who intends to bring the suit; and unless such notice be proved, the Court shall find for the defendant."

[5] Mr. Ghose for the appellant contends that in this case, no notice was necessary as the suit brought by the appellant was not a suit for anything done under the Assam Municipal Act by the Board or any of its officers or any person acting under its direction; it was a suit for injunction in respect of a threatened act which the Municipal Board of Silchar intended to take in the event of the appellant's failure to comply with a notice served upon him by the Board calling upon him to turn off the water-pipe connection from the premises in question; in other words, the Silchar Municipal Board merely contemplated doing something in the future in the event of the failure of the appellant to comply with the terms of the notice; to such an act to be done in the future, the provisions of 320 were not applicable.

[6] In support of his contention Mr. Ghose has relied upon certain decisions of the Bombay High Court reported in Panachand v. Ahmeda. bad Municipality, 22 Bom. 230, Kashinath v. Gangabai, 22 Bom. 283; Manshar Ganesh v. Dakor Municipality, 22 Bom. 289 (F.B.); Shidmallappa v. Gokak Municipality, 22 Bom. 605 and Harilal Ranchodlal v. Himat Manek. chand, 22 Bom. 636, and to a case reported in Municipality of Parola v. Laxman Das, 25 Bom. 142: (2 Bom. L. R. 857). But many years later, a Division Bench of the Bombay High Court in a case reported in Vithoba Balaji v. Sholapur Municipality, A. I. B. (84) 1947 Bom. 241 : (I. L. R. (1947) Bom. 94), had occasion to review the previous decisions of the Bombay High Court to which Mr. Ghose has referred. In the Bombay case reported in Vithoba Balaji v. Sholapur Municipality, A. I. R. (34) 1947 Bom. 241 : (I. L. R. (1947) Bom. 94), the act done or purporting to be done under the Bombay Municipal Boroguhs Act was a notice served on the plaintiff as a licensee of the Municipality, to quit. Before the matter came to the stage of litigation, the plaintiff claimed to be a tenant, contending that the notice to quit was illegal in view of certain orders made under the Defence of India Rules, and asked the Municipality to reconsider the matter. The municipality however adhered to its previous resolution and the notice was served upon the plaintiff to quit. At page 245 of the report Vithoba Balaji v. Sholapur Municipality, A. I. R. (34) 1947 Bom. 241: (I. L. R. (1947) Bom. 94), Sen J. observed:

"In the present case, by their notice of August 1942, the Municipality (a) had purported to terminate their contract with the plaintiffs, and (b) had attempted to evict them. It seems to us that as regards the termination of the contract, the Municipality was perfectly within its rights. The terms of the contract with the plaintiffs are to be found in the pavati Ex. 24, one of the terms of which was, 'The permit-holder should vacate the site without any objection, whenever the municipality requires it and without the notice being given to the permit-holder.' Section 48 (1) of the Act enables the Borough Municipality inter alsa to enter into and perform all such contracts as it may consider necessary or expedient in order to carry into effect the provisions and purposes of the Act The termination of the contract was necessitated, according to the municipality, because it was going to start town planning operations. Many, if not all, of those operations would mean carrying out duties imposed on the municipality by S. 68 and the exercise of its discretionary powers under S. 71 of the Act. Thus, there can be no doubt that the termination of the contract was done, or at least it purported to be done, in pursuance of the Act there can be no doubt that the municipality was dealing with property lawfully vested in it when it attempted to evict the plaintiffs. The question, therefore, arises whether the notice of August 1942 and the municipality's subsequent resolution and the letter to the plaintiffs, dated 7-6-1948, should not be regarded as acts done or purporting to be done in pursuance of the Act within the meaning of S. 206 of the Act, acts which, according to the plaintiffs' contention, were illegal, in view of the District Magistrate's order."

Sen J., then referred to the decision of the Privy Council reported in Bhagchand Dagdusa v. Secretary of State, 54 I. A. 338: (A. I. R. (14) 1927 P. C. 176), in which the act in question was, in their Lordships' opinion, the Government order or Notification directing that the sums in question should be recovered by the Collector from the shop-keepers of Malegaon. Sen J. observed:

"though their Lordships' decision was not based on the argument that the threatened enforcement of the same was the act that came under S. 80, Civil P. C., it was based on the argument that the order of Government did so.... It is important to remember that no overt action by the Collector in pursuance of the Government Notification against the shop-keepers, had yet been taken. It seems to me that in the present case also, the notice of August 1942, the resolution and the subsequent letter of the municipality sent to the plaintiffs in June 1943 can be said, within the meaning of S. 206, to be acts done or purporting to be done in pursuance of the Act. It does not seem to me that there is any material difference as to the principle involved between the wording of S. 80, Civil P. C. and S. 208, Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act, . . ."

[7] Sen J. then referred to the previous decisions of the Bombay High Court and observed:

"That, however, was a case of an intentional breach of contract on the part of a Municipality and it was held, relyingion Ranchordas Moorarji v. Municipal Commr. Bombay, 25 Bom. 387: (3 Bom. L. R. 158) and Vishwanath v. Municipal Corporation, Bombay, 40 Bom. L. R. 685: (A. I. R. (25) 1938 Bom. 410), that it would be difficult to say that a Municipality or an officer of a Municipality committing a breach of a contract entered into by the Municipality does such act, or purports to do it, in pursuance of the provisions of the Act. Such a consideration cannot be said to arise in our present case, and we do not think that the decision in S. V. Mandik v. Borough Municipality of Jalgaon, 45 Bom. L. R. 1059: (A. I. R. (31) 1944 Bom. 97) can be regarded as any guide in this case."

[8] The facts before us are similar to the Bombay case reported in Vithoba Balaji v. Sholapur Municipality, A. I. R. (34) 1947 Bom. 241: (I. L. R. (1947) Bom. 94). The statutory provisions relating to the powers of the Municipal Board of Silchar in the matter under consideration are to be found in S. 286, Assam Municipal Act (I [1] of 1923). Section 286 is in these terms:

"The Board may cause the water to be turned off from any premises which are supplied with water, after giving notice in writing of not less than twenty-four hours:"

Then follow the conditions under which a notice can be given. Condition (d) reads:

"if the owner or occupier of the premises wilfully or negligently misuses or causes waste of water;"

Under S. 41, Assam Municipal Act, a Municipal Board

"at a meeting may appoint from among its members or, if it so desires, from among its members and the residents of the Municipality not being members, committees to assist it in the discharge of any specific duties or class of duties devolving upon it under this Act,"

(9) It is reasonable to suppose that it was in pursuance of s. 41 that the Committee considered the question of the water supply to this house and, having found that there were two water-pipe connections, it came to the conclusion that one of them should be turned off, apparently to prevent waste of water. The Chairman of the Board, on receiving the resolution of the Water Works Committee, Silchar, served a notice upon the appellant, the terms of which constitute, in our opinion the cause of notion for the present suit. To meet this difficulty it was contended by Mr. Ghose that assuming that the giving of a notice is an act done under S. 286, Assam Municipal Act, nevertheless S. 286 contemplates the giving of notice by the Board itself, and not by the Chairman, that as there has been a departure from the strict observance of S. 286, the giving of notice in this case cannot be regarded as an act done under the Assam Municipal Act. We do not think there is any substance in this contention. The Board must act through its officers, and in this case, it has acted through its principal officer, namely, the Chairman. The act of the Chairman, therefore, must be regarded as the act of the Board within the meaning of S. 286, Assam Municipal Act. In any case, it must be regarded as purporting to be done under the Act. It is true that the words "purporting to be done" do not find place in S. 320 as they do in S. 206, Bombay Municipal Boroughs Act (I [1) of 1923), but we do not think that the omission of the words "purporting to be done" in 8. 320 is of any consequence, for the words "purporting to be done" are a necessary implication of the words "an act done." Apart from this necessary implication, the act of the Chairman in giving notice in pursuance of S. 286, must, on the facts of this case, be regarded as an act done by the Board within the meaning of S. 320.

[10] Our conclusion then is that the giving of notice by the Chairman of Silchar Municipal Board to the plaintiff, was an act done under S. 286, Assam Municipal Act, and that a notice under S. 320, Assam Municipal Act, was therefore, obligatory before a suit could be brought. In the absence of such a notice, the suit must fail.

[11] The result is that the appeal is dismissed. As the Courts below have dismissed the suit with no order, we do not propose to make any order as to costs of the appeal.

(a) Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (I [1] of 1886), Ss. 81 and 151— Powers of Revenue Tribunal under S. 151 — Tribunal if can set aside sale on ground of hardship after one year from date of sale — Civil Court, if can declare Tribunal's order as nullity—Civil P. C. (1908), S. 9— Specific Relief Act (1877), S. 42.

The powers of the Revenus Tribunal under S. 151 of the Regulation are apparently very wide. But it has no power to pass arbitrary orders. The section merely empowers the Tribunal to pass any orders it may deem fit within the scope of its authority. Its orders also must be legal and within the limits of its jurisdiction. It may, therefore, interfere on appeal or in revision under S. 151 with orders of sale on all legal grounds. But if a sale is sought to be set aside on the ground of hardship and injustice, it could be set aside only within one year from the date the sale became final. The Tribunal even in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction cannot enlarge its powers in this respect. If the Tribunal exceeds its jurisdiction in setting aside the sale more than one year after the date on which it becomes final, it contravenes an express direction contained in the statute and the civil Court has jurisdiction to declare the order of the Tribunal a nullity.

- (c) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 41, R. 33 Decree by trial Court—No appeal by plaintiff — Modification of decree in second appeal.

The trial Court granted the plaintiff a decree for the declaratory decree claimed by him but not for possession. He did not appeal from the decree; nor did he put in any cross-objections. The defendant appealed and obtained a reversal of the decree of the trial Court. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court and prayed for the reversal of the appellate decision and also for the modification of the decree of the trial Court:

Held, that the decree of the trial Court could not be modified in plaintiff's favour as he did not appeal from the decision of the trial Court. [Para 20]

(d) Specific Relief Act (1877), S. 42 and Proviso— Order of Revenue Tribunal setting aside sale – Suit for declaration that order was without jurisdiction and that it be set aside — No relief for possession claimed—Decree, if can be passed.

Where the plaintiff sued for a declaration that the order of Revenue Tribunal setting aside the sale of the defendant's land, which the plaintiff had purchased, was illegal and without jurisdiction as being contrary to the provisions of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation and that it be set aside, without claiming a relief for possession:

Held (Per Ram Labhaya J.; Thadani C. J. Contra) — That the setting aside of the order of the Tribunal was not a further or present relief, because, the order being without jurisdiction, it required no setting aside. The suit was, therefore, one for mere declaration when further relief of possession which was available and which should have been claimed was not claimed and, consequently, the plaintiff was not entitled to a decree. [Paras 40 and 41]

Per Thadani C. J.—The suit brought by the plaintiff was, in fact and in essence, a suit to set aside the order of the Revenue Tribunal as being contrary to the provisions of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, and, as such, it was not hit by the proviso to S. 42. There was, therefore, no impediment to the passing of a decree for the plaintiff for a declaration as prayed for by him without more.

K. R. Baroah and B. N. Deka-for Appellant. J. N. Borah-for Respondents.

Ram Labhaya J.—This is an appeal from the judgment and decree of the Special Subordinate Judge, A. V. D., by which the order of the Sadar Munsiff, dated 31st July 1947, decreeing plaintiff's suit was reversed and plaintiff's suit dismissed.

[2] The suit was for a declaration that the order of the Revenue Tribunal dated 27th April 1946 setting aside the sale of the land belonging to defendant 1 was illegal and without jurisdiction. The plaintiff it is alleged also prayed for khas possession of the land in suit.

[3] The facts leading to the litigation are as follows:

[4] The land covered by patta No. 152 of Majgoan village stood in the name of Manik Chandra Agarwalla, defendant 1. The land was sold for recovery of arrears of land revenue for the year 1348 and 1349 B. S. on 29th November 1943. The plaintiff was the purchaser. The sale was confirmed on 11th May 1944, and the sale certificate was issued on 12th May 1944. On plaintiff's application for delivery of possession, the Additional Deputy Commissioner directed the Sub-Deputy Collector on 19th May 1944 to deliver possession of the property to him. The possession was delivered on 4th November 1944. The patta in respect of the land stood in the name of Manik Chandra Agarwalla, defendant 1. In this patta he was shown as a minor with his mother as the guardian.

(5) Dhanaraj Agarwalla, father of Manik Chandra Agarwalla, acting as guardian of his son, preferred an appeal against the order directing sale of the minor's property and prayed that the sale be set aside. The appeal was sent by registered post and it was received in the office of the Revenue Tribunal on 27th August 1945. On 27th April 1946, the Revenue Tribunal ordered that the sale be set aside on usual conditions, viz.,

"On payment of the arrears of revenue for which the estate was sold, the cost of the sale, interest at 6 percent perannum of the purchase money, as also intermediate payments of Government dues that may have been made by the auction-purchaser or any sum paid out or decreed as surplus sale proceeds."

The order of the Revenue Tribunal was a very brief one. The appeal was described as a case for setting aside the sale under S. 151, Assam Land & Revenue Regulation. The sale was set aside on the ground that the revenue for the two years (1348 and 1349 B. S.) was actually sent by money order to the Mouzadar but owing to the change of Mouzadars the amount was not credited to the Government as the statement showed. The gist of the finding was that the Mouzadars had failed to function and this had materially contributed to the sale and the loss of an estate to a minor. It was observed that the delay in moving the Court had not been satisfactorily explained but it was condo. ned in the special circumstances of the case. The only special circumstances referred to in the order are that the sale was of a minor's estate and the failure on the part of the Mouzadar to function properly had contributed to the sale materially.

[6] The plaintiff, who was the purchaser, instituted the suit out of which this appeal arises. His case was that the defaulter Manik Chandra Agarwalla was not a minor at the time of the revenue sale. He had attained the age of majority at the time. His father could not represent him in his appeal or application for setting aside the sale. The appeal that was preferred was barred by time and the order of the Revenue Tribunal setting aside the sale was illegal and without jurisdiction.

[7] The main defence was that the sale itself was invalid and the order of the Revenue Tribunal whether right or wrong could not be challenged in a civil Court. The allegation that defendant 1 had attained the age of majority at the time of the sale was denied. The learned Munsiff found that on the date of sale defendant 1 was not a minor. He had attained the age of majority. The land revenue for the years for which the land was sold had not been received by the Mouzadar who had reported about the accumulation of arrears. He had received only a portion of the amount due for one year. The finding arrived at thus was that some money on account of land revenue was due on the date of sale. It was further found that the order of the revenue tribunal setting aside the sale was without jurisdiction and therefore null and void. As regards the relief, the learned Judge held that the plaintiff had not asked for possession of the property, he had not paid the court-fee on this relief and that it was not necessary to grant consequential relief. He treated the suit as in substance a suit for declaration only and granted plaintiff a declaration that the order of the Revenue Tribunal dated 16th April 1946 was null and void and not binding on the plaintiff.

[8] On appeal the learned Sub-Judge reversed the decree of the trial Court holding that the order of the Revenue Tribunal was not in excess of jurisdiction or illegal and therefore was not assailable in the civil Court. He also found that plaintiff was not in possession of the property. He had not prayed for this consequential relief which was available to him and was not therefore entitled to even the declaratory relief.

[9] Plaintiff has appealed. His learned counsel has assailed the correctness of the appellate decree on both the grounds on which it rests.

[10] The first question that arises for determination in this appeal is whether the order of the Revenue Tribunal is without jurisdiction. The learned counsel for the respondent has urged with considerable vigour that an appeal had been preferred to the Revenue Tribunal on behalf of defendant 1. This appeal was against the order of the Deputy Commissioner directing the sale of the property and was covered by 8. 147 (b), Assam Land & Revenue Regulation. The Tribunal in the exercise of its powers under S. 148 cl. (3) of the Regulation condoned the delay and then set aside the sale on the merits. The order, he contended, was entirely within the scope of the powers of the Revenue Tribunal and the civil Court was precluded from exercising jurisdiction in the case as the claim of the plaintiff arose out of the collection of land revenue. In fact, he contended that it arose directly from the process of sale for the recovery of the arrears of land revenue. In supportof this contention he relied on S. 154 (g), Assam. Land & Revenue Regulation.

[11] The sale in this case was held on 29th November 1948. It was confirmed on 11th May 1944. The appeal to the Revenue Tribunal mustbe deemed to have been preferred on 27th August 1945 on which date it was actually received in the office of the Revenue Tribunal some 15 months after the date of confirmation of the sale. The order directing sale is an appealable order. It is covered by S. 147 of the Regulation. Under cl. (b) an appeal would lie to the Revenue Tribunal if the order directing sale was passed. by the Deputy Commissioner as in this case. The learned counsel for the appellant had nothing at all to say against this view. It is also clear that the Revenue Tribunal had the power to admit the appeal after time if it was satisfied that the appellant had sufficient cause for not presenting the appeal within the period allowed by law. Even on this point there is no conflict. between the learned counsel for the parties. But. from this point onward, there is no agreement. The learned counsel for the appellant urges that there was no sufficient cause for admitting the appeal after time. The Tribunal in its order observed that no satisfactory explanation for the delay had been given. In extending time, in spite of this finding, presumably with a view to save the defendant, who was wrongly described as a minor, from possible hardship, it exceeded its powers and acted in defiance of the provisions of the law contained in cl. (3) of S. 148. He relies on this contention as the first ground of his attack.

[12] His second and the main ground of attack was that in setting aside the sale under 8. 151, the Revenue Tribunal clearly exceeded its jurisdiction. His contention was that remedies for getting orders of sale set aside are all contained in Chap. V of the Regulation and a sale under no conceivable circumstances can be set aside by the Tribunal in the exercise of its powers under S. 151. The remedies against orders of sale contained in Chap. V, he urged, are exhaustive. An application for setting aside sale may be made under S. 79 on the grounds specified in the section. The sale may be annulled by the Revenue Tribunal under S. 81 on an application made to it on the ground of hardship or injustice within one year from the date of the sale becoming final. A suit for annulment of the sale may be instituted under s. 82 but that it was not open to the Revenue Tribunal to interfere with any order of sale in the exercise of its very wide powers under s. 151 under any circumstances.

[13] In order to decide whether the Revenue Tribunal acted within the limits of its jurisdiction, we have first to determine under what provision of the law the Tribunal acted. The Tribunal had an appeal before it admittedly, and a time barred appeal at that. Before condoning delay it treated the appeal as an application under S. 151 without giving any reasons for the adoption of this course. The delay in preferring the appeal, inordinate though it was, was condoned but without reference to the provisions contained in S. 148 (3) and in spite of the finding that this delay had not been satisfactorily explained. Such a condonation could more appropriately be ordered under 8. 151 which prescribes no limitation for petitions under it. The sale itself was set aside on the ground that a minor's estate had been sold when the land revenue for the period in question appeared to have been remitted to the Mouzadar though the amount had not been credited to the Government owing to the change of Mouzadars, which in the opinion of the Tribunal materially contributed to the sale. The learned Munsif, who heard the suit giving rise to this appeal, had to submit a report to the Tribunal in a different capacity before the Tribunal directed that the sale be set aside. His report then was that the appeal was time barred though interference was possible on the ground of hardship and also on the ground of irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale.

The Tribunal evidently was not satisfied that there was any irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale but it set it aside presumably on the ground of hardship.

[14] We are driven to this conclusion as according to the order of the Tribunal the land revenue for the two years in question had not been credited. The evidence in the case shows that a part of the revenue had not been even remitted to the outgoing Mouzadar. There was still some balance due from the pattadar (defendant 1). The report before the Tribunal indicated hardship. The order directing sale could not be shown to be illegal and without jurisdiction. No irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale is mentioned or referred to in the order. There was thus no other ground for setting aside the sale except that of hardship. The word 'hardship' has not been used by the Tribunal. But as there was no other conceivable basis on which the Tribunal could set aside the sale, we think, the Tribunal was influenced by the consideration that the sale occasioned hardship to the pattadar. This to our mind is the only reasonable interpretation of the order.

[15] We now proceed to consider whether the Tribunal could set aside the sale on the ground of hardship. This is the crucial question in the case. The powers of the Tribunal under S. 151 of the Regulation are apparently very wide. It may pass any order it deems fit after calling for the proceedings held by any subordinate officer. But it will be readily conceded that it has no power to pass arbitrary orders. This section, correctly interpreted, merely empowers the Tribunal to pass any orders it may deem fit within the scope of its authority. Its orders also must be legal and within the limit of its jurisdiction. This limitation on its apparently unrestricted powers is necessarily implied. The orders, therefore, must be within the framework of the Regulation. The Tribunal cannot for instance pass an order which the Regulation forbids. Whether the jurisdiction that the Tribunal is exercising is original or appellate or revisional, it cannot pass orders in disregard of any statutory direction contained in the Regulation whether express or implied. It may therefore interfere on appeal or in revision under S. 151 with orders of sale on all legal grounds. But if a sale is sought to be set aside on the ground of hardship and injustice, it could be set aside only within one year from the date the sale became final. The Tribunal even in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction cannot enlarge its powers in this respect.

[16] It is noteworthy that the Regulation does not empower the Tribunal to extend the period of one year in order to exercise its jurisdiction on the ground of hardship or injustice. When the Tribunal extends the period for an appeal or condones delay in revision, it merely can exercise its powers, appellate or revisional, as the case may be, that it possesses but it cannot exceed those powers merely because the appeal or the petition for revision are treated as within time. Even after the condonation of delay, if the sale could not be set aside on any ground except hardship or injustice, the Tribunal had no power to set it aside after one year from the date that it became final. I understand that this was what my Lord the Chief Justice wanted to convey when he held in Mt. Monondari Nepalini v. Saruram Siring in Revenue Appeal No. 54 of 1948 that where the subject-matter of the case before the Court involved a setting aside of the sale, it would be governed by S. 81 which prescribes a period of limitation within which powers given to the Tribunal could be exercised. In this view of the matter, it must be held that the Tribunal exceeded its jurisdiction in setting aside the sale more than one year after the date on which it became final. In doing so, the Tribunal also contravened an express direction contained in the statute and this transgression on its part makes the order easily assailable in the civil Court on the ground of obvious illegality.

Regulation will not help defendant-respondent if the Tribunal in setting aside the sale exceeded its jurisdiction. This proposition has not been disputed. In fact, the matter is concluded by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Secy. of State v. Mask & Co., A. I. B. (27) 1940 P. C. 105: (I. L. B. (1940) Kar. P. C. 194), wherein their Lordships have gone further and have laid it down that "exclusion of jurisdiction of the Civil Court is not to be readily inferred but such exclusion must either be explicitly expressed or clearly implied. Even if jurisdiction is so excluded, the Civil Courts have jurisdiction to examine into cases where the provisions of the Act have not been complied with, or the statutory Tribunal has not acted in conformity with the fundamental principles of judicial procedure."

[18] This pronouncement of their Lordships was followed by a Division Bench of the Allaha. bad High Court reported in Allah Taala v. Dist. Board of Pilibhit, A. I. R. (82) 1945 ALL. 273: (I. L. R. (1945) ALL. 661).

[19] It is obvious that in directing that the sale be set aside the Tribunal exceeded its juris. diction or at least disregarded a mandatory direction contained in the statute, unconsciously though it may be, thus making it possible for the civil Court to come to the aid of the aggrieved party. The jurisdiction of the civil Court to declare the order null and void in this case is, therefore, undoubted.

[20] The plaintiff, however, has another difficulty in his way. The trial Court granted him a decree for the declaratory relief claimed by him. He did not appeal from the decree of the trial Court, nor did he put in any cross objections. The defendant alone appealed and obtained a reversal of the decree of the trial Court. Plaintiff has come to this Court and has prayed for the reversal of the appellate decision and also for the modification of the order of the trial Court. He now wants a decree for possession also.

[21] It is clear that not having appealed from the decision of the trial Court, he allowed it to become final against him. He cannot directly appeal against the decision of the trial Court to this Court. He is entitled to ask for a reversal of the appellate decree and the restoration of the decree of the trial Court. But the decree that the trial Court granted was a decree for a declaration only. The plaintiff is out of possession. His own statement in the trial Court was that he got only symbolical possession as a result of the sale in his favour and that after the Tribunal ordered the sale to be set aside, defendant took possession of the land. His counsel now has urged that the plaint included a prayer for confirmation of possession or in the alternative for khas possession. He refers to the final para of the plaint which embodies this double relief. He contends that the trial Court was wrong in suggesting that the relief for possession was not claimed or that it was not necessary. He also urges that the appellate Court was in error in holding that the relief for possession had not been claimed. The finding arrived at the appeal stage is one of fact. The learned Judge found that the relief though originally included in the plaint was expunged. This statement of fact is admittedly correct so far as the title of the plaint goes where the relief claimed was described. In the last para of the plaint, where also the relief claimed was described, the prayer for possession was allowed to remain. The title of the plaint and the final para were thus in conflict. The court-fee appeared to have been paid only on the declaratory relief. The trial Court's interpretation of the plaint was that relief for possession was not meant to be claimed. He referred to the fixed court-fee of Rs. 10 paid by the plaintiff in support of this view. This view was accepted without demur by the plaintiff. He did not appeal against the virtual dismissal of the suit so far as possessory relief was concerned. He did not file any cross-objection against the decision. In these circumstances it seems that the view taken by the lower appellate Court was correct. But assuming as is now urged by the learned counsel for the plaintiff that the relief for possession was not meant to be excluded though payment of a fixed court fee of Rs. 10 is an indication to the contrary, the decree (of the Court of first instance) as pointed out above cannot be modified in plaintiffs favour as he did not appeal from the decision of the trial Court. A modification of the trial Court's decree at the stage would involve permitting an appeal direct to this Court from the decision of the Court of the first instance. This is not possible in law and this view is fully supported by clear pronouncements from their Lordships of the Privy Council contained in Nobin Chandra v. Chandra Madhab, 44 Cal. 1: (A. I. B. (3) 1916 P. C. 148) and Mahomed Khaleef Shirazi & Sons v. Les Tanneries, A. I.R. (13) 1926 P. C. 34: (49 Mad. 435). In the latter case, Mahomed Khaleef Shirazi & Sons v. Les Tanneries, A. I. B. (13) 1926 P. C. 34: (49 Mad. 435), it was held that an appeal direct to His Majesty in Council from the decree of the trial Judge is not allowable under the Civil Procedure Code or under the Letters Patent of the High Court, and that O. 41, R. 33 is not intended to apply to such cases.

[22] The learned counsel for the appellant has relied on Ponnari Rao v. Lakshmi Narasamma, A. I. B. (26) 1938 Mad. 322: (177 I. C. 693), Tricomdas Cooverji v. Gopinath Jiu Thakur, A. I. R. (3) 1916 P. C. 182: (44 Cal. 759) and Iswarayya v. Swarnam Iswarayya, A. I. R. (18) 1931 P. C. 234; (54 Mad. 774), for showing that it is open to this Court under O. 41, R. 33 to pass any order which in the view of the Court may be necessary for doing complete justice between the parties. It is not necessary to consider these cases in detail as the question now before the Court did not arise in any of these three cases. They have really no bearing on the point. Besides the pronouncements of their Lordships of the Privy Council referred to above leave no room for doubt in the matter and I am quite clear that it is not open to this Court now even in the exercise of its powers under O. 41, R. 33 to grant plaintiff any other relief than the restoration of the trial Court's decree.

[23] The question then arises whether the declaratory relief allowed by the trial Court offends against the provisions contained in S. 42, Specific Relief Act. The learned counsel for the appellant contends that S. 42, Specific Relief Act does not stand in the way of the plaintiff getting the relief allowed to him by the trial Court. This contention of his is based on the view of a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court expressed in Mahomed Manjural Haque v. Bissesar Banerjee, 47 C. W. N. 408: (A. I. R. (30) 1943 Cal. 361). Relying on this, the learned counsel argues that in this case the decree has the effect of giving present relief in addition to the declaration that the order of the Revenue Tribunal setting aside the sale was null and void and was therefore governed not by S. 42, Specific Relief Act but by the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code.

[24] In order fully to appreciate the view expressed in Mahomed Manzural Haque v. Bisseswar Banerjee, 47 C. W. N. 408: (A. I B. (30) 1943 Cal. 361), it is necessary to refer to the factor of this case.

[25] The suit was for a declaration that a certain order made by the Board of Revenue, Bengal, was ultra vires and void. A certain share of a revenue paying estate was sold for the recovery of arrears of land revenue. The plaintiff was the purchaser at the revenue sale held under S. 19, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859 (Act XI [11] of 1859). The sale was confirmed and a certificate of sale was issued to the purchaser under S. 28 of the Act. On 7th April 1937, the Collector ordered delivery of possession to him under S. 29. Before the last order could be carried out and plaintiff placed in possession, the defendants preferred an appeal to the Commissioner praying that the sale be set aside. The appeal was dismissed as barred by time. On 25th May 1937, they presented a petition to the Board of Revenue against the Commissioner's order. The Board after considering the report from the Commissioner set aside the sale. It appeared from the order of the Board that it was influenced by considerations of hardship. It was against this order of the Board that the suit was mainly directed. The relief asked for in the plaint was as follows:

"That the Board's order be declared ultra vires, void and unenforceable and set aside;

That the plaintiff be declared entitled to get possession of the property in sult under S. 29 of the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act;

That such other or modified reliefs as the plaintiff may be entitled to, be granted to him, besides costs and interest."

[26] The suit was decreed in the trial Court.
On appeal, it was contended that the suit was not maintainable without a prayer for recovery of possession as consequential relief and without the addition of the Collector as a party.

[27] On behalf of the appellants reliance was placed on Moothoo Vijia v. Dorasinga Tevar, 2 I. A. 169: (15 Beng. L. B. 83 P. C.) and Sheoparsan Singh v. Ram Nandan Prasad, 48 I. A. 91: (A. I. B. (3) 1916 P. C. 78), while the respondents' counsel contended on the strength of Robert Fischer v. Secy. of State, 26 I. A. 161

(22 Mad. 270 P. C.) that S. 42, Specific Relief Act was not exhaustive of the cases in which a declaratory relief without more may be granted. In Moothoo Vijia v. Dorasinga Tevar, 2 I. A. 169: (15 Beng. L. B. 83 P. C.), their Lordships laid down that the Courts in India had no power to make a merely declaratory decree otherwise than under S. 15, Civil P. C. of 1859 which was as follows:

"No suit shall be open to objection on the ground that a merely declararory decree or order is sought thereby, and it shall be lawful for civil Courts to make binding declarations of right without granting consequential relief."

[28] In delivering the judgment of their

Lordships Sir James Colville said:

"They (their Lordships) at first conceived that the power of the Courts in India to make a merely declaratory decree was admitted to rest upon S. 15 Civil P. C., the effect of which has been so much discussed. Mr. Doyne, however, raised some question as to that and suggested that the power was possessed by the Courts in the mofussil before the Code of Civil Procedure was passed, and had not been taken away thereby. No authority which establishes the first of these propositions was cited; and their Lordships conceive that if the Legislature had intended to continue to those Courts the general power of making declarations (if they ever possessed such a power), it would not have introduced this clause into the Code of Civil Procedure, which, if a limited construction is to be put upon it, clearly implies that any decree made in excess of the power thereby conferred would be objectionable."

[29] Their Lordships were of the opinion that the application of S. 15, Civil P. C. must be be governed by the same principles as those upon which the Court of Chancery proceeded in reference to the Chancery Procedure Act, S. 50. The Code of 1859 was repealed by the Code of 1877 and the provision as to declaratory decrees was taken out of the Civil Procedure Code and appeared in a modified form in the Specific Relief Act as S. 42.

[80] In Robert Fischer v. Secy. of State, 26 I. A. 16: (22 Mad. 270 P. C.), S. 42, Specific Relief Act came up for consideration before their Lordships of the Privy Council. In that case, the Collector, with the subsequent sanction of the Board of Revenue, ordered on notice to the proprietor and lessees of a zamindary, that separate registration and sub-assessment of the appellant's village situate therein be made under Regulation XXV [25] of 1802, S. 8, and Act I [1] of 1876. Thereafter the Government, on the application of one of the lessees, without notice either to the appellant or the Collector, ordered the latter to cancel the registration. A suit was instituted by the appellant by which he prayed for a declaration that the order of the Govern. ment was ultra vires and illegal.

[81] Act I [1] of 1876 (8. 2) empowered the Collector to hold an inquiry and either in the absence of or on disallowing objections of parties interested, to register the alienated portion in the name of the alienee and to apportion the assessment of such alienated portion. Any person aggrieved by either the grant or refusal of separate registration could sue in a civil Court. It was contended before their Lordships of the Privy Council that the suit for a declaratory decree alone was not entertainable in view of the provisions contained in 8. 42, Specific Relief Act. Lord Macnaghten, who delivered the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows:

"Now in the first place it is at least open to doubt whether the present suit is within the purview of S. 42, Specific Relief Act. There can be no doubt as to the origin and purpose of that section. It was intended to introduce the provisions of S. 50, Chancery Procedure Act of 1852 as interpreted by judicial decision. Before the Act of 1852 it was not the practice of the Court in ordinary suits to make a declaration of right except as introductory to relief which it proceeded to administer. But the present suit is one to which no objection could have been taken before the Act of 1852. It is in substance a suit to have the true construction of a statute declared and to have an act done in contravention of the statute rightly understood pronounced void and of no effect. That is not the sort of declaratory decree which the framers of the Act had in their mind. But even assuming that the Specific Relief Act applies to such a suit as this, what is the result? What further relief can be required? The so-called cancellation is pronounced void, the order of the Government falls to the ground, and the decision of the Collector stands good and operative as from the date on which It was made. The vitality of the decision is not impaired or affected merely by destruction or mutilation of the entry in the Collector's book,"

[32] It is clear that their Lordships decided the case on the assumption that the Specific Relief Act applied. They found that no further relief could have been asked for in the case. It is also noteworthy that the suit was instituted under the express provisions of the Madras Act I [1] of 1876. The jurisdiction reserved for the civil Court by that Act was in its nature appellate. Any person aggrieved by either the grant or refusal of separate registration could sue in the civil Court. The order of the Collector granting separate registration was cancelled by the Government of Madras. A declaration that the order of the Government was ultra vires would have been sufficient to restore the order of the Collector. In these circumstances the suit was held to be not open to any objection. The expression of doubt whether a suit of that nature was within the purview of S. 42, Specific Relief Act, however, remains. There is also the observation that a suit which was in substance to have the true construction of a statute declared, and to have an act done in contravention of the statute rightly understood pronounced void and of no effect was not of the type which the farmers of the Specific Relief Act had in mind. This dictum has been interpreted as implying that S. 42, Specific Relief Act is not exhaustive of the cases in which relief for mere declaration may be asked for.

[33] In Sheoparsan Singh v. Ram Nandan Prasad, 43 I. A. 91: (A. I. R. (3) 1916 P. C. 78), their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down as follows:

"The Court's power to make a declaration without more is derived from S. 42, Specific Relief Act, and regard must, therefore, be had to its precise terms."

(34) This interpretation of S. 42 was not easily reconcilable with the observations made in Robert Fischer v. Secy. of State, 26 I. A. 16: (22 Mad. 270 P. C.) The learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court found themselves confronted with an apparent conflict between the two pronouncements from their Lordships of the Privy Council. They interpreted the remarks in Fischer's case, 26 I. A. 16: (22 Mad. 270 P. C.) as conveying that S. 42 was not intended to apply to cases where the declaration asked for included present relief.

[35] Now, let us see what the present relief in Fischer's case (26 I. A. 16: 22 Mad 270 P. C.) was. The suit was for a mere declaration that the order of the Madras Government was ultra vires and illegal. It was under a particular provision of Act I [1] of 1876. That provision virtually allowed an appeal to the civil Court if any party felt aggrieved by the decision of the revenue authorities in the matter of registra. tion. The declaration that the order of the Government was ultra vires could restore the order of the Collector. The restoration of the Collector's order was to lead to the undoing of any act, e. g., entry or remarks indicating the cancellation of registration-by the Collector in pursuance of the illegal order of the Madras Government. The result would follow automatically. It was not necessary for the plaintiff to ask for any further relief in that case. The effect of the declaration in that case was exactly the same as in the case of an appellate decree of a civil Court which sets aside or modifies the decree of the Court below. If before reversal or modification the lower Court has allowed its decree to be executed, it will have to put the parties in the same position which they occupied before the original order was given effect to in execution. The declaration granted by the civil Court in Fischer's case, (26 I. A. 16: 22 Mad. 270 P. C.) gave it the effect of an appellate order. It automatically granted all necessary relief. The plaintiff was put in the position which he had occupied before the cancellation of the Collector's order by the Government. according to the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court, would be the present relief which the declaration in that case included.

case. The Collector had ordered delivery of possession. But befere this order could have been given effect to, the sale was set aside by the Board of Revenue. A declaration that the order of the Board of Revenue was null and void was enough for plaintiff's purpose. The Collector could then have given possession in pursuance of his own order which would have been revived by the declaration sought for. The declaration impliedly gave all the relief that the plaintiff required. It was not necessary for him to ask for possession as he could get it in execution of the Collector's order. The declaration in that case also afforded the necessary present relief.

[37] The observations in Fischer's case (26 I. A. 16: 22 Mad. 270 P. C.) that the framers of the Act did not intend that S. 42 should apply to cases in which in substance the suit was to have the true construction of a statute declared, and to have an act done in contravention of the statute rightly understood pronounced void and of no effect were, however, not made the basis of the decision in the case. It was assumed that the case was governed by S. 42 and it was then held that as no further relief was necessary the claim was not hit by the proviso to S. 42, Specific Relief Act. Similarly, in the Calcutta case the interpretation that was placed on the observations of Lord Macnaghten with a view to reconciling them with what was clearly held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sheo. parsan Singh v. Ram Nandan Pd., 48 I. A. 91: (A. I. R. (3) 1916 P. C. 78) was not the basis of the decision. The case was decided on the assumption that S. 42 applied to it but it was not necessary for the plaintiff to ask for possession as after the declaration that the order set. ting aside the sale was ultra vires he could take possession in execution of the Collector's order who had not completed the proceedings by delivery of possession. I am in respectful agreement with the learned Judges of the High Court in the interpretation they have put on the observations of Lord Macnaghten contained in Fischer's case (26 I. A. 16: 22 Mad. 270 P. C.). It would seem that S. 42 can have no application to suits which are provided for expressly by the statute which gives a sort of an appellate juris. diction to the civil Court in cases which are decided either summarily as under O. 21, R. 69, Civil P. C., or by executive or revenue authorities as in Fischer's case, (26 I. A. 16: 22 Mad. 270 P. C.). Such cases would be outside the purview of S. 42. But the Calcutta case did not belong to this class. It, however, was not within the mischief of S. 42 as the declaration asked for served exactly the same purpose as it did in the case of Fischer.

[38] Both these cases are distinguishable from the present case. The suit in this case is not covered by any provision of Assam Land & Revenue Regulation. The civil Court in entertaining this suit is not exercising any jurisdiction which is expressly vested in it by the statute. This is one feature which distinguishes it from the case of Fischer. The other distinguishing feature is that a mere declaration is not all that the plaintiff could claim. He got possession from the Collector. It was symbolical possession according to him and according to his own statement possession was taken over by defendants after the order of the Board by which the sale was set aside. The situa. tion created was that not only was the sale set aside but plaintiff was deprived of the possession as well. A declaration that the order setting aside the sale was ultra vires would not help the plaintiff in getting possession from the Collector. He has already given him possession and did not take it back after the order of the Board. The defendants dispossessed the plaintiff. If the order of the Board is declared null and void and the sale is held to be valid, plaintiff would be entitled to possession of the land. This relief he can now obtain only by a suit. This further relief he cannot seek from the revenue authorities in the circumstances of this case. The suit is not covered, therefore, by the observations of Lord Machaghten in Fischer's case, (26 I. A. 16: 22 Mad. 270 P. C.), as interpreted by the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court. The declaration asked for in this case does not include any present relief. It will be a mere declaration which may entitle the plaintiff to sue for possession later. The circumstance that the plaintiff will be put to the necessity of instituting a separate suit for possession even if the declaration sought for is granted to him was not present in either of the two cases relied on. In both the cases it was found as a fact that no further relief was necessary to be claimed on the facts which were different from the facts of the present case.

[89] It cannot be ignored that S. 42, Specific Relief Act was applied to both the cases and thus the position that the proviso to S. 42 was imperative was recognised. The requirements of the proviso are mandatory and this case does not fulfil these requirements. It cannot be regarded as including any present relief in the sense in which the expression was understood in the Calcutta case.

[40] The learned counsel for the appellant has argued that the relief claimed in the case is that the order of the Board of Revenue is ultra vires and that it be set aside. He points out that setting aside of the order is the further or present relief and that it is not necessary for the plaintiff to claim all available reliefs. This contention must be repelled. If the order of the Board is without jurisdiction, as we have found, it requires no setting aside. This part of the relief is a mere surplusage and cannot serve as a substitute for the substantial or real further relief without which plaintiff's grievance cannot be completely redressed and for which a separate suit which the proviso to S. 42, Specific Relief Act aims at preventing will be absolutely necessary. In the Calcutta case also, the plaintiff had prayed that the order of the Board of Revenue be set aside. But the analogy is merely illusory. As pointed out above, the plaintiff in that case could get possession from the Collector without instituting a suit, which is not the case here.

[41] My conclusion, therefore, is that the learned Subordinate Judge was right in dismissing the suit as being one for mere declaration when further relief which was available and which should have been claimed to meet the requirements of the proviso to S. 42. Specific Relief Act was not claimed. This view finds support from Jit Singh v. Ghetlu, A. I. R. (26) 1939 ALL. 446: (182 I. C. 911), in which it was held that :

"No civil suit lies for a mere declaration that a decree of a Revenue Court was invalid for want of jurisdiction."

[42] In the result I hold that this appeal must be dismissed. I shall leave the parties to bear their own costs.

[43] Thadani C. J.—I have had the advantage of reading the judgment of my learned brother. While I agree that the Revenue Tribunal in this case exceeded its jurisdiction in directing the sale to be set aside, and that the civil Court has jurisdiction to declare the order of the Tribunal a nullity, I am unable to agree that there is any impediment to the passing of a decree for the plaintiff appellant for a declaration as prayed for by him without more, having regard to the facts of this case.

[44] It is true that Mr. Barcoah invited us to decree the relief as to possession, as prayed for by the plaintiff in the trial Court, which the trial Court, either deliberately or through oversight, did not grant. But at the same time, Mr. Barooah stated that he would be content with a mere declaration that the order passed by the Revenue Tribunal is a nullity. If the plaintiff is entitled to a declaration that the order passed by the Revenue Tribunal is a nullity, the fact that he did not appeal against the judgment and decree of the trial Court which had either declined to decree the plaintiff's prayer as to possession or had omitted to do so, is wholly immaterial when it is remembered that the suit brought by the plaintiff was, in fact and in essence, a suit to set aside the order of the Revenue Tribunal as being contrary to the provisions of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, and, as such, it was not hit by the proviso to S. 42, Specific Relief Act.

[45] The mere use of the word 'declaration' whether in the title of the plaint or in the prayer clause, does not necessarily make a suit a suit for declaration so as to attract the proviso to S. 42, Specific Relief Act. For instance, where a suit is in substance a suit for cancellation of a deed of sale relating to immovable property, the fact that the plaintiff prays for a declaration that the deed do stand cancelled, can scarcely be regarded as being hit by the proviso to S. 42, Specific Relief Act. The moment a sale deed is cancelled or set aside by a decree of the Court, the rights present in the parties before the execution of the sale-deed are automatically restored, even though in a given case it might be that the plaintiff would find it difficult to obtain possession, except through the intervention of a Court.

[46] I am unable to subscribe to the view expressed by my learned brother that where an order passed by a duly constituted authority is without jurisdiction, it does not require to be set aside, and that the principal relief, therefore, in a case where an order does not require to be set aside, is not one setting aside the order. In my opinion, the facts of the case before us are on all fours with the facts present before the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court in the case reported in Mohd. Manjural Haque v. Bisseswar Banerjee, 47 C. W. N. 408: (A. I. R. (30) 1948 Cal. 361) in which they had occasion to consider the decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council reported in Moothoo Vijia v. Dorasinga Thevar, 2 I. A. 169: (15 Beng. L. R. 83 P. C.); Robert Fischer v. Secy. of State, 26 I. A. 16: (22 Mad. 270 P. C.) and Sheoparsan Singh v. Ram Nandan Prasad, 43 I. A. 91: (A. I. R. (3) 1916 P. O. 78). Rau J. delivering the judgment of the Division Bench observed at p. 112 of the report:

"It would, therefore, seem that the expressions 'merely declaratory decree 'and 'declaration swithout more' used in the Privy Council judgments in Kathama Natchair's case, 2 I. A. 169: (15 Beng. L. R. 83 P. C.) and Sheoparsan Singh's case, 43 I. A. 91: (A. I. R. (3) 1916 P. C. 78) refer to a declaration which merely serves to define rights, present or future, without giving present relief. The power of the Courts in India to make merely declaratory decrees in this sense is, under the above decisions, governed entirely by S. 42, Specific Relief Act. But where a decree has the effect of giving present relief as well, the power to make it will be governed by the general provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, e.g., S. 9 or O. 7, R. 7 of the Code, and not by S. 42, Specific Relief Act. Such a view would be consistent not only with their Lordships' observations in the above two cases, but also in Fischer's case, 26 I. A. 16: (22 Mad. 270 P. C.). On this view, the present suit would not be governed by S. 42, Specific Relief Act."

[47] My learned brother's judgment is silent upon this passage from the judgment of the Calcutta High Court. If this passage from the judgment of the Calcutta High Court in Mohd. Manjural Haque v. Bisseswar Banerjes, 47 C. W. N. 408: (A. I. R. (30) 1943 Cal. 361) is to be given effect to-and it must be given effect to, -it seems to me that the presence of a fact namely that in the case the Collector had not yet delivered possession, to the party concerned is wholly immaterial. The learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court mentioned this particular fact only for the purpose of showing that the proviso to S. 42, Specific Relief Act, did not hit the plaintiff's case, even if it were assumed that S. 42, Specific Relief Act, applied. In my opinion, their decision means that S. 42, Specific Relief Act, does not apply to a case where a plaintiff seeks to have an order set aside the existence of which is an impediment to the restoration of his rights, rights of which he has been deprived as a result of the impugned order. This is what the learned Judges of the Calcutta

High Court say at p. 413 of the report: "But even assuming that the Specific Relief Act applies to such a suit as this, let us see what is the plaintiff's claim and who are the parties concerned. The plaintiff is undoubtedly a person who claims to be entitled to certain rights as to property, namely, the right to own and possess separate account No. 2 of Touzi No. 655 by virtue of his purchase on 14th January 1937 (as in this case). The defendants, who are the recorded owners and are in possession of that share of the estate, deny and are interested to deny his title. The Collector, on the other hand, has not denied, nor is he interested to deny, the plaintiffs' title, although he could do nothing to assist the plaintiff after the Board has set aside the sale, (as in this case). In terms of S. 42, therefore, the plaintiff may institute a suit against the defendants, but not against the Collector, and the Court may in its discretion make therein a declaration that he is so entitled, and the plaintiff need not in such a suit ask for any furthere relief. We now come to the proviso: 'Provided that no Court shall make any such declaration where the plaintiff being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so'. In considering this proviso with reference to this case, we have to bear in mind that long before the Board's order of September 1937, the Collector had already passed an order for delivery of possession to the plaintiff. Once the Board's order is pronounced ultra vires and the plaintiff's unimpaired title declared, the Collector's order of 7th April 1937, would revive, and it would be his statutory duty to proceed to give effect to it under S. 14 and S. 29, Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859. The plaintiff was not able to seek further relief in his plaint for the simple reason that he needed no more. The annulling of the Board's order would give him all that he wanted. The circumstances are very similar to those in Fischer's case (26 I. A. 16: (22 Mad. 270 P. C.) where the Privy

Council made a declaratory decree, holding that no further relief was required. The proviso to S. 42,

Specific Relief Act is no more a bar to a declaration of the plaintiff's title in the present suit than it was in that suit."

[48] I am unable to agree that the case before us can be distinguished from the case present before the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court, merely because in the case before us the Deputy Commissioner had not delivered possession to the purchaser. Even in the Calcutta case the recorded owners were in fact in possession as here and yet the learned Judges did not think that the existence of that fact was an impediment to the passing of a decree declaring the order of the Revenue Board a nullity. Indeed the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court, in considering the question from the dual aspect namely—(1) whether S. 42, Specific Relief Act applied to the facts before them, and (2) whether assuming that S. 42, Specific Relief Act, applied—the proviso to S. 42, operated as a bar to the plaintiff getting a decree for a mere declaration closely followed the observations of Lord Macnaghten in Fischer's case (26 I. A. 16: 22 Mad. 270 P. C.) which are in these terms:

"Now, in the first place, it is at least open to doubt whether the present suit is within the purview of S. 42, Specific Relief Act. There can be no doubt as to the origin and purpose of that section..... It is, in substance, a suit to have the true construction of a statute declared, and to have an act done in contravention of the statute rightly understood pronounced void and of no effect. That is not the sort of declaratory decree which the framers of the Act had in their mind."

I do not think these observations of Lord Macnaghten can be regarded as obiter dicta. The learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court apparently did not regard them in that light. The learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court have definitely stated that the suit before them was not one under the provisions of S. 42. Specific Relief Act. Just as Lord Macnaghten then proceeded to deal with the case before the Board on the assumption that the Specific Relief Act applied, the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court proceeded to do likewise. Lord Macnaghtan had observed:

"But even assuming that the Specific Relief Act applies to such a suit as this, what is the result? What further relief can be required? The so called cancellation is pronounced void, the order of the Government falls to the ground, and the decision of the Collector stands good and operative as from the date on which it was made. The vitality of the decision is not impaired or affected merely by destruction or mutilation of the entry in the Collector's book."

Applying these observations to the facts before us, as soon as the cancellation of the order of the Revenue Tribunal is pronounced void, it falls to the ground and the sale of the Deputy Commissioner made in pursuance of the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation stands good and becomes automatically final under S. 80, Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, and under S. 85 of the same Regulation, the Deputy Commissioner shall put the plaintiff into possession of the property. The fact that the Deputy Commissioner in the present case delivered possession to the respondents after the Revenue Tribunal had set aside the sale, is, in my opinion, wholly immaterial for the purpose of deciding whether the proviso to S. 42, Specific Relief Act applies. The act of that Deputy Commissioner in this case after he was made aware of the order of the Revenue Tribunal setting aside the sale, was an act done in pursuance of S. 85, Assam Land and Revenue Regulation. The Deputy Commissioner will act in precisely the same way the moment he comes to know that the order of the Revenue Tribunal has been set aside by this Court. He will then forthwith act under 8. 85 of the Regulation, the sale having become final under S. 80 of the Regulation and put the plaintiff into possession. I can see no reason, therefore, for thinking that the decision of the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court would have been different if, in that case, the Collector had, in fact, put the other party into possession. In any case even in the Calcutta case somehow or the other the other party was in possession.

[49] In my opinion, the circumstances before us are similar to those in Fischer's case (26 I. A. 16: 22 Mad. 270 P. C.) and identical with those in the case reported in Mohd. Manjural Haque v. Bisseswar Banerjee, 47 C. W. N. 408: (A. I. R. (30) 1943 Cal. 361). To borrow the language of the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court, "the proviso to S. 42, Specific Relief Act, is no more a bar to a declaration of the plaintiff's title in the present suit than it was in Fischer's case (26 I. A. 16: 22 Mad. 270 P. C.)," or in the case reported in Mohd. Manjural Haque v. Bisseswar Banerjee, 47 C. W. N. 408: (A. I. R. (80) 1943 Cal. 361). In my opinion, the declaration of the plaintiff's title in this case follows automatically upon setting aside the order of the Revenue Tribunal, which in my view is the principal relief.

[50] In the view I have taken of the decision of the Calcutta High Court reported in Mohd. Manjural Haque v. Bisseswar Banerjee, 47 C. W. N. 408: (A. I. B. (30) 1943 Cal 361), it follows that the decision of the Allahabad High Court reported in Jit Singh v. Ghetlu, A. I. R. (26) 1939 ALL 446: (182 I. C. 911) has no application to the facts of this case.

[51] I will accordingly set aside the judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court and restore that of the trial Court setting aside the order of the Revenue Tribunal with no order as to costs and leave it to the Deputy Commissioner to put the plaintiff into possession of the property under S. 85, Assam Land and Revenue Regulation.

ORDER

[52] Thadani C. J.—A difference of opinion having arisen between my learned brother and myself—my learned brother taking the view that the decree of the lower appellate Court should be affirmed and I taking the view that it should be set aside and that of the trial Court restored—the provisions of S. 98, Civil P. C., are attracted, and the judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court is confirmed.

Assam Opium Prohibition Act (XXIII [23] of 1947), Ss. 5 (a) and 28—Possession—Meaning—Presumption—Burden of proof—Opium Act (1878), Ss. 9 and 10—Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 101-103.

Possession of opium within the meaning of S. 5 (a) must imply knowledge. It must be conscious possession making some kind of control possible, or, in other words, there must be mens rea or guilty knowledge before a person could be convicted of an offence under S. 5 (a) for possessing opium. [Para 7]

Thus, a person charged with the possession of opium must be shown to have knowledge of the existence of the opium in his house before he can be said to be in possession of it. Mere recovery of opium from a house in which he lives along with other persons, would not be sufficient to show that he was in possession with knowledge of its existence. [Para 10]

Unless conscious possession on the part of the accused has been proved, no presumption under S. 28 arises in favour of the prosecution. [Para 13]

The burden of proving conscious possession on the part of the accused remains on the prosecution and that burden is not shifted to the accused by anything that is contained in S. 28. [Para 13]

S. N. Buragohain and J. C. Medhi-for Petitioner. K. R. Burman, Sr. State Advocate-for the State.

Ram Labhaya J.—The petition of revision is directed against the order of the learned Sessions Judge, U. A. D., by which the petitioner's appeal against his conviction and sentence under S. 5 (a) of the Assam Opium Prohibition Act, 1947, was dismissed. The petitioner was sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for 2 years and a fine of Rs. 500 in delault to rigorous imprisonment for 6 months.

[2] The house in which Abdul Ali, petitioner, lived was searched on 6th January 1949. An elder brother, Abdul Suvan and a younger brother, Abdul Mannan of the petitioner also lived in the same house. The Excise Sub-Inspector, who conducted the search, recovered one seer of each weighing half a seer. They were found in two brass utensils wrapped in brown paper. The two utensils were covered by a half-pant. They were placed inside the hollow of a Murah. The Murah itself was under a table in an inner room of the house occupied by the petitioner and his two brothers. Abdul Suvan, the eldest, absconded. Abdul Ali, the petitioner and Abdul Mannan were sent up for trial. Both were found guilty under S. 5 (a), Assam Opium Prohibition Act by the Magistrate, 1st class, Dibrugarh.

[3] On appeal, Abdul Mannan was given the benefit of doubt but the conviction of Abdul Ali was maintained. In upholding the conviction, the learned Judge remarked that in his opinion the petitioner had definite knowledge of the existence of opium inside his house.

[4] In the trial Court, as also before the learned Sessions Judge, one plea raised was that opium bad been planted in the house by some one. The learned counsel for the petitioner has not pressed this plea before us. The circumstances under which the opium was recovered, its quantity, the place where it was kept and the manner in which it was deliberately concealed, all lead irresistibly to the conclusion that planting was completely out of question. The learned counsel has raised only one contention. He argues that the mere fact that opium was recovered from the house in which the petitioner lived was no evidence or proof of the fact that the accused was in possession of the opium. There was nothing for him, therefore, to account for under S. 28 of the Act. There is considerable force in this contention.

[5] Section 3, Assam Opium Prohibition Act, 1947, prohibits import, export, transport or possession of opium amongst other things. Section 5 (a) punishes contraventions of 8. 3. Under 8. 5 (a) possession of opium is punishable. Anyone found in possession of opium in Assam is liable to punishment with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to 6 years, and with fine which may extend to Rs. 5000. Obviously this is a very serious offence in this province. The question is what is meant by the word 'possession' which is made punishable by the Act.

[6] We think 'possession' implies dominion and control. A person cannot be said to be in possession of an article if he is not in a position to exercise any dominion over it. The exercise of dominion would be possible only if there is knowledge of its existence or presence at a particular place. Knowledge or consciousness of the existence of the article at a place where dominion could be exercised would therefore be necessary to constitute possession. A father, living in a house with half a dozen sons, may not know what his sons or a particular son may bring to the house. Anyone of them may bring some quantity of opium. It may be placed in some part of the house which though accessible to all is not frequented. The father and the other inmates of the house may be wholly unaware of its existence. They would not be in a position to exercise dominion or control over it. They could not be said to be in such possession as the law seeks to punish. There would be no mens rea or guilty knowledge.

[7] Possession of opium within the meaning of S. 5 (a), therefore, must imply knowledge. It must be conscious possession making some kind of control possible, or in other words, there must be mens rea or guilty knowledge before a person could be convicted of an offence under S. 5 (a) for possessing opium. There would not be any culpable possession if there is no knowledge on the part of an occupant of a house or room as to the existence of opium in the house or the room as the case may be.

[8] Opium Act of 1878 also prohibits possession of opium. In a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court, reported in Cyril C. Baker v. Emperor, A. I. B. (17) 1930 Cal. 658 : (32 Cr. L.J. 245), it was held by their Lordships that:

"Possession implies knowledge, and there would be no possession when there is no knowledge on the part of the ostensible occupant of the cabin or room as the case may be".

[9] In Emperor v. Santa Singh, A. I. R. (31) 1944 Lah. 339: (46 Cr. L. J. 1 F. B.), a Full Bench of the Lahore High Court held that possession of an unlicensed arm or ammunition within the meaning of S. 19 (f), Arms Act meant something more than mere constructive or legal possession. Possession necessary for constituting an offence under S. 19 (f), meant conscious possession.

[10] The view as to the meaning and connotation of the word 'possession' as occurring in the Opium Act of 1878 was followed in Bholanath v. The King, A. I. R. (88) 1949 Assam 73: (61 Cr. L. J. 51). It was held, in the circumstances of that case, that the knowledge of the presence of opium in the house of the accused could be properly attributed to him and therefore it was for the accused to account satisfactorily for his possession under S. 10 of that Act. This knowledge was considered an essential ingredient of the offence. There can be no doubt that the word 'possession' in the Assam Opium Prohibition Act also means conscious possession. There is nothing in the context to indicate that it can be given a differ. ent meaning for the purpose of this Act. The person charged with the possession of opium must be shown to have knowledge of the existence of the opium in his house before he can be said to be in possession of it. Mere recovery of opium from a house in which he lives along with other persons would not be sufficient to show that he was in possession with knowledge of its existence.

[11] The learned advocate for the State has referred us to S. 28, Assam Opium Prohibition Act. This section lays down that:

"In trials under ols. (a) to (c) of S. 5, it shall be presumed, unless and until the contrary is proved, that the accused has committed the offence with which he is charged in respect of the opium for the possession of which he fails to account satisfactorily".

[12] The learned counsel urges that the opium having been recovered from the house of the accused, it should be presumed to be in his possession and further by reason of the statutory presumption created by S. 28, it should be for the accused to explain this possession.

[13] We do not think this interpretation of the section is correct. Under S. 28, the accused has to explain his possession. But if he has not been shown to be in possession, there is nothing which is to account for. The word 'possession' appears in Ss. 3, 5 and 28 of the Act. In all these sections, the meaning to be attributed to it ought to be the same, unless the context in a particular section indicates a contrary intention. If possession ought to be conscious, then before the presumption under S. 28 comes into operation, conscious possession on the part of the accused has to be proved by the prosecution. Where such possession is not proved, no presumption arises in favour of the prosecution. The burden of proving conscious possession on the part of the accused remains on the prosecution and that burden is not shifted to the accused by anything that is contained in S. 28. The contention of the learned counsel would be correct if S. 28 had provided that it shall be presumed unless and until the contrary is proved that the accused has committed the offence with which he is charged in respect of the opium recovered from the house in which he resides. This is not what the law lays down and all this cannot possibly be read into S. 28.

[14] Section 10, Opium Act of 1878 is a provision analogous to 8. 28, Assam Opium Prohibition Act. It provides that:

"In prosecutions under S. 9, it shall be presumed, until the contrary is proved, that all opium for which the accused person is unable to account satisfactorily, is opium in respect of which he has committed an offence under this A Under S. 9, a perso. found in possession of opium is liable to prescution. Statutory presumption as held in Cyril C. Baker v. Emperor, A. I. B. (17) 1930 Cal. 668: (82 Cr. L. J. 24 can be availed of by the prosecution only if conscious possession of opium on the part of the accused is proved.

[15] We do not think a different interpretation can be put on S. 28 of the Assam Act, nor can the word 'possession' occurring in S. 28, be given a different meaning from that which it must have under S. 5 (a) and therefore by virtue of this section the prosecution cannot claim that mere recovery of opium from a particular house casts an obligation on every adult occupant of the house to account for it or that it is proof presumptive of the guilt of every one residing in the house.

[16] It is conceded that apart from the recovery of opium from the house, there is no other evidence against the accused showing that he had any hand in bringing or placing the opium there or that he had any knowledge of its existence.

[17] We think, therefore, that there was no basis for a finding that the petitioner was in conscious possession of the opium or that he had knowledge of its existence in the house. His conviction, therefore, is not sustainable. The petition of revision is allowed. The conviction is quashed and the petitioner acquitted. He shall be released forthwith. The fine, if paid, shall be refunded.

Second Appeal No. 207 of 1948, D/- 21-3-1950, from judgment and decree of D. J., A. V. D., D/- 13-8-1947.

(a) Hindu law—Religious endowment — Endowment created by will—Manager dealing with endowment contrary to terms thereof—Endowment, if fictitious—Succession Act (1925), S. 74—Construction of will—Intention of testator.

Where a question arises as to whether an endowment is real or fictitious, the mode of dealing with it by its donor and successors is an important element for consideration. But where an endowment takes effect upon the death of the testator, and there is nothing to show that the testator had during his lifetime given oral or written directions contrary to the terms of the endowment created under the will, or where there is absence of facts or circumstances leading to the inference that the endowment created under the will is fictitious one, the question of the testator's mode of dealing with the endowment does not really arise, and if the Manager of the endowment deals with it in a manner contrary to the terms of the endowment, he can properly be regarded as a Manager de son tort whose wrong acts cannot be regarded as reflecting the intention of the testator so as to characterise the endowment which is to take effect upon his death as fictitious. A solemn document such as a will, must be respected by Courts of law, and it would be an act of injustice to attribute to a dead man who has created an endowment to take effect on his death, an intention to create a fictitious endowment merely because the person in whom he reposed confidence has betrayed his confidence. [Paras 15 and 18] Annotation: ('46-Man.) Succession Act, S. 74 N. 3.

(b) Hindu law—Religious endowment — Manager appropriating income of endowed property— Endowment, if fictitious — Inference — Evidence Act (1872), S. 114.

An endowment is not to be regarded as fictitious merely because the members of the settler's family, who are nominated as shebaits or mohunts to the endowed property, are to be remunerated out of its income. The remuneration no doubt must be reasonable having regard to the income of the endowed property. But where under the terms of the will creating an endowment, no remuneration is allowed to the manager and only a portion of the income of the endowed property is used for expenses of the endowment and the remaining income is appropriated by the manager, no inference of a fictitious endowment can be drawn against the testator by reason of greed or miserliness of the manger. Thadani C. J.—This is a second appeal from the judgment and decree of the learned District Judge, A. V. D., dated 13th August 1947, by which he affirmed the judgment and decree of the trial Court which had dismissed the plaintiffs' suit with costs against the contesting defendants.

[2] It appears that an appeal against the decision of the trial Court, dated 24th November 1941, was preferred to the then District Judge, A. V. D., Mr. N. L. Hindley who delivered judgment on 23rd March 1942. On a second appeal preferred to the High Court of Calcutta against the decision of Mr. Hindley, Biswas and Blank JJ. remanded the appeal with the following, among other directions:

"The question that we have got to consider is whether the testator did create any endowment and, if so, what were the terms of such endowment?"

It is not necessary to set out the other directions which the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court gave to the lower appellate Court in their order of remand, in view of the fact that the only question argued before us was the question set out above.

[3] The facts material for the appeal are these. One Phanidhar Barua had 2 sons—Payodhar (defendant 4) and Lakshmidhar (plaintiff 1). Plaintiff 2, one Premodhar, is the son of Payodhar (defendant 4). Phanidhar left a will, dated 2nd of Chaitra, 1311 B. S., by which he left some 733 bighas of land to Lakshmidhar, and 564 bighas to Payodhar, and in respect of 700 other bighas, he created an endowment for the maintenance of namphar and appointed Payodhar as the Manager. The in-the maintenance of the namphar and meeting expenses connected with the lighting of lamps and smearing of the floor with wet earth. Panidhar Barua lived for some 5 years after the making of the will. During his lifetime, he had installed in the namphar, a manuscript of the 10th canto of the "Dashamskanda Bhagabat Gita" given to him by his spiritual preceptor. The sacred manuscript, so enshrined in the namphar, was to be maintained from the income of the endowment which is said to have been in the neighbourhood of Bs. 200 per annum.

(4) Some 20 years after the death of Phanidhar in 1915 or 1316 B. S., plaintiff 1 Lakshmidhar applied for letters of administration of the will executed by his father, which were granted to Lakshmidhar six years later in 1939.

[5] Some time before plaintiff 1 applied for letters of administration. It appears that defendant 4 (Payodhar) mortgaged some 130 bighas odd out of the endowed property to defendant 2 in 1930. In due course defendant 2 brought a suit upon the mortgage and obtained a decree in 1934, and purchased the property in execution of his decree. The sale was confirmed on 27th January 1936. Defendant 4 had also mortgaged some 53 bighas odd out of the endowed property to defendant 1, who brought a suit upon the mortgage and obtained a decree on 6th October 1936, and in execution of the decree, purchased 53 bighas odd on 10th September 1940. While the property was under attachment in execution of the decree obtained by defendant 1, defendant 4, as judgment-debtor sought to have the property released from attachment on the ground that the property was endowed property. This application was dismissed on 24th February 1910. Defendant 4 had also mortgaged 288 bighas odd out of the endowed property in favour of defendant 3 (a), the Gauhati Bank Ltd., which obtained a decree, and the Court ordered a sale of the 288 bighas odd to take place on 4th August 1941. The present suit was instituted in the beginning of 1941 by plaintiffs 1 and 2, for a declaration that the property alienated by defendant 4, was endowed property under the will of Phanidhar Barus, and that the property was not liable to be attached and sold for the personal debts of defendant 4.

[6] On the pleadings, the trial Court framed

the following issues:

"(1) Whether the plaintiffs have got any locus standito file this suit? (2) Whether the suit is bad for multifariousness of causes of action? (8) Whether the suit is properly valued? (4) Whether the suit is barred by limitation? (5) Whether there is the institution by the name of "Rajaduar Desamskandha Bhagabat Sthapita Namghar", as alleged in the plaint, and whether the plaintiffs and defendant 4 (pro forma) are the de facto Shebayets of the said institution? (6) Whether the property in suit is the trust property of the alleged namghar and has been used as such, or is the private property of defendant 4 and has been used as the private property of the said defendant 4? (7) Whether the alleged endowment is a real and bona fide one, or a colourable and nominal one, as alleged in the W. 8.? (8) Whether the purchases of defendants 1 and 2 in Civil Court's sales are bona fide and for value, and without notice? (9) Whether the piaintiffs have any title and interest over the property in dispute? (10) To what relief, if any, are the plaintiffs entitled?"

[7] As a result of its findings, the trial Court dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. The lower appellate Court, on remand by the Calcutta High Court, has affirmed the judgment and decree of the trial Court.

[8] We think the lower Appellate Court has erred in holding that a valid endowment had not been created by Phanidhar Barua under his will, dated 4th April 1905. The lower appellate Court has taken the view that the alleged endowment was a colourable transaction designed to keep the property in question with the family of the deceased in perpetuity. We are not impressed by the reasons which the lower appellate Court has given for coming to this finding. It is true that the testator's son, Payodhar (defendant 4) did not carry out the terms of the will made by his father, that contrary to the terms of the will, he had his name mutated in the record of rights as owner, instead of as a Manager, that he kept no accounts of the income and expenditure of the trust property, and proceeded to create mortgages some years later for his personal debts. But as the learned Judge himself points out, these acts of Payodhar would not necessarily affect the question as to whether the endowment made by Phanidhar under his will, was an endowment validly created. It is true that even under a will, a fictitious endowment might be created for the purpose of preventing the family property from being aliena. ted, but each case has to be decided on its merits. and we are unable to characterise the will in question as a document designed to create a fictitious endowment.

[9] The learned Judge has stressed the fact that at the time of making the will, the namghar itself was a private family property, and continued to remain so at the death of the testator—a circumstance which, according to the learned Judge, tends to show that the testator did not divest himself of all his rights in the endowed property.

[10] We think the learned Appellate Judge had misdirected himself on certain material facts in the case. He appears to think that the endowment was created by Phanidhar Barua during his lifetime. That is clearly erroneous. The endowment was expressly created by the will of Phanidhar to take effect upon his death, and not before. There was, therefore, no question of the testator divesting himself of his rights in the endowed property during his lifetime. The Lahore case, to which reference has been made by the learned Judge Jai Dayal v. Ram Saran Das, A I. R. (25) 1938 Lah. 686: (I. L. B. (1938) Lah. 704) was not a case where the trust was created by a will, to come into effect on the death of the testator.

[11] We will now proceed to consider the circumstances from which the learned Judge has inferred that the endowment was fictitious. It appears that under the will, the testator had left 733 bighas to Lakshmidhar, plaintiff 1, whereas he left only 500 bighas odd to Payodhar (defendant 4). The learned Judge has drawn from this unequal division the inference that as a smaller area was given to Payodhar, the testator intended to compensate him by ostensibly setting apart some 700 bighas as endowed property, but, in fact, it was set apart for the benefit of Payodhar and his successors in perpetuity. The inference is scarcely logical. There may be a variety of reasons which induced the testator to give more land to one of his sons. Indeed the recitals in the will show that the properties which were allotted to the testator's sons were allotted to them as a result of a partition made by the testator himself. The intention of the testator in this case must be gathered from the language and terms of the will, and not from any logically erroneous inferences which the Courts think proper to draw. It is not inconceivable that the property made over to Payodhar (defendant 4) was more valuable than that made over to Lakshmidhar. We do not think that the apparently unequal division of the property between the two sons, is any indication of the testator's intention or design so to make a will that property ostensibly described as endowed property, would nevertheless enure for the benefit of the family in perpetuity. Nor do we think there is any substance in the reasoning that because Payodhar did not act up to the terms of his father's will, his father never intended to make a genuine endowment. The facts of Payodhar might well be acts of a trustee or Manager de son tort in spite of the fact that he was the testator's son. Payodhar's acts cannot, therefore, be properly construed as indicating an intention of the testator to make a fictitious endowment.

[12] Another circumstance which the learned Judge has stressed is that the namghar itself was retained as the private property of the testator's sons. We do not think this circumstance has any bearing on the question as to whether the endowment made under the will was a genuine or fictitious endowment. The purpose of the endowment was not the namphar but the installation of a manuscript of the 10th Canto of the "Dashamskanda Bhagabat Gita" to be lodged in the namphar, that is to say, the namghar was merely intended to house the manuscript. It was no part of the endowed property. The manuscript had to be housed somewhere; it matters not if the manuscript was to be housed in private property which was to be called namphar. It is not disputed that the object or the purpose of the endowment was religious. If an endowment is created for the purpose of advancing a religious purpose, in this case the religious purpose being the installation of a manuscript of the 10th canto of "Dashamskanda Bhagabat Gita," we can find no justifica. tion for the learned Judge's view that as the namghar was not a part of the trust property, the endowment was a fictitious endowment.

[13] The learned Judge then proceeded to infer a fictitious endowment from the fact that, whereas the income from the endowed property was Rs. 200 annually, the expenses in connection with the maintanance of the endowed property amounted to a sum of Rs. 50 only, the suggestion being that the balance was intended for the benefit of Payodhar.

[14] It may be that there is evidence that a sum of Rs. 50 only was necessary for the maintenance of the endowed property, but that does not mean that the testator, at the time of making the will, knew that only Rs. 50 would be sufficient for the purpose. Even assuming for the sake of argument that only Rs. 50 were required for the purpose, it does not follow that because a small portion of the income of the endowed property was used for the purposes of the endowment, the endowment was a fictitious one. Mr. Goswami for defendant 1 who alone is contesting the appeal, has not referred us to any provision of law by which an endowment is to be regarded as fictitious if only a portion of the income of endowed property is used for the purposes of the endowment.

whether an endowment is real or fictitious, the mode of dealing with it by its donor and successors is an important element for consideration. But where an endowment takes effect upon the death of the testator, and there is nothing to show that the testator had during his life time given oral or written directions contrary to the terms of the endowment created under the will, or where there is absence of facts or circumstances leading to the inference that the endowment created under the will is fictitious one, the question of the testator's mode of dealing with the endowment does not really arise, and if the manager of the endowment deals with it in a manner contrary to the terms of the endowment, he can properly be regarded as a Manager de son tort whose wrong acts cannot be regarded as reflecting the intention of the testator so as to characterise the endowment which is to take take effect upon his death as fictitious.

[16] It is to be observed that there is no evidence in this case whatsoever that the testator had incurred debts during his life time; on the contrary, the evidence shows that it was not until some 20 years after the death of the testator that his son, defendant 4 mortgaged the endowed property for his personal debts. It would, we think, be quite improper even remotely to connect the personal debts of defendant 4 incurred many years after the death of his father, with his father's intention to create a fictitious endowment. There is nothing on the record to show that the testator intended to defeat the provisions of the ordinary law by descent or to restrain alienation and to retain the property in perpetuity in the family; on the contrary, the partition effected by the testator during his life time between his two sons, is evidence to the contrary.

[17] It is not disputed that an endowment is not to be regarded as fictitious merely because the members of the settler's family who are nominated as shebaits or mohunts to the endowed property, are to be remunerated out of its income. It is true that the remuneration must be resonable having regard to the income of the endowed property. But under the terms of the will in question no remuneration was allowed to defendant 4 for managing the endowed proparty. It may be that the income of the endowed property was Rs. 200 annually and expenses Bs. 50 only, but there is not evidence that the testator knew that the expenses would be Rs. 50 and that the balance of the income was to be appropriated, with the knowledge of the testator by defendant 4 for his own use. It may well be that the testator was a man of generous instinots and he fully intended that the entire income of Rs. 200 would be used for the purposes of the endowment. If the testator's generous instincts were frustrated by his son's greed or miserliness, no inference of a fictitious endowment can be drawn against the testator by reason of such greed or miserliness of his son.

[18] A solemn document such as a will, must be respected by Courts of law, and I think it would be an act of injustice to attribute to a dead man who has created an endowment to take effect on his death, an intention to create a fictitious endowment merely because the person in whom he reposed confidence has betrayed his confidence.

[19] We are satisfied that the reasons which the learned Judge has given for coming to the conclusion that the endowment in this case was a fictitious one cannot be sustained. In this view, the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court must be set aside.

[20] The result is that the appeal is allowed with costs of the first appeal and this appeal, except from respondents 3 and 3a. The suit is decreed with costs except from respondents 3 and 3a declaring that the attachment and sale of the property which were attached and sold by defendants 1, 2, 3 and 3 (ka) in execution of their decrees, were not binding on the endowed property set apart by the testator under his will, dated 4th April 1905.

[31] Mr. Medhi for respondent 3 (a) did not press the case on behalf of his client as he stated that the matter as between the appellant and his client had been settled out of Court.

Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (I [1] of 1886), S. 147—Rules under Act, Rr. 2 and 65—Leases of waste land in town—Settlement by Deputy Commissioner subject to previous approval or confirmation of Government — Settlement whether by Deputy Commissioner or by Government.

Where the Deputy Commissioner acting on the advice of the District Land Settlement Advisory Board, decides to reject the application of A for settlement of waste land in town and offers settlement to B, the order of settlement is passed by the Deputy Commissioner and not by the Government of Assam. [Para 8]

The settlement of waste land in town is vested under the Regulation in the Deputy Commissioner only. The fact that the settlement by the Deputy Commissioner is subject under R. 66 to the confirmation by the Government or under R. 2, to the previous approval of the Government does not empower the Government to settle the land in the first instance. [Para 10]

The order, therefore, settling waste land in town on a person is an appealable order under S. 147 having been made by the Deputy Commissioner. [Para 11]

S. K. Ghose, K. R. Barooah and B. C. Barua—for Respondents (in both Appeals).

Judgment.—These are two appeals under S. 147, Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, 1886, directed against two orders passed by the learned Deputy Commissioner of Nowgong, dated 20th September 1949 and 24th October 1949. The order, dated 24th October 1949 is not an independent order but a continuation of the order passed by the Deputy Commissioner on 20th September 1949.

- [2] The facts material to the appeals are these: Saligram Rai Chunilal Bahadur & Co., of Haiborgaon, District Nowgong, purchased periodic dag No. 667 of Haiborgaon Town from Messrs. Askaran Surujmall alias Surajmall Meghraj in 1933, built a house on it and have been in occupation of it ever since. Dag No. 403 forms the frontage of dag No. 667.
- [3] It is the case of the appellants that the land forming the frontage consisted of a deep pit, in filling which they spent considerable sums of money; dag No. 403 is contiguous to the Railway land upon which the B. O. C. petrol pump, depot, and kerosene oil depot are located; dags Nos. 403 and 667 were at one time outside the town area, but in 1919 or 1920, they became part of the town area and a portion of this area —some 12 to 50 feet—was reserved for the roadside. After the inclusion of this area within the municipal limits, the Deputy Commissioner served a notice upon the appellants to set apart 12, for the roadside and that if any houses had been constructed upon it, they must be demolished at their cost.
- [4] On 21st May 1948, the appellants formally applied to the Deputy Commissioner, Nowgong, for a settlement of a peace of land from the frontage of dag No. 667, measuring some 16 lessas. In due course, their application was recommended by the then Deputy Commissioner. But in 1949, the Land Settlement Advisory Committee declined to recommend settlement with the appellants and the Deputy Commissioner thereupon rejected the appellants' petition on 20th September 1949; on 24th October 1949, the Deputy Commissioner settled the entire dag No. 403 with respondent 1 and put him in possession on 27th October 1949. It is against this order that the appellants have filed the present appeals.
- a preliminary objection, namely, that no appeal lies as the order from which the appeals have been preferred is not an order passed by the Deputy Commissioner, but an order passed by the State against which no provision for appeal has been made in the Regulation. It seems to me that this objection is based upon certain reports which have been submitted to this Court by the Deputy Commissioner. One of the reports is in these terms:

"Subject: Revenue Revision No. 111 (R) of 1949. Saligram Rai Chunilal Bahadur and Co, v. (1) J. C. Goswami, (2) The Province of Assam, in the matter of settlement of 16 lessas of land in dag No. 403 of Haiborgaon town.

Sir,

I have the honour to submit report on the subject, as below:

It is virtually a prayer for revision of the settlement order of Government of Assam in respect of the land in dag No. 403, settled with one J. C. Goswami, and not of my order, as will be evident from the following facts:

Messrs. Saligram Rai Chunilal had first applied for 16 lessas of land in dag No. 403, out of the total area of 2 kathas, 16 lessas contained in it — vide petition No. 4228/47-48 enclosed. A proposal was accordingly submitted to Government recommending settlement by the then officiating Deputy Commissioner, Syed Makibor Rahman. So long, there had been no other applicant for this dag and the appellant's was a solitary case: vide this office letter No. 5629/5/5 R, dated 7th October 1948, copy enclosed. Thereupon, Government enquired of the views of the District Land Advisory Board, which is a Board constituted by Government according to its present policy of Land settlement-vide Government letter No. RS. 182/48/27, dated 3rd December 1948, copy enclosed. Accordingly, the matter was placed before the Land Settlement Advisory Board's meeting, but the Board unanimously disagreed to the proposed settlement. The decision was communicated to Government under this office letter No. 1942 B, dated 11th May 1949, copy enclosed. Thereupon the Government dropped the matter, refusing settlement—vide Government letter No. RS. 182/48/32, dated 20th May 1949, copy enclosed. The matter ended there.

But, at the time of considering some application for land in the dag 403 later on, their case was once again taken up and placed before the Land Settlement Advisory Board along with the application of Nagarmal Agarwalla, about which a separate report is being submitted, as required, in the Revenue Appeal No. 118/49 of Nagarmal v. J. C. Goswami, vide this office letter No....., dated and that of the petition of J. C. Goswami. This time also, the Advisory Board did not agree to the settlement of any land in dag 403 with the appellant. Thereupon his petition was disposed of by me as empowered under rule 9 of the Settlement rules. Yet the appellant has been allowed to use a much larger area than what is necessary, as will be seen from my order on the petition. This path will not, however, be settled with any one in future according to Government order.

After receipt of Government order contained in their letter No. RS. 101/49/106, dated 19th October 1949, copy enclosed, sanctioning settlement of land in dag 403 with J. C. Goswami, the appellant had prayed for stopping settlement as sanctioned by Government -vide petition No. 1847/49-50. As the applicant did not file any appeal before the High Court, nor any directions from the appellate Court came down then, I could not but give effect of the Government order of settlement, and hence their petition could not be considered, which was received after I had passed order for delivery of possession etc., as usual, passed on the strength of the Government order. Besides, I had no power to act up contrary to Government orders unless there be some directions from it to this effect. The appellant had also filed another petition before the Government which was rejected by it - vide Government order with their Memo No. BS. 101/49/117, dated 4th November 1949."

[6] It is clear from the report of the Deputy Commissioner that at the time of the application made by the appellants for settlement, theirs was the only application for consideration. Shortly afterwards, the Government of Assam appointed a District Land Settlement Advisory Board in order to advise the Deputy Commissioner on questions relating to settlement of waste and town land. Upon a requisition made by the Government of Assam, the Deputy Commissioner placed the question of settlement of the land for consideration before the District Land Settlement Advisory Board. The Board declined to accept the proposal of the Deputy Commissioner who communicated to Government the view of the Board under his letter No. 1942 B, dated 11th May 1949. On receipt of this letter, Government decided not to settle the land with anybody.

[7] For some obscure reason, when some other applications for settlement of land in dag No 403 were being considered, this case was re-opened and placed before the District Land Settlement Advisory Board, for consideration along with the application of J. C. Goswami, the respondent. The Advisory Board recommended settlement with the respondent. The Deputy Commissioner, in conformity with the views of the Advisory Board, recommended settlement of the land with the respondent. Against the proposal of the Deputy Commissioner recommending settlement with the respondent, the appellants preferred a petition to the Government of Assam, whereupon the Hon-'ble Revenue Minister himself made a local enquiry and, after giving a hearing to the parties concerned, directed the Deputy Commissioner to take into consideration the petitions of the appellants and that of the respondent and to submit a report after consulting the District Land Settlement Advisory Board.

[8] Apparently, the appellant Nagarmall Agarwalla had been guilty of some unwarranted conduct in digging up earth in dag No. 404 and encroaching upon a portion of Sarkari dag No. 403, upon which he had constructed a temporary house The Hon'ble Revenue Minister appears to have taken a serious view of this encroachment and the Deputy Commissioner, acting on the advice of the District Land Settlement Advisory Board, decided to reject the application of the appellants for settlement and offered settlement to the respondent, J. O. Goswami. I can see nothing from the reports submitted by the Deputy Commissioner that the orders appealed from were not passed by him but by the Government of Assam.

[9] Mr. Ghose next contended that assuming that the orders were passed by the Deputy Commissioner, they were passed in consequence of the previous approval of the Government of Assam given to the proposals made by the Deputy Commissioner, and that as the Deputy Commissioner was merely giving effect to the approval of the Government, the order must be regarded as orders of the Provincial Government. I do not think there is any substance in this contention. Rule 2 of the rules framed under the Regulation is in these terms:

"The disposal of waste land required for ordinary or special cultivation or for building purposes will, subject to the general or special orders of the Provincial Government, vest in the Deputy Commissioner who will dispose of such land by grant lease or otherwise in the manner and subject to the conditions set forth in the rules following provided that the Deputy Commissioner may expressly reserve any such land from settlement."

[10] Mr. Barus on behalf of the Government contends that as R. 2 provides that disposal of waste land is subject to the general or special orders of the Provincial Government, the order approving of the proposal of a Deputy Commissioner settling land upon a person, amounts to an order of the Provincial Government. I do not think that is a correct interpretation of R. 2, for it militates against the provision in R. 2 which says that the disposal of waste land is vested in the Deputy Commissioner. The words " subject to the general or special orders of the Provincial Government" cannot affect the power of disposal which vests only in the Deputy Commissioner under the Regulation. Moreover, I do not think B. 2, is properly applicable to the facts of this case. The appropriate rule governing this case is B. 66, which specifically deals with leases of waste land in towns. Rule 66 is in these terms:

"Waste land in town shall be settled by the Deputy Commissioner in accordance with Rr. 67-71 of these rules subject to confirmation by the Commissioner. In sub-divisions, the functions of the Deputy Commissioner shall be exercised by the Sub-divisional Officer, subject to the control of the Deputy Commissioner In this Section of the rules unless the contrary is apparent from the context, the expression 'Deputy Commissioner 'includes a Sub-divisional Officer."

It is plain that there is a substantial difference between the language of R. 2 and the language of R. 66. Under R. 66, the settlement of town land by the Deputy Commissioner is subject only to confirmation by the Commissioner which now means the Government of the State. The words "subject to confirmation" only mean that when a settlement is made by the Deputy Commissioner, the Government either confirms the settlement so made or refuses to confirm it. Rule 66 does not empower the Government to settle land in the first instance with an applicant; that power is vested in the Deputy Commissionr only. Mr. Barua for the Government relied upon para. 2 of a copy of letter No. RS. 195/47/39, dated 22nd August 1947, in which the words "previous approval of Government" are used. Here again, the words "previous approval" do not mean 'previous orders of the Government'; the words "previous approval" mean that when a proposal comes from the Deputy Commissioner to settle land with a person, the Deputy Commissioner is not empowered to pass a final order unless the Govern. ment has approved of the proposal. Government may approve or may not approve of the proposal. In case it approves, the Deputy Commissioner will pass a formal order; in case it does not approve, the Deputy Commissioner will not pass a formal order. Under no circumstances, the words "previous approval" used in para. 2, can be regarded as amounting to a previous order of Government.

[11] The interpretation I have put upon Rr. 2 and 66 and Para. 2 of the letter to which I have referred, appears to be borne out by a letter of the Government, dated 14th July 1949, relating to the functions of the Land Settlement Advisory Committee in Assam. In the letter, it is stated:

"Inasmuch as the Committee will be advisory, the responsibilities of the Deputy Commissioners or the S. D. Os. will always remain as before. But when the Deputy Commissioner or Subdivisional Officer does not accept the advice of the Committee, he should report the reasons thereof to Government."

I am satisfied, therefore, that the orders in question are appealable orders having been made by the Deputy Commissioner after taking full responsibility in the matter.

[12] The question arises—whether on the merits of this case, the orders passed by the Deputy Commissioner on 20th September 1949 and 24th october 1949 should be set aside or affirmed.

[13] In disposing of this question, I propose to state only one reason why I do not think the orders of the Deputy Commissioner should be allowed to stand. In my opinion, when a matter involves an impartial administration of the Land and Revenue Regulation, justice must not only be done, but must appear to be done. I am glad to observe that the Government of Assam is not unaware of the importance of this maxim, for, I find the following statement in its letter, dated 18th July 1949:

"It is further observed that Srijut Jajnachandra Goswami (respondent in this case) in his first application applied only for 15 or 16 lessas of land in dag No. 403, but Government find that some of the members of the Land Settlement Advisory Committee individually recommended that application for settlement, which is not desirable. It is advisable that the members of the Land Settlement Advisory Committee should keep their mind open and should not recommend individual application for settlement of land, so that they may be able to decide such matters after considering the rival claims of different applicants for the same plot of land. Therefore, you are instructed to request the members of the Land Settlement Advisory Committee not to recommend any application for settlement of land individually in future, so that other claimants may not have the impression that they will not get a fair and impartial decision from the members of the Land Settlement Advisory Committee."

[14] I regard this as a very commendable caution administered to the authorities concerned, but the value of the caution has been mitigated by limiting its exercise to cases which come up before them in the future. Apparently the learned Deputy Commissioner considered himself powerless to do anything in the present case. It was manifestly difficult for the members of the Advisory Board who had already recommended the respondent's application, to change their minds and decide the question of settlement on its merits.

[15] I believe the membership of the Advisory Board is not permanent; it can be changed at the pleasure of the Government. In order to give effect to their very commendable caution and to the maxim that justice should not only be done, but appear to be done, the Government of Assam might well have reconstituted the Board and placed this case for the consideration of a reconstituted Board. If for no other reasons than to enable the Government of Assam to place the matter again before an Advisory Board which has not committed itself to any particular view, I propose to set aside the orders of the learned Deputy Commissioner and direct that the applications of the parties should be considered on their merits by a Board whose members are not those who had previously endorsed the application of the respondent in favourable terms. Such a course would ensure an impartial consideration of the merits of the claims made by the parties.

[17] As I have set aside the material orders of the learned Deputy Commissioner, it follows that there cannot be any question of interference by the respondent with the rights of the appellants. The appellants and the respondent will be in the same position in which they were before the orders in question were passed. The rules issued in these two appeals are discharged.

Thadani C. J.—This is a second miscellaneous appeal against an order of the learned District Judge, Assam Valley Districts, dated 5th August 1944, by which he modified the order of the executing Court, the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Goalpara, dated 15th May 1944. The order of the executing Court is in these terms:

"The judgment-debtors file a petition stating that they are ready to clear up the dues provided that a portion of the claim is remitted. The judgment-debtor wants to pay Rs. 3000 in full satisfaction having already paid Rs. 3035 for an original debt of Rs. 3000. Heard decree-holder's pleader. This is allowed on equitable grounds. Case dismissed on full satisfaction."

[2] The learned District Judge framed the following points for his determination :

"(a) Does the Assam Money-lenders' Act, as amended by Assam Act VI [6] of 1943, apply to the case or not? (b) If not, was the order passed under S. 151, Civil P. C., (or under S. 47)? (c) Even if it did not apply to the case, is it open to this Court of appeal to apply it? (d) It so, does the order of the lower Court, dated 6th March 1944, affect the position, and what relief should this Court grant, if any?"

[8] The learned District Judge came to the conclusion that while it is true that the Assam Money-lenders Act, as amended by Assam Act VI [6] of 1943, did not apply to execution proceedings, but as it applies to appeals, and this being an appeal before him, he thought the judgment-debtors, were entitled to relief under the provisions of S. 9 of Act VI [6] of 1948, and in this view, he modified the order of the executing Court.

[4] The Assam Money lenders (Amendment) Act of 1943 (Act VI [6] of 1943) came into force in 1943 some five years after the decree was passed in this case—the date of the decree being 30th November 1938. Sub-section (2) of 8.1 of Assam Act VI [6] of 1943 expressly states that it shall apply to pending suits and appeals. The question for our consideration is — whether it also applies to execution proceedings.

Judges of the Calcutta High Court. Mitter J., delivering the judgment of the Division Bench reported in Sylhet Loan and Banking Co., Ltd. v. Ahmed Majtoba, 50 C. W. N. 417: (A.I.B. (33) 1946 Cal. 337), observed :

"The ordinary rule is that the rights of litigants are to be governed by the law in force when the action was commenced. The corollary from this is that a change in the substantive law, as opposed to adjective law, would not affect pending actions, unless the legislature had indicated otherwise either by express enactment or by necessary implication

The second general rule is that 'you should not give a larger retrospective power to a section, and even in an Act which is to some extent intended to be retrospective, than you can plainly see the legislature meant' "

Act of 1943 (Act VI [6] of 1943) in our judgment must be interpreted in the light of these rules of construction. Mitter J., took the view that the Legislature did not intend to make S. 5 of the Amending Act applicable to pending execution proceedings. He pointed out that:

"In the first place the language of S. 1 (2) falls short, and in the second place, no provision is made in the Amending Act akin to that occurring in the Bengal Money-lenders' Act of 1940 empowering the Court to re-open decrees."

He declined, therefore, to give effect to the contention that the word 'suit' used in 8. 1 (2) must be taken to include a proceeding in execution on the ground that proceedings in execution are to be regarded as continuation of the suit.

[7] It was, however, contended on behalf of the judgment-debtors that having regard to the terms of S. 9, Assam Money-lenders (Amendment) Act, VI [6] of 1948, notwithstanding the fact that sub-s. (2) of S. 1 refers to pending suite and appeals only, pending execution matters should be regarded as within the ambit of sub s. (2) of S. 1. Section 9 of Act VI [6] of 1948 is in these terms:

"No money-lender shall, in respect of any loan made before or after the commencement of this Act, recover, on account of interest and principal, whether through Court or otherwise or by way of usufruct of lands in usufructuary mortgages, a sum greater in aggregate than double the principal of the loan."

[8] It appears to us that the language of S. 9 is on the contrary against the contention of the respondent's advocate that sub-s. (2) of S. 1, Assam Act VI [6] of 1948 should be interpreted Questions relating to satisfaction of decrees are to be decided with reference to 0. 21, Civil P. C., and R. 2 of 0. 21 expressly provides that a Court will not take notice of payments made out of Court, unless they are notified to the Court which passed the decree within the prescribed period. If S. 9 of Assam act VI [6] of 1943 were to be extended to execution proceedings, it will, in proper cases, come into conflict with the provisions of 0. 21 relating to certification of payments made out of Court. The possible conflict is easily avoided if the operation of Assam act VI of 1943 is not extended to execution proceedings.

[9] The learned District Judge has set out two accounts 'A' and 'B' which are not disputed by the parties. Account 'A' was made out by the learned District Judge on the supposition that the amended Money-lenders Act did not apply to the present proceedings. The balance due to the decree-holders, at the foot of the account 'A' is Rs. 3864-13.7 out of which, according to the judgment of the executing Court, a sum of Rs. 3000 was deposited in the treasury under Chalan No. 138, dated 15th May 1944. The balance, therefore, recoverable from the judgment-debtors is Rs. 864-13.7.

[10] We accordingly set aside the order of the executing Court and that of the learned District Judge passed on appeal. The executing Court will dispose of the execution application of the judgment-creditors in the light of the observations we have made.

[11] Ram Labhaya J.—I agree with my Lord the Chief Justice in the conclusion he has reached in this case. I wish to add a few words.

[12] Section 1, sub-s. (2), Assam Moneylenders (Amendment) Act, 1943, provides that the Act shall apply to pending suits and appeals. The extent to which retrospective effect can be given to this Act is clearly defined in this provision. The contention that S. 9 overrides S. 1, sub-s. (2) does not bear examination. Section 9 no doubt provides that no money-lender shall recover on account of interest and principal in respect of any loan made before or after the commencement of this Act through Court or otherwise or even by way of usufruct of lands in usufructuary mortgages a sum greater in aggregate than double the principal of the loan, and it may well be argued that recovery of an amount exceeding this limit by execution of a decree is barred. The language of the section does yield to this interpretation. If given effect to, it will conflict with the provisions contained in S. 1, sub-s. (2) as under that section the Court has not been given any authority to re-open a decree or to apply the provisions of the Act to pending execution proceedings. It is clear that the scope of the Act was defined in S. 1 and that other provisions of the Act have to be read subject to S. 1 when any question relating to its scope arises. If there is an apparent conflict between S. 1 on one side and any other provision of the Act, S. 1 will have overriding effect. It is a recognised rule of construction that larger, retrospective power is not to be read into an Act or a provision contained in an enactment than what was clearly intended by the Legis. lature. If the Act had been intended to apply to pending execution proceedings, it would have clearly been provided in the Act. In view of the clear language used in S. 1 sub-s. (2) there can be no doubt that a decree which became final before the Act came into force, can be executed as it stands and the Act makes no provision for re-opening it or for going behind it. It merely applies to pending suits and appeals and its scope cannot be extended. A general provision in an enactment ought to yield to a special provision providing for particular cases. Besides apparently inconsistent provisions of the Act have to be reconciled with each other so far as possible by reading one as a qualification to the other. In this view of the matter also S. 1, subs. (2) should qualify the provisions of S. 9. The Act therefore cannot be applied to pending execution proceeding and appeals arising therefrom.

V.B.B. Order accordingly.

Second Appeal No. 86 of 1949, D/- 19th April 1950, from judgment and decree of Sub-Judge, U. A. D., D/- 26th April 1949.

Civil P. C. (1908), S. 11 - Absence of decree and: judgment - Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 115 and 18.

In the absence of judgment and decree passed in the previous suit for maintenance, the admitted facts cannot take the place of estoppel by record and hence a subsequent suit for recovery of maintenance cannot be held barred by res judicata. [Para 5]

J. C. Sen - for Appellant.

Thadani C. J. — This is a second appeal from the judgment and decree of the learned Subordinate Judge, U. A. D., dated 26th April 1949, by which he set aside the judgment and decree of the trial Court which had decreed the plaintiff's suit with costs awarding her 36 puras of paddy every year or its value from 1944 for the duration of her life.

[2] The plaintiff, a widow of one Kero Chutia, originally brought a suit, being Suit No.

410/26, against her step-son claiming maintenance out of the estate left by her deceased husband -in the possession of the defendant. That suit was decreed in her favour, the Court ordering 36 puras of paddy to be delivered to the plaintiff every year by the defendant out of the properties left by the deceased Kero. From time to time the plaintiff obtained satisfaction of her decree in Suit No. 410/26 through Court until 1949. From 1944 to 1947 the plaintiff failed to execute her decree and when she attempted to take out execution in March, 1947, the Court dismissed the execution application as time-barred. She then brought the present suit, being Suit No. 111/47, for the recovery of maintenance for the years 1944, 1945 and 1946. The suit was decreed by the trial Court, but dismissed by the lower appellate Court on the ground that the present suit was barred by the principles of res judicata. The trial Court had stated :

"The present suit is based on different causes of action and nothing has been shown how the present suit is barred by res judicata. When the present suit has been filed within 3 years since the annuity was stopped and there is nothing contrary to this from the defence side, I find no reason why the suit is barred by limitation. The two issues, namely, the issues as to res judicata and limitation, are accordingly decided in favour of the plaintiff."

[3] It was stated from the Bar before us that the records of suit No. 410/26 have been destroyed.

[4] Mr. Sen for the appellant contends (1) that the decree in Suit No. 410/26 was merely a declaratory decree declaring the plaintiff's right to maintenance from the estate of her deceased husband in the possession of the defendant at the rate of 36 puras of paddy every year or its value, (2) that assuming that the decree passed in Suit No. 410/26 was a decree capable of execution, there was no bar to the plaintiff's bringing a suit for the recovery of the arrears of maintenance for the three years. In support of the second contention, he has relied upon a decision of the Madras High Court reported in Sabhanatha v. Lakshmi, 7 Mad. 80.

[6] It is unnecessary to decide whether the decision reported in Sabanatha v. Laksmi, 7 Mad. 80 governs the facts of this case, for, in the absence of the judgment and decree passed in Suit No. 410/26, it is not possible for us to say that the present suit is barred by res judicata. The lower appellate Court has apparently proceeded on the supposition that upon the admitted facts the provisions of S. 11, Civil P. C., applied. We do not think, in the absence of the judgment and decree passed in Suit No. 410/26, the admitted facts can take the place of estoppel by record—a plea which had to be established by the defendant by the production of the judgment and decree in Suit No. 410/26. In this view, we set aside the judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court and restore that of the trial Court.

· [6] The lower appellate Court allowed the appeal with no order as to costs. Before us, the respondent did not appear. The question, therefore, of the costs of this appeal does not arise; nor do we propose to vary the order of the lower appellate Court as to costs of the appeal before that Court. The trial Court had decreed the suit with costs against the defendant, but the lower appellate Court ordered that the costs of the suit must be borne by the parties. As we have set aside the judgment and decree of the lower appellate Court and restored that of the trial Court, it follows that the plaintiff's suit will stand decreed with costs. But we make no order as to costs of the appeal in the lower appellate Court or this Court.

[7] The result is that the appeal is allowed, with no order as to costs in the lower appellate or this Court.

A decree passed by the Calcutta High Court on its original side was sent for execution to the District Court at T in Assam. There was no District Court at T but the Subordinate Court at T received the papers and proceeded to execute the decree on application by the decree-holder:

Held, that the Subordinate Court at T was not justified in receiving the papers which were sent to the District Court, though with a wrong address, and had no power to execute the decree. The irregularity was not ourable as it affected its jurisdiction. [Para 7]

S. K. Ghose, J. N. Borah and A. K. Padmapati

Ram Labhaya J.—This appeal arises out of execution proceedings. The decree in this case was passed by the Calcutta High Court in the exercise of its original jurisdiction. An authenticated copy of the decree of the High Court together with a certificate of non-satisfaction of decree was sent by the Registrar of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal (Original Jurisdiction), to the District Judge of Tezpur with the request that the decree may be executed within the jurisdiction of his Court under the provisions of the Code of Civil Pro-

- [2] There was no District Judge at Tezpur. The ex-officio Sub-Judge received the letter with its enclosures. The decree-holder also applied for execution in the Court of the ex-officio Sub-Judge at Tezpur.
- [3] Tezpur is within the jurisdiction of the District Judge, Gauhati. The judgment.debtors objected to the initiation of proceedings on two grounds. They contended that the ex-officio Sub-Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the execution application or to execute the decree. They also pleaded that the decree had become time barred. The learned ex-officio Sub Judge by his order dated 23rd March 1949 decided that the application for execution was within time. As regards the objection to his jurisdiction, he held that though the decree should have been transmitted to his Court through the District Judge, Gauhati, the defect was technical and was not fatal to the proceedings. Judgmentdebtors have appealed to this Court.

[4] The first question is whether in the circumstances of this case the learned ex-officio Sub Judge had jurisdiction to execute the decree. Order 21, R. 5, Civil P. C., provides that:

"Where the Court to which a decree is to be sent for execution is situate within the same district as the Court which passed such decree, such Court shall send the same directly to the former Court. But, where the Court to which the decree is to be sent for execution is situate in a different district, the Court which passed it shall send it to the District Court of the district in which the decree is to be executed."

[5] It is clear from the language of the rule that it was necessary that the decree should have been sent to the District Court of the district in which it was sought to be executed. Its execution admittedly was sought at Tezpur. It should have been sent to the District Court of Tezpur which was the Court of the District Judge at Gauhati. The decree was transferred to the District Judge though the address of the District Judge was not correctly stated on the letter sent by the Registrar of the Calcutta High Court. He addressed it to the District Judge at Tezpur. The District Judge was in fact at Gauhati. The learned ex officio Sub-Judge should not have received the papers meant for the District Judge of Tezpur. He, however, received the papers and the decree-holder also applied for execution in his Court. The procedure adopted was in contravention of B, 5 of O. 21, The learned exofficio Sub-Judge thought that the irregularity was not material and that it did not effect his jurisdiction.

[6] We do not think that this view of the matter is correct. The learned counsel for the appellants has relied on Kunja Behari Singh

v. Tarupada Mitra, A. I. R. (6) 1919 Pat. 324; (4 Pat. L. J. 49) in support of his contention that if a decree is sent for execution to another district, it should be sent to the Court of the District Judge. The Subordinate Judge in that district has no jurisdiction to entertain an application for execution of a decree transferred to him direct by the trial Court until it is transferred to him by the District Court. According to this view, non-compliance with the requirements of R. 5 of O. 21, would affect jurisdiction. There are other authorities also in support of this view. The learned counsel for the respondent has not tried to support the view taken by the learned ex-officio Sub-Judge.

[7] We are of the view that the decree could not have been sent direct to the ex-officio Sub-Judge. If it had been sent to him direct, he would not have acquired necessary jurisdiction to execute the decree. In this case, however, the decree was not sent to him for execution. It was sent to the District Judge, though his address was incorrectly given. In these circumstances, the learned ex-officio Sub-Judge was not justified in receiving the papers which were not meant for him. His receiving the papers meant for the District Judge surely would not confer any jurisdiction on him to execute the decree. The irregularity, in these circumstances, is not curable as it affects jurisdiction.

[8] The learned counsel for the respondent has pointed out that the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal has got the power under its rules to send its decrees for execution to any Subordinate Court even outside Bengal. He has not been able to show us the rule on which his contention is based. Assuming that such powers exist in the Calcutta High Court, in this case these powers were obviously not exercised. The Calcutta High Court sent the decree to the District Judge and not to any Subordinate Court. There can be no doubt, therefore, that the learned Ex-officio Sub-Judge had no jurisdiction to execute the decree.

[9] In these circumstances his decision on the question of limitation also is without jurisdiction. He had no power to take any step in the execution proceedings. We, therefore, allow the appeal; reverse his order and send back the case to him with the direction that he shall return the application for execution to the decree-holder for presentation to the proper Court. Papers received by him directly from the Calcutta High Court shall be sent to the District Judge at Gauhati for necessary action. We make no order as to costs.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 145 and 435-Revision of order under Chap. 12 - Direct petition to High Court.

The High Court should not ordinarily entertain petitions of revision of an order under Chap. 12, Oriminal P. C., unless the lower Court has been moved in the first instance though it should not hesitate to do so if extraordinary and special circumstances are shown to exist which justify departure from the normal course.

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 147 (1) -"Is satisfied" -Dispute likely to cause breach of peace existing -Magistrate, if bound to take proceedings under section.

An order under cl. (1) of S. 147 requiring the parties in dispute to attend the Court, can only be made if the Magistrate is satisfied from police report or other information that a dispute regarding the alleged right of user of land or water likely to cause a breach of the peace exists. If there is no police report or other information, he may give the applicant a chance to satisfy him or he may ask for a report from the police. If from the material placed before him he is not satisfied about the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace, there will be no justifieation for initiating proceedings under S. 147, Criminal P. C. On the other hand, even if a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists, a Magistrate is not bound to proceed under S. 147. He is not bound to take proceedings under the section and may take action under S. 144 or S. 107, Criminal P. C. But ordinarily the proper course for a Magistrate would be to take action under this section rather than to make temporary orders under S. 144 or S. 107, Oriminal P. C., without any inquiry into the respective claims of the parties. [Para 7]

Judgment. — This petition of revision is directed against an order of the Deputy Commissioner, Nowgong, by which the application of the petitioner, who was the 1st party in the Court of the learned District Magistrate, for initiation of proceedings under S. 147, Criminal

P. C., was disallowed.

[2] The dispute leading to the proceeding from which the present revision petition arises relates to a small passage 17 inches wide between the house of the parties to the dispute. The 1st party, the petitioner, claimed the right of user over the disputed pathway. His case was that both the parties had agreed to reserve 83" strip of their land for the purposes of a drain. The entire land was also to be used as a pathway. On 3rd January 1950, the petitioner applied for an order under S. 144, Criminal P. C., directing the 2nd party to remove the obstruction put up by him along the drain. His case was that he had for the last 30 years maintained an open lane by the south of his building for the drainage of water as also for passage of men, sweeper and for removing night soil, etc. The opposite party began constructing a house and tried to encroach on the said lane. The matter, however, was amicably settled on 10th February 1949. According to the arrangement then made a narrow lane about 17 inches wide was left open between the houses of the two parties. Each side surrendered 83" from his land for the purpose of drainage and for use as a pathway by both the parties. Subsequently, the 2nd party tried to put up a temporary moveable obstruction along the drain. The petitioner objected to their placing the obstruction. He further stated that the opposite party threatened to have recourse to violence if the petitioner tried to remove the obstruction which blocked the pathway. The dispute, he pleaded, was likely to result in a breach of the peace. On this petition, the learned District Magistrate addressed an order to the officer in charge of the police station directing him to keep the path open. He further ordered that both the parties should appear before him on 9th January 1950. The police officer visited the place on 5th Janu. ary 1950. The opposite party asked for time till 8th January 1950 for removing the obstruction. They also stated that they were aware of the order of the District Magistrate and would carry out the same. On 6th January 1950, the opposite party put in a statement repudiating the allegations made by the petitioner in his petition dated 3rd January 1950 and they protested against the order which was served on them on 5th January 1950. On this, the District Magistrate ordered the case to be put up on 9th January 1950. He also vacated his order passed on 3rd January 1950 and ordered that till then the obstruction placed by the opposite party was to remain. On 9th January 1950, he inspected the locality. After that without taking any evidence arguments were heard on 13th and 21st January 1950. The petitioner put in another petition requesting formal proceedings to be drawn up under S. 147, Oriminal P. C., if the order passed on 3rd January could not he made absolute under S. 144, Oriminal P. C. In this petition it was also alleged that a breach of the peace was imminent by reason of the dispute relating to the pathway in question between the parties. The final order was passed on 20th February 1950. In this order the learned District Magistrate considered the question whether proceedings under S. 147, Criminal P. C., be drawn up or not. The finding arrived at by him was that the dispute was with respect to a narrow passage about 17" wide between the houses of the parties. In his view, the passage could not have been put to any general use and was meant only for use of the sweeper. As a result of his spot inspection on the 9th, he also came to the conclusion that the opposite party had placed the obstruction and was not willing to give up his 82" strip of land unless a latrine, which the first party had constructed, was removed from its present site. His reasons for declining to proceed under S. 147, Criminal P. C., are given in one passage of the judgment, which is as follows:

"The question, however, is whether proceedings should be taken up under S. 147 or not. The latrine has just been constructed and was not in use when the second party raised the obstruction on their land. Can there be said to have been a danger to the peace at the time of the dispute? I think not. There was no danger. There is none now unless the first party try to forcibly remove the obstruction; secondly, as the house was under construction for the last 9 or 10 months the path, if at all, was apparently not used for the previous three months, i. e., 147 (2) not attracted. I also think that S. 147 is a negative section, i.e., certain acts under certain circumstances may be ordered not to be done. Here the second party had already raised the obstruction on their land; its removal could not be ordered."

[3] In holding that the removal of the obstruction could not be ordered, the learned District Magistrate was influenced by a decision of their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court reported in Hemchandra v. Abdul Rahman, A. I. B. (29) 1942 Cal. 244: (I. L. R. (1942) 2 Cal. 75 F.B.). He warned the petitioner not to take any action which may lead to a breach of the peace.

[4] Mr. Ghose has assailed the correctness of this order. He urges that the procedure adopted by the learned District Magistrate is opposed to the provisions contained in S. 147, Criminal P. C., as also to the principles of natural justice. He gave no opportunity to the petitioner to substantiate his allegations and instead of merely declining to draw up proceedings under S. 147 entered into the merits of the controversy without passing a preliminary order and came to certain findings on points which could have been considered only after the proceedings had been initiated. He even warned the petitioner against doing anything which may lead to a breach of the peace. The order, according to him, is not only illegal but in excess of jurisdiction.

[5] Before I proceed to consider the contentions raised on behalf of the petitioner, I propose to deal with a question of procedure raised by Mr. Medhi for the opposite party. This petition was filed in this Court directly. The Sessions Judge was not moved at all. He has concurrent jurisdiction with this Court to entertain a revision petition under S. 147, Oriminal P. C. He. however, could not pass final orders on the petition. In spite of this the practice which is followed in the majority of the High Courts in India is that petitions of revision against orders under Chap. XII are not entertained if the Ses. sions Judge has not been moved in the first instance. This practice tends to administrative convenience and from a purely judicial view point also nothing can be said against it except that in certain cases of an exceptional nature speedy interference may be desirable in the interest of justice and resort to the High Court for redress may be justified. In these circumstances agreeing substantially with the view of Findlay O. J. C., expressed in Bajirao v. Mt. Dadibai, A. I. R. (13) 1926 Nag. 285 : (27) Cr. L. J. 71), I hold that the High Court should not ordinarily entertain petitions of revision like the present one under Chap. XII, Criminal P. C., unless the lower Court has been moved in the first instance though it should not hesitate to do so if extraordinary and special circumstances are shown to exist which justify departure from the normal course.

[6] In this case, the petition was admitted on the ground that there was no settled practice of the Court. There is no point in returning the petition for presentation to the Sessions Court at this stage and I shall, therefore, dispose it of on the merits, particularly in view of the fact that the order in question has been passed without any inquiry. [7] On the merits, I am inclined to the view that the contention raised by Mr. Ghose should prevail substantially. Proceedings up to 13th January 1950 were under S. 144, Oriminal P. O. On this date an application was put in by the petitioner by which it was prayed that the order of 3rd January be made absolute under S. 144, Criminal P. C., or in the alternative regular proceedings under S. 147, Criminal P. C., be drawn up. It appears from the final order of the learned District Magistrate that the petitioner did not press for action under S. 144, Oriminal P. C., and therefore the only point considered in the order was whether proceedings under 8. 147 should be initiated or not. The procedure to be followed on an application under 8. 147 is given in S. 147 of the Code. According to this section if a District Magistrate, Sub divisional Magistrate or Magistrate of the First Class is satisfied, from a police report or other information, that a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists regarding any alleged right of user of any land or water as explained in S. 145, sub-s. (2) (whether such right be claimed as an easement or otherwise), within the local limits of his jurisdiction, he may make an order in writing stating the grounds of his being so satisfied and requiring the parties concerned in such dispute to attend the Court in person or by pleader within a time to be fixed by such Magistrate and to put in written statements of their respective claims and shall thereafter inquire into the matter in the manner provided in S. 145. Section 145 (4) requires the Court to peruse the statements so put in, hear the parties, receive all such evidence as may be produced by them respectively, consider the effects of such evidence, take such further evidence (if any) as he thinks necessary and then to decide whether the right claimed under S. 147 exists. If he finds that such a right exists, he may make an order prohibiting interference with the exercise of such right. An order under clause (1) of Section 147 requiring the parties in dispute to attend the Court can only be made if the Magistrate is satisfied from police report or other information that a dispute regarding the alleged right of user of land or water likely to cause a breach of the peace exists. If there is no police report or other information, he may give the applicant a chance to satisfy him or he may ask for a report from the police. If from the material placed before him he is not satisfied about the existence of a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace, there will be no justification for initiating prooccings under S. 147, Oriminal P. O. On the other hand, even if a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists, a Magistrate is not bound to proceed under S. 147. He is not bound to take proceedings under the section and may take action under S. 144 or S. 107, Oriminal P. O. But, ordinarily, the proper course for a Magistrate would be to take action under this section rather than to make temporary orders under S. 144 or s. 107, Criminal P. C., without any inquiry into the respective claims of the parties as held in Inder Dec v. Durga Prasad, A. I. R. (28) 1936 Pat. 59 : (87 Or. L. J. 378).

(8) In this case the learned District Magistrate set out to decide the question whether proceedings should be taken under S. 147 or not. He had, therefore, first to address himself to the question whether there was a dispute between the parties relating to the alleged user of land or water likely to cause a breach of the peace The learned District Magistrate appears to assume that the dispute does exist. As regards the question whether it was likely to cause a breach of the peace or not, he thought that there was no such danger and observed further that there was no such danger even on the date of his order unless the first party tried forcibly to remove the obstruction. To prevent this contingency he warned the petitioner not to take any action which may lead to a breach of the peace. The order read as a whole would indicate that the learned District Magistrate apprehended that there was likelihood of a breach of the peace also. This is clear from the fact that the learned Magistrate had to say that there would be no breach of the peace if the petitioner does not try forcibly to remove the obstruction. What he meant was that if the petitioner (1st party) tried to exercise his alleged right of user of the pathway, a breach of the peace would occur. This was exactly the petitioner's case. He had alleged that he had the right of user in the pathway which had been obstructed and that the exercise of his right would lead to a breach of the peace. The order does not, therefore, embody a finding that there is no dispute between the parties or that dispute between the parties is not likely to cause a breach of the peace. Assuming, however, that the Court thought that there was no such dispute between the parties which could lead to a breach of the peace, the order should have been that as there is no dispute likely to lead to a breach of the peace no proceedings are necessary under S. 147. The learned District Magistrate did not adopt this course. He proceeded to examine the question whether the petitioner had been exercising the alleged right within 3 months before the date of his petition as required by proviso to S. 147. On this point he found that the pathway had apparently not been used for the 'previous 3 months'. He had no jurisdiction to consider this matter. He could go into this question only after passing the preliminary order under cl. (1) of S. 147. After the preliminary order he ought to have considered the written statement of the parties, should have given them an opportunity to adduce evidence and then he could come to some decision on the point. Without taking any evidence he has gone into the question which he had no jurisdiction to decide. There was thus not only lack of jurisdiction but the manner of exercising the jurisdiction was also patently illegal. He even went further and considered the question whether the obstruction placed by the second party could have been removed or not. This question too would not arise if there was no basis for the initiation of the proceedings. The learned District Magiatrate in relying on Hemchandra v. Abdul Raha. man, A. I. R. (29) 1942 Cal. 244: (I. L. B. (1942) 2 Cal. 75 FB.) held that an order of the removal or obstruction could not be passed under S. 147, but he bad no jurisdiction to decide this question also. It could be considered only if the Court had reached the stage when it is to consider what order may be passed in the proceedings. According to the Calcutta view, an order prohibiting interference with the exercise of the right claimed by the petitioner can be passed under S. 147. The authority, therefore, could not be utilised for throwing out the petition. The fact that the learned District Magistrate considered questions which could be considered only after passing of the preliminary order also indicates that the learned Magistrate felt that the petition could not be disallowed on the mere ground that there was no dispute about the user of land likely to lead to a breach of the peace. In fact, his last order under S. 144 would indicate that he felt the necessity for immediate action. The order, therefore, is easily as allable on grounds of illegality and excess of jurisdiction.

[9] The learned counsel for the opposite party has contended relying on Manindra Chandra v. Barada Kanta, 30 cal. 112: (6 c. W. N. 417) that a Magistrate may not be directed to proceed under S. 147 if he has declined to proceed even if he passed his order without examining the applicant or allowing him an opportunity to substantiate his allegations. This case is distinguisbable. In this case a Magistrate instituted preceedings under S. 145 and passed an order under sub.s. (1) of S. 145. After that he received information which led him to believe that there was no longer any dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace. On receipt of this informa. tion he cancelled his previous order. The parties had not yet put in their written statements. The High Court declined to interfere on the ground that the Magistrate had not acted without jurisdiction.

[10] I do not see how this case can assist the opposite parties. If on any material the Court had come to the conclusion that there was no dispute likely to cause a breach of the reace, it could have been urged that the High Court should not interfere with a finding of fact arrived at by the Magistrate. But the position here is different. The learned Magistrate had declined to proceed under S. 147. In fact, while holding that it is not necessary to initiate proceedings under S. 147, he has actually gone into matters which arise only after the initiation of the proceedings. He has thus exercised jurisdiction for which there was no basis. He has actually arrived at findings on matters which he could not examine before passing a preliminary order.

This order, so far as these matters are concerned; is without jurisdiction and the finding arrived at on these matters influenced his decision of the question whether proceedings under 8. 147 should be initiated or not. This order, therefore, cannot stand and the case must go back for its proper disposal.

[11] The learned District Magistrate shall decide on the material that may be made avail. able to him whether a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace exists between the parties regarding the alleged user of any land or water. If such a dispute is found to exist, he shall exercise his judicial discretion in determining whether he should initiate proceedings under S. 147. If he decides to proceed under this section, a preliminary order as required by 8. 147 (1) shall be passed. The subsequent inquiry shall follow the directions contained in S. 145 (4) so far as they may be applicable. It is only after the parties have been heard and their evidence taken as required by S. 145 (4) that the Court would proceed to determine whether the right claimed by the petitioner first party has been proved to exist. If the Court is satisfied about the existence of the right claimed, it shall pass an order prohibiting any interference with the existence of such right.

[12] The petition of revision is allowed and the case is sent back to the learned District Magistrate for disposal of the petition according to law and in the light of the directions contained in this order.

Section 33 deals with the pre-emptive right of a landlord. That right can be exercised against a transferee. The disputes directly covered by S. 33 would not normally relate to any incident of the tenancy. It is however possible that in cases covered by S. 33 some question as to the incident of a tenancy may crop up incidentally. Even that need not necessarily convert the entire dispute into a matter which sub-ol. (e) of cl. (1) of S. 147 would cover. [Para 4]

Ram Labhaya J. — This is an appeal from the order of the Sub-Judge, Cachar, dated 10th May 1949 dismissing an appeal from the order of the Munsiff of Karimganj dated 30th August 1948 in Mise. Case No. 116 of 1947.

[2] The appeal arises out of miscellaneous proceedings under S. 33, Sylhet Tenancy Act. The appeal was dismissed on the ground that the order of the learned Munsiff was not appealable. In coming to this conclusion, the learned Sub-Judge relied on Narondra Lal v. Rabindra Lal, 51 Cal. W. N. 673. The correctness of the view of the law that has prevailed with the learned Sub-Judge is assailed before us.

[3] Section 33, Sylhet Tenancy Act, prescribes the procedure for an immediate landlord for the exercise of his pre-emptive right if a notice is served on him under S. 30 or S. 32. Orders passed on an application under S. 33 have not been made expressly appealable. Section 147 of Chap. 10 of the Act, which deals with judicial procedure, provides for appeals in certain cases. It lays down that:

"Subject to the provisions of S. 132, the Court having jurisdiction to determine a suit for possession of land may, on the application either of the landlord or the tenant of the land, determine all or any of the following matters."

Then follows a list of matters which may be determined at the instance of the landlord or the tenant under this section. It is claimed that sub-cl. (e) of S. 147, cl. (1) covers the matter now before us and therefore the order was appelable. Sub-cl. (e) deals with "any other incident of the tenancy," viz., incident not specifically mentioned in the preceding sub-clauses.

[4] We do not find any force in this conten. tion. Section 83 deals with the pre-emptive right of a landlord. That right can be exercised against a transferee. The disputes directly covered by 8.88 would not normally relate to any incident of the tenancy. It is however possible that in cases covered by S. 83 some question as to the incident of a tenancy may crop up incidentally. Even that need not necessarily convert the entire dispute into a matter which sub-ol. (e) of cl. (1) of S. 147, Sylbet Tenancy Act, would cover. But in this case that difficulty does not arise. No incident of tenancy was in dispute in the trial Court. The learned Sub Judge, therefore, was perfectly right in holding that the matter was not covered by s. 147 and that it was otherwise not appealable. The view that found favour with the learned Sub Judge is sup. ported by Narendra Lal v. Rabindra Lal 51 O. W. N. 678. In that case Akram J. held that:

"A decision as to the nature of a tenancy for the purposes of an application under S. 38, Sylhet Tenancy Act, cannot be deemed to be an order under S. 147."

In his view it was necessary before a party could avail of the provisions of 8.147, cl. 3, that there must be a substantive application or an order under that section Incidental determination of matters enumerated in sub-cls. (a) to (e) of 8.147 (1) in proceedings under 8.33 would not bring the matters within the ambit of 8.147.

[5] It is not necessary for us in this case to go to that extent. Here there has been no determination of any matter which could be regarded as an "incident of the tenancy' In fact, the tenants did not appear at all in the proceedings before the trial Court. They appealed from the decision and contested the claim for the first time in appeal. The view that the order of the learned Munsif was not covered by 8. 147 (3) is perfectly correct and this appeal, therefore, mustfail on the merits.

(6) Mr. Ghose raised a preliminary objection to the competency of the second appeal. The basis of his objection was that orders under 8. 33 are not appealable. The appeal itself was dismissed as incompetent. We have some to the conclusion that the view of the learned SubJudge is correct, and that there are no grounds for interference with the order on its merits. It is not necessary in these circumstances to give a decision on the preliminary objection though it is clear from the view of the law that we have taken that no second appeal can be competent when the order not being a decree within the meaning of S. 147 is not appealable at all.

[7] The learned counsel for the appellants has requested that the appeal be treated as a revision. No purpose can be served by treating the appeal as a revision as we have found that on the merits the order of the learned Sub-Judge is correct.

[8] The appeal is dismissed with costs.

(a) Civil P. C. (1908), O. 17, R. 1 (1) and (2) — Court's power to grant adjournment conditional on payment of costs.

The powers of the Court to adjourn the hearing of the suit from time to time under O. 17, R. 1 are very wide. It may grant adjournment on any terms that it considers fit. It is, therefore within the competence of the Court to grant an adjournment on the condition that costs are paid on a particular date, falling which the suit shall be dismissed or defence struck off, as the case may be. Such a condition if imposed could also be enforced in the event of non-compliance of the order.

Where the Court does not indicate in express terms that it was proceeding under O. 17, R. 1, the determination of the question whether it proceeded under O. 17, R. 1 or under O. 17, R. 3 would depend on the circumstances of the case. [Para 18]

The word 'default' in S. 2 (2) (b) is not limited in its operation nor has it been qualified in any way. The default in the definition does not refer merely to cases of default specifically dealt with in the Code, but covers an order dismissing a suit for non-payment of adjournment costs. Further, an order dismissing a suit for want of prosecution would not be treated as a judicial determination of the matters in controversy: A. I. R. (30) 1943 Nag. 149, Dissent. [Paras 22 and 24]

Therefore, an order dismissing a suit for non-payment of adjournment costs is not appealable either as a decree or as an order. A petition of revision against such an order would however lie and it would be open to the High Court to set aside the order where in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction it finds that interference is called for or justified.

D. N. Medhi - for Appellant.

J. C. Sen and P. C. Dutta; and B. N. Deka — for Respondents 1 and 2, respectively.

Ram Labhaya J. — This is an appeal from the decree and order of the ex-officio Sub-Judge, Tezpur, by which plaintiff's suit was dismissed for non-payment of adjournment costs on 19th May 1948. The decree was signed on 11th February 1949.

[2] The appeal was presented on behalf of the plaintiff (the Gauhati Bank). The suit was for recovery of Rs. 56,839/9/3. A decree for the amount claimed was prayed for against defendants 1 and 2. It was further prayed that the decree should provide that if the entire decretal amount with interest and costs was not realised from defendants 1 and 2, the unrealised amount of the decree would be recoverable from defendant 3 with consequential costs.

[3] The suit was dismissed in the following circumstances. On 6th August 1947, defendant 3 applied for production of certain documents by plaintiff for inspection. The Court ordered the production of the documents asked for. On the next date viz., 1st October 1947, defendant applied for the dismissal of the suit on the ground of the failure of the plaintiff to produce the documents asked for. Plaintiff applied for more time for the purpose and time was allowed till 26th November 1947. The case again came up for hearing on 28th January 1948. The documents asked for had not been produced by the plaintiff till then. The Court ordered that the application of defendant 3 dated 1st October 1947 asking for the dismissal of plaintiff's suit on account of non-compliance with the order of the Court be put up for hearing. This petition was heard on 7th April 1948. The learned Sub. Judge found that the plaintiff was not in a position to produce all the documents asked for, and in point of fact both the parties were blameworthy. He, therefore, did not dismiss the suit, but ordered that plaintiff should produce certain specified documents and if the plaintiff Bank was not able to produce any of these documents it should make an avernment to that effect in Court. It was further provided in the order that in the event of its non-compliance, the suit shall be dismissed. The case was fixed for 21st April 1948.

[4] The plaintiff did not comply with the order even by this date and asked again for extension of time for compliance. On 21st April 1943, when the came up for hearing, the Court refused to grant any more time and fixed 28th April 1948 for considering the consequences of default on plaintiff's part. On 28th April 1948, considering that the claim was for a sum of Rs. 56,889-9-3, the Court reviewed its previous order on the condition that the plaintiff paid Rs. 25 to defendant 3 as adjournment costs. The time for producing the documents was extended till 19th May. On 19th May plaintiff produced some documents and put in an affidavit explaining the non-production of some others.

[5] The sum of Rs. 25 payable to defendant 3 as adjournment costs was not deposited. The result was that there was only a partial compliance with the order of the Court dated 28th April 1948. The learned Sub-Judge then passed the following order:

"Plaintiff files certain documents and files an affidavit regarding other documents called for. Adjournment cost not paid —the suit is dismissed in terms of my above order for non-payment of adjournment costs (which the plaintiff appears unwilling to pay)."

It is contended that the amount due by way of cost to defendant 8 was not deposited on the request by his counsel in conformity with a common practice by which costs are paid to the counsel for the party in whose favour the order for costs is made. It is urged further that the case was not called on 19th May 1948 and plaintiff's counsel had no opportunity to explain why the amount had not been deposited. The suit was dismissed in the absence of plaintiff's counsel, who learned about it next day. There is an affidavit from the pleader of the plaintiff Bank in support of the above statement of facts. This affidavit has not been contradicted.

[7] Defendant 3 in whose favour the order of costs was made is not before the Court. The appeal is being heard ex parte against him. Defendants 1 and 2 have resisted the appeal.

[8] The learned counsel for defendants 1 and 2 urges that this appeal is not competent. His contention is that the order of the Court dismissing the suit merely for non-payment of costs does not amount to a decree and that no appeal lies from the order notwithstanding that a decree sheet was later on prepared. His case was that the order was passed under 0. 17, B. 1.

[9] There is considerable force in this contention. Order 17, B. 1, Civil P. C., gives the Court the power to adjourn the hearing of the suit from time to time. The powers of the Court in this matter are very wide. It may grant adjournment on any terms that it considers fit. It is, therefore, within the competence of the Court to grant an adjournment on the condition that costs are paid on a particular date, failing which the suit shall be dismissed or defence struck off as the case may be. Such a condition if imposed could also be enforced in the event of non-compliance of the order. This proposition appears to be concluded by authority.

[10] In Sewratan v. Kristo Mohan, A. I. R. (9) 1922 Cal. 320: (48 Cal. 902), the order was to the following effect:

"If the money is not pald by 1st June, the suit will be dismissed with costs)."

[11] It was held that

"a further order was necessary by the Court before the suit was dismissed, but the Court would not be bound to pass the order of dismissal."

[12] It is clear from this decision that it was recognised that the Court had the power to dismiss the suit if the order as to the payment of costs was not complied with.

[13] In E. I. Rly. Co. v. Jitmal Kallomal, A. I. B. (12) 1925 ALL. 280: (47 ALL. 588), it was laid down that if payment of costs is made a condition precendent to the adjournment granted to the defendants and the order provides that if costs are not paid, the defence will be struck off, it is open to the Court to strike off the defence and proceed ex parte when the costs are not paid as directed.

[14] In Raju Chettiar v. Ramakkal, A. I. R. (28) 1941 Mad. 437: (199 I. C. 790), the learned Judge referring to cl. (2) of O. 17, B. 1, observed as follows:

"It is clear from sub-r. (2) that the Court is given ample discretion as regards the conditions subject to which it may adjorun the hearing of the suit in so far as the costs occasioned by the adjournment are concerned. I am not prepared to say that when the Court finds a plaintiff constantly defaulting in being ready for the trial, it will not be justified in directing the payment of the day costs as a condition precedent to the further hearing of the suit. When such a condition is inserted in the order it is valid and could be enforced by the dismissal of the suit."

[15] The same view was taken in Mt. Jani v. Mt. Soni, A. I. R. (27) 1940 Nag. 158: (186 I. C. 473) where the learned Judge followed E. I. Rly. Co. v. Jit Mal Kallo Mal, A. I. R. (12) 1925 ALL. 280: (47 ALL. 538).

[16] The learned counsel for the appellant has not cited any authority against this view. It is obvious that in these circumstances the Court was fully competent to order as it did on 28th April 1948 that the suit will be dismissed if the plaintiff did not pay Rs. 25 as adjournment costs to defendant 3. It could also enforce this condition by dismissal of the suit as it later on did on 19th May 1949.

[17] The learned counsel for the plaintiffappellant has contended that the order of 19th May 1948 dismissing the suit for plaintiffs default is covered by O. 17, R. 9, Civil P. O.

[18] I find myself unable to accept this contention. The two orders dated 28th April and 19th May 1948 read together leave no room for doubt that the Court was not proceeding under O. 17, R. 3. Assuming that the circumstances of the case also attracted the applicability of O. 17, R. 3, there can be no doubt that the Court was not bound to take action under O. 17, R. 3. It could adopt any alternative course that was open to it. In these circumstances to dismiss the suit only for default on the part of the plaintiff.appellant was possible. The Court had the power to pursue this course. But the Court has not indicated in express terms that it was proceeding under O. 17, R. 1. In these circumstances the determination of the question whether it proceeded under O. 17, B. 1 or under O. 17, R. 8, would depend on the circumstances of the case. These circumstances have been stated above. They do not even remotely suggest that the Court had O. 17, R. 3 in mind. It dismissed the suit merely on the ground of plaintiff's default in the payment of the cost. This fact was emphasised in the order. There is absolutely nothing in the order to indicate that the Court proceeded to decide the suit on the merits. If the Court had intended to dispose of the suit on its merits, there would have been at least this statement that the suit is dismissed for want of evidence. Again, defendant 3 had claimed compensation from the plaintiff on the ground that the suit against him was passed on false and vexatious grounds. The point was in issue. He would have had an opportunity of substantiating his claim if the Court had proceeded on the merits.

[19] There is also another significant fact. Plaintiff's pleader was not present on 19th May 1948 when the suit was dismissed. The documents called for along with an affidavit were produced that day. But the suit was not dismissed at that time. It was apparently put up later. The affidavit from the pleader of the plaintiff is to the effect that the case was not called and it was dismissed in his absence. The affidavit remains uncontradicted. The order also does not indicate that any of the defendants was present. This circumstance also points to the conclusion that the Court did not proceed under O. 17, B. 3 as suggested by the learned counsel for the plaintiff appellant. In fact, there is nothing in the circumstances of this case to show that the dismissal of the suit was ordered by the Court after proceeding on the merits under O. 17, R. 3.

[20] The dismissal of the suit on plaintiff's default to deposit costs not being a dismissal on the merits, would not create any bar to the institution of a fresh suit under S. 11, Civil P. C. This view finds support from Shaik Sahib v. Mahomed, 13 Mad. 510, wherein it was held that an order dismissing a plaintiff's suit for nonpayment of a fee for Commissioner was not a decision on the merits and therefore did not bar a fresh suit on the same cause of action under S. 13 (now S. 11) of the Code. This view prevailed in Hari Ram v. Lalbai, 26 Bom. 637: (4 Bom. L R. 262) also. In this case, the suit was dismissed for failure to give security for costs of the suit. The order now before us, therefore, is not covered by the definition of the decree as given in s. 2 (2), Civil P. C. The learned counsel for the appellant has not even contended that the order would be covered by the definition of the decree and has not cited any authority in support of it. His case only was that the order should be taken to have been passed under O. 17, R. 3 and this aspect of the matter has been dealt with above.

ever, a decision not cited at the Bar, Digby J., held that the order dismissing a suit for nonpayment of adjournment costs was covered by the definition of the decree as contained in S. 2 (2), Civil P. C., and that an appeal was competent from such an order. In that case the suit was dismissed in the presence of the parties on the ground that plaintiff was unable to pay the costs of adjournment. The payment was a condition precedent to the suit proceeding. An application for restoration of the suit was put in by the plaintiff. On this the Court ordered that its order dismissing the suit was an order under O. 17, R. 1, and agreed to restore the suit on payment of Rs. 22 as costs to the other side. The sum of Rs. 22 was offered to the defendant's counsel in pursuance of this order, but he refused to accept it. He presented a petition of revision against the order of the learned Judge agreeing to restore the suit on payment of the adjournment costs. The question raised in the revision petition was that an appeal should have been preferred from the order of dismissal which was treated as analogous to an order of dismissal resulting from the application of O. 17, R. 3. From the respondent's side the contention put forward was that no appeal was competent and an application for restoration under S. 151 was the only remedy. The learned Judge noticed that the definition of the decree given in the Civil Procedure Code excluded the dismissal of a suit for default from its scope. He interpreted the word 'default' in this definition as limited to such defaults which were specifically dealt with by the Code. He had no authority in support of the view he took and he could refer only to Sewratan v. Kristo Mohan, A.I.R. (9) 1922 Cal. 320: (48 Cal. 902) in which it was assumed that if adjournment costs were not paid by a certain date as ordered, and the suit was dismissed for default an appeal would lie.

[22] With great respect, I am unable to agree with the view taken by the learned Judge in this case. The definition of the decree expressly excludes any order of dismissal for default. The word 'default' in this definition is not limited in its operation nor has it been qualified in any way. If it is held that the default in the definition refers to cases of default specifically dealt with in the Code, it would be reading something into the definition which is not contained therein. Besides, even if we assume that an order of dismissal for default of a kind not specifically dealt with by the Code was not meant to be excluded under 8. 2 (2) (b), before such ax order could be characterised as a decree, it is necessary that it should amount to a formal expression of an adjudication which so far as the Court expressing it conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit. The learned Judge of the Nagpur High Court did not consider whether an order dismissing a suit for default for non-payment of adjourn. ment costs could be treated as an adjudication which conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy. He merely found that a default in the payment of costs was not excluded from the definition of the decree. He did not consider whether the positive qualifications of a decree are present in such an order. In my opinion these qualifications are completely lacking. A plaintiff institutes a suit. He is ordered to do a certain thing, viz., payment of costs. The payment of costs is made a condition precedent to the further prosecution of the suit. He fails to pay the costs and the suit is dismissed. There is no judicial determination of the matters which were in controversy in the suit. The plaintiff in such a case is not permitted to prosecute the suit. His position would be that of a person who has not instituted a suit at all. The suit, though dismissed, has not been disposed of on the merits. This view finds support from Abdulla Asghar Ali v. Ganesh Das, A. I. B. (20) 1933 P. C. 68 : (60 Cal. 662), [28] In this case Abdulla Asghar Ali v. Ganesh Das, A.I R. (20) 1933 P. O. 68: (60 Cal. 662), their Lordships distinguished an earlier decision of the Privy Council reported in Chandri Abdul Majid v. Jawahir Lal, A. I. R. (1) 1914 P. C. 66: (36 ALL. 350). They quoted a passage from the judgment in that case which was delivered by Lord Moulton. The passage is as follows:

"The chief matter of argument before this Board was a contention that the decree which it is sought to enforce had been constructively turned into a decree of His Majesty in Council and assigned to the date of 13th May 1901, by virtue of the dismissal of the appeal for want of prosecution on that date, and that therefore the period of limitation was 12 years from 13th May 1901, by virtue of Art. 180, Limitation Act, 1872. (Under Art. 180, 12 years was allowed for the execution of an order of His Majesty in Council.) Their Lordships see no foundation for this contention which appears to have been the basis of the decision of the Courts below. The order dismissing the appeal for want of prosecution did not deal judicially with the matter of the suit, and could in no sense be regarded as an order adopting or confirming the decision appealed from. It merely recognised authoritatively that the appellant had not complied with the conditions under which the appeal was open to him and that therefore he was in the same position as if he had not appealed at all."

[24] The correctness of the view enunciated in this passage was not questioned. It follows that an order dismissing a suit for want of prosecution would not be treated as a judicial determination of the matters in controversy.

[25] In re Kayambu Pillai, A. I.R. (28) 1941
Mad. 836: (I.L.B. (1941) Mad. 954 (F.B.)), a Full Bench decision, it was held by their Lordships that the word 'default' in S. 2 (2) was not confined to default in appearance alone. It included other defaults as well.

[26] The same view was taken in Jagdish Kumar Singh v. Hari Krishen Das A. I. R. (29) 1942 Oudh 362: (199 I. C. 835) and it was held that the word 'default' in the definition of the decree covered default of prosecution. I am in respectful agreement with the view taken in the above two cases for the reasons given above by me. An order of dismissal for non-prosecution according to this view does not amount to a decree even though a decree is prepared in pursuance of the order.

[27] The authorities bearing on the interpretation of the word 'default' as used in the definition of the expression 'decree' are not, however, uniform.

[28] The contrary view was taken in Mohammadi Husain v. Mt. Chandro, A. I. R. (24) 1937 ALL. 284: (168 I. C. 1001) and Abdul Majid v. Amina Khatun A.I.R. (29) 1942 Cal. 539: (I.L.R. (1942) 2 Cal. 253). In Mohammadi Husain v. Mt. Chandro, A. I. R. (24) 1937 ALL. 284: (168 I. C. 1001), it was held that the expression 'dismissal for default' meant dismissal for non-appearance and did not cover a dismissal where the appellant's pleader was present and expressed his inability to argue the appeal which was dismissed for non-prosecution.

[29] In Abdul Majid v. Amiya Khatun, A. I. R. (29) 1942 Cal. 539: (I. L. R. (1942) 2 Cal. 253), the learned Judges held that the expression in question did not include a dismissal for non payment of deficit court-fee. In a sense the Allahabad decision is distinguishable. In that the real question was whether the physical presence of a pleader who was unable to argue the appeal was appearance or not. The learned Judges appeared to have treated that appearance as appearance in law. This question does not arise in the present case and it is not necessary for us to decide as to whether in the circumstances of the Allahabad case the appearance of the pleader was an appearance in the eye of law or not.

[30] In the Calcutta case it was held that an order dismissing a suit or appeal for non payment of additional court-fees is not an order of dismissal of the suit under 8. 2 (2) (b) but that it was a decision under the Court-fees Act and was appealable as a decree. On facts this case is also distinguishable. But so far as the two decisions considered above lay down that the expression 'dismissal for default' in cl. (b) of s. 2 (2), Civil P. C., was meant to apply only to defaults as were specifically dealt with by the statute as in o. 9, with great respect to the learned Judges I find myself unable to agree with them.

[31] In Sewratan v. Kristo Mohan, A.I.R. (9) 1922 Cal. 320: (48 Cal. 902), it was assumed that a conditional order that in default (of payment of money) the suit shall stand dismissed could not be revived in the absence of an appeal. Similarly, in Rajachettiar v. Ramakkal, A.I.R. (28) 1941 Mad. 497 : (199 I.C. 790), an appeal was heard and disposed of against an order dismis. sing a suit for payment of costs. No objection was raised to the competency of the appeal. On the other band, in E. I. Rly. Co. v. Jitmal Kallomal, A.I.B. (12) 1925 ALL. 280: (47 ALL. 538) and Mt. Jani v. Mt. Soni, A.I.R. (27) 1940 Nag. 158: (186 I. C. 473), revision petitions were entertained against orders dismissing suits for default in the payment of adjournment costs. In these also no objection was taken to the competency of the petitions. These cases are of no great assistance one way or the other as the point now before us was not in question in these cases and no considered decision on it can be said to have been given.

above seems to justify the conclusion that the weight of authority like that of reason is on the side of the view that an order dismissing a suit for non-payment of adjournment costs is not appealable either as a decree or as an order. A petition of revision against such an order would however lie and it would be open to the High Court to set aside the order where in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction it finds that interference is called for or justified.

[83] The order dismissing the suit was passed on 19th May 1948. The appeal in this case was filed on 19th March 1948. The decree sheet was signed on 11th February 1949. The appeal was within time according to the view that still obtains in the Calcutta High Court, vide Sudhansu Bhusan v. Majho Bili, A. I. R. (24) 1937 Cal. 732: (176 I. C. 361) and Sarat Chandra v. Rati Kanta, A. I. B. (26) 1939 Cal. 711: (186 1. C. 58). This view was not followed by us in Civil Appeal No. 31 of 1947 (The Governor-General of India in Council v. Messrs. Jesraj Tilakchand Labhchand): (A. I. R. (37) 1950 Assam 83). But we extended the period of limitation in that appeal under S. 5 on the ground that the appellant was misled by the view prevailing In the Calcutta High Court. If the present appeal had been competent, we would have followed the same course, as this appeal was also filed before our decision in Appeal No. 31 of 1947 : (A. I. R. (37) 1950 Assam 83). The appeal would have been heard on the merits. But we have come to the conclusion that the appeal is not competent. The learned counsel for the appellant has requested that if the appeal is held to be not competent, it may be treated as a revision. In view of the uncertain state of the law on the point as to whether an appeal was competent or not, we think the request may not be refused. We, therefore, decide to treat the appeal as a petition for revision.

[36] The learned counsel for the respondent has pointed out that even if the appeal is treated as a petition of revision, it would still be barred by time. The Statute does not prescribe any period of limitation for petitions of revision. The grounds on which the period of limitation would have been extended if the appeal had been competent, amply justify the condonation of delay now that the appeal has been treated as a petition of revision. The High Court has also the power to interfere on its own motion in the exercise of its discretionary powers under S. 115, Civil P. O. at any time in cases where facts justify interference. This, in my opinion, is a fit case for the exercise of the revisional jurisdiction.

[37] On the merits the order dismissing the suit ought not to be allowed to stand. The learned Sub Judge had the jurisdiction to pass the order that if costs were not paid on the due date, the suit shall be dismissed. He could also enforce this condition. But in this case he dismissed the suit in the absence of the plaintiff. The case was not called at all. This is proved by the affidavit filed on behalf of the plaintiff which remains uncontradicted. The bank, therefore, had no opportunity to explain its conduct. At a previous stage of this case when a similar default had occurred, the learned Sub-Judge gave an opportunity to the plaintiff to show if there was any good cause for non-compliance. The same procedure should have been followed on this occasion. If plaintiff was bound to appear on 19th May and failed to appear the more appropriate course would have been to dismiss the suit for default of appearance. If appearance was not obligatory on that date, the crushing penalty of the dismissal of the suit for Rs. 56,889-9 3 should not have been imposed without giving the plaintiff a chance to satisfy the Court that he had good reasons for noncompliance. If such an opportunity had been given, the Court would have been made aware of the request from the coursel for defendant 3. for payment of costs. The Court would not have been bound to accept this arrangement and may have insisted on payment of the costs forthwith. The plaintiff could then have paid the costs. It would have also been open to the Court to accept the arrangement. The drastic step taken would have been avoided. The procedure adopted by the Court below was materially irregular and it has caused a failure of justice.

[38] The order for payment of costs was in favour of defendant 3. The default affected him alone. There was no need for the dismissal of the entire suit even against defendants 1 and 2. In this respect also, there has been no proper or judicial exercise of discretion by the learned Sub Judge. Defendant 3, the person aggrieved by plaintiff's default, is not now before us. He is not contesting and he is being proceeded against ex parte.

[89] The petition is therefore allowed. The order of the learned Eub-Judge dated 19th May 1948 is set aside. The suit is restored. The case shall be remanded to the Court of the learned ex-officio Sub-Judge., Tezpur, for disposal on the merits.

[40] Petitioner (Bank) shall pay Rs. 100 as costs to defendants 1 and 2.

[41] Thadani C. J.—I agree, but would add a few words.

[42] I am content to rest my decision on the undisputed fact that the plaintiff's advocate was not present in Court on 19th May 1948, the date on which the suit was dismissed for non-payment of the adjournment costs. Apparently the plaintiff was also absent on that date. The learned Judge then had the option of proceeding to dispose of the suit either under O. 17, R. 2 or O. 17, R. S. Civil P. O. I think it is reasonable to say, on the facts of this case, that the learned Judge disposed of the suit under O. 17, R. 2, and not under O. 17, R. S.

[42] I am also content not to express any view, one way or the other with reference to the interpretation as put by Digby J., in the case reported in Mt. Radhabai v. Mt. Purni. bai, A. I. R. (30) 1948 Nag. 149 : (I. L. R. (1943) Nag. 618), on the word 'default' occurring in B. 2 (2), Civil P. C., as it is not necessary for the purposes of our decision.

The Governor-General of India in Council -Appellant v. Jesraj Tilokchand Labhchand and others-Respondents.

First Appeal No. 31 of 1947, D/- 15-5-1950, from judgment and decree of Addl. Sub-Judge, A. V. D., D/- 29-3-1946.

(a) Railways Act (1890), S. 72-Risk Note B-Proviso - Misconduct - Evidence - Pailure of Rallway Administration to discharge its obligation as ballee and also under proviso to Risk Note-Presumption-Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 106 and 114 (g)-Contract Act (1872), Ss. 151 and 152.

The plaintiffs brought a suit for compensation against a State Rallway for the loss sustained by them by reason of the non-delivery of certain goods carried by the defendant under Risk Notes A and B. Some five months before the litigation commenced, the plaintiffs called upon the Railway Administration to make an enquiry into the matter of the loss of the consignment, and sent a reminder to the Railway Administration 3 weeks later. In the two letters, there was no specific request made by the plaintiffs for a disclosure by the Railway Administration as to the manner in which it had dealt with the consignment in transit, but it was plain from the endorsement of the Chief Commercial Manager forwarding a copy of the letter to the Station Master concerned that he understood the implication of the request made by the plaintiffs in the matter of the enquiry into the nondelivery of the consignment. However, the Railway Administration failed, before the litigation commenced, to furnish to the plaintiffs particulars of the manner in which the consignment was dealt with in transit. Even after a pleader's notice was served upon the Railway Administration, the Deputy Director, Railway Board, merely replied that the pleader's notice had been forwarded for disposal to the General Manager. No communication, however, was ceived by the plaintiffs from the General Manager. When the dispute came to the stage of litigation, the Railway Administration again did not lead any evidence in discharge of its obligation under the proviso contained in Risk Note B:

Held (1) that there was no obligation on the plaintiffs to call upon the Railway Administration to give evidence at the trial in discharge of its obligation under the proviso contained in Risk Note B, the obligation of the Railway Administration being unconditional;

(2) that the terms of cl. (g) of S. 114, Evidence Act, were clearly attracted, the presumption being that if the Railway Administration had produced the reports and led evidence as to the manner in which the consignment was dealt with in transit, the reports and the evidence would have gone against the Railway Administration, and given rise to an inference of misconduct on the part of the Administration or its servants; [Para 13]

(3) that even as a bailee, the Railway Administration had to give evidence to satisfy the Court that it had discharged its obligation under the Contract Act, and that the only way in which it could have discharged its obligation as a bailee was by giving evidence as to the manner in which the consignment was dealt with in transit, quite apart from its obligation under the proviso contained in the Risk Note B having regard to the provisions of S. 106 of the Evidence Act; [Para 14]

(4) that, therefore, the Railway Administration was responsible for the loss of the consignment. [Para 20] Annotation: ('46-Man) Railways Act, S. 72, Notes 5, 17 and 25; Evidence Act, S. 106 N. 6; S. 114 N. 11; Contract Act, Ss. 151 and 152 N. 8.

(b) Railways Act (1890), S. 72-Risk Note B-Proviso - Misconduct - Pleading - Civil P. C. (1908), O. 6, R. 4.

Before any question relating to the discharge of the obligation imposed on the Railway Administration by the proviso contained in the Risk Note B arises, the plaintiff is not bound to state that the loss of the consignment was due to the misconduct of the Railway Administration or its servante.

peal-Railways Act (1890), S. 72.

Per Ram Labhaya J.—Where the defendant admits a material fact in no mistake or misapprehension in his written statement, he cannot be allowed to convert his admission into a denial for the first time in appeal. Thus, where there is an omission in the written statement to raise the plea that as the consignment was admittedly booked under Riek Notes A and B, the plaintiffs could not claim compensation without alleging and proving misconduct on the part of the Administration or its servants and the liability to pay compensation is admitted, the plea cannot be allowed to be raised in appeal for the first time as it involves a total denial of liability to pay compensation.

Determination of.

Per Ram Labhaya J:—In case of non-delivery of consignment, the Railway Administration is responsible only to the consignee. The subsequent or the ultimate transferee stands in the shoes of the consignee so far as the loss is concerned. The price that he pays cannot afford any criterion for assessing compensation, for it is the loss to the consignee which the Administration has to make good. [Para 49]

D. N. Medhi-for Appellant.

A. N. Bose, M. N. Roy and J. C. Sen.

-for Respondents.

Thadani C. J. — This is an appeal from the judgment and decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, A. V. D. dated 29th March 1946, by which he decreed the plaintiffs' suit for a sum of Rs. 20,073-7-0 with costs against defendant 1 and 2 and awarded interest at the rate of 6 p. c. p. a. from the date of the decree till realisation.

[2] The plaintiffs Messrs. Jesraj Tilakchand Labhchand, brought a suit for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 20,073-7-0 as compensation from defendants 1 and 2 for the loss sustained by them by reason of the non-delivery of certain goods carried by defendant 2 a State Railway, controlled by defendant 1.

Bros., of Calcutta, who were impleaded as defendant 3, consigned 54 casks of cocoanut oil, weighing some 270 maunds, at the Budge Budge Railway Station to be delivered at the Amingaon Railway Station of the B. & A. Railway. The consignment was to be delivered to Messrs. Bhurmal Schanlal of Fancy Bazar, Gauhati, Assam, who were impleaded as defendant 4. Defendant 4 assigned the railway receipt covering the goods in suit, for consideration, to Messrs. Meghraj Begwani of Fancy Bazar, Gauhati, impleaded as defendant 5. Defendant 5, in turn, assigned the Railway Receipt, for consideration, in the sum of Rs. 19,027-7-0 to the plaintiff Firm on 26th June 1944. The consign. ment in question did not reach its destination; and the plaintiff Firm wrote a letter to the Chief Commercial Manager of the B. & A. Rail. way on 14th August 1944 drawing his attention to the non-delivery of the consignment, requesting him to make an enquiry into the matter. The Chief Commercial Manager of the B. & A. Railway apparently forwarded a copy of this letter to the Station Master, B. & A. Railway, Santahar, enquiring from him whether the consignment had been received at that station and whether it had been despatched to its destination. A copy of this letter was also sent to the D. I., B. & A. Railway, Lalmonirhat, asking him to trace the consignment and let him know where it was. The plaintiff waited for 3 weeks and as he received no reply from the Chief Commercial Manager, B. & A. Railway, he sent him a reminder. On 4th October 1944, a reply was received from the Chief Commercial Manager stating that the matter was under inquiry. On 12th october 1944, the plaintiff sent a pleader's notice to the Secretary to the Govt. of India in the Department of Railway, New Delhi, and to the General Manager, B. & A. Railway, Calcutta, under S. 77, Railways Act, and under S. so, Civil P. C., and in due course brought the present suit on 2nd January 1945.

[4] A joint written statement was filed by defendants 1 and 2, in which they contended that the plaintiffs had no cause of action, and denied the averments made in para 1 of the plaint, and disputed the plaintiffs' title to the consignment. They also contended that as the plaintiff firm was not registered under the Indian Partnership Act, the suit was liable to be dismissed, and disputed the validity of the notice served upon them under S. 77, Railways Act, and S. 80, Civil P. C.; in any case, they contended that the claim was highly exaggerated, and put the plaintiffs to proof.

[5] On the pleadings the trial Court framed

the following issues:

1. Whether legally valid notices under S. 77, I. R. A. and under S. 80, Civil P. C., were served on the principal defendants?

2. Whether the plaintiff Firm acquired any right to the consignment in question by the alleged sale thereof to them by the consignee, and whether the alleged transfer or ownership of the consignment is binding on the contesting defendants? If not, whether the plaintiff can maintain this suit?

3. Whether the plaintiff's claim is excessive, as alleged in W. S.?

4. To what relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?

(1) the liability of the Railway for the nondelivery of the consignment, (2) the amount if any properly payable as compensation to the plaintiffs, (3) interest.

[7] We think the learned Judge has omitted to frame the most important issue bearing upon the responsibility of a Railway Administration for the loss of the consignment delivered to the Administration. The responsibility of a Railway Administration, subject to the other provision: of the Indian Bailways Act, is that of a bailee under 89. 151, 152 and 161, Contract Act, 1872, but it is open to the Railway Administration to limit its responsibility in the manner stated in S. 72 (1), Railways Act by an agreement in writing signed by or on behalf of the person sending or delivering to the Railway Administration the animals or goods, and otherwise in a form approved by the Federal Railway Authority. The failure, however, of the learned Judge to frame an issue in this behalf, does not affect the decision of the case, for the reasons which we will now proceed to give.

[8] In para 3 of the plaint, the plaintiff firm had clearly stated that the consignment in question was carried by the Railway Adminigtration under Risk Notes A and B, thereby admitting that the Railway Administration had limited its responsibility in terms of the two Risk Notes. Risk Note B which alone is applicable to the facts before us is in these terms:

"In consideration of such lower charge, the consignor agrees and undertakes to hold the Railway Administration harmless and free from all responsibility for any loss, destruction or deterioration of or damage to, the consignment from any cause whatsoever, except upon proof that such los, destruction, deterioration or damage arose from the misconduct on the part of the Railway Administration or its servants, provided that in the following cases:

(a) non-delivery of the whole of the said consignment or of the whole of one or more packages forming part of the said consignment packed in accordance with the instructions laid down in the tariff or, where there are no such instructions, protected otherwise than by paper or other packing readily removable by hand and fully addressed, where such non-delivery is not due to accidents to trains or to fire;

(b) pilferage from a package or packages forming part of the said consignment properly packed as in (a) when such pilferage is pointed out to the servants of the Railway Administration on or before delivery;

the Railway administration shall be bound to disclose to the consignor how the consignment was dealt with throughout the time it was in its possession or control and, if necessary, to give evidence thereof before the consignor is called upon to prove misconduct, but, if misconduct on the part of the Railway Administration or its servants cannot be fairly inferred from such swidence, the burden of proving such misconduct shall lie upon the consignor."

[9] Mr. Medhi for the appellant, the Gov. ernor. General of India in Council, has contended that, in view of the failure of the plaintiff firm to plead that the loss of the consignment arose from misconduct on the part of the Railway Administration or its servants, there was no obligation in terms of the proviso contained in the Risk Note B. It may be conceded that it would have been better if the plaintiffs had alleged misconduct on the part of the Railway Administration or its servants in the matter of the loss of the consignment, but we do not think, having regard to the facts of this case, the omission to make this particular averment in the plaint affects the decision arrived at by the trial Court. The decision of the case turns upon the correct interpretation of the observations made by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case reported in Surat Cotton Spinning and Weaving Mills Ltd. v. Secy of State, 41 O. W.N. 837 : (A. I. B. (24) 1937 P. O. 152). The head-note to the decision is in these terms:

"In a dispute arising in a case coming under the proviso to Risk Note B, the procedure is the follow-

On the cocurrence of either of the cases (a) or (b) the obligation on the part of the Railway to disclose the nature of their dealings with the consignment, while under their control, arises immediately, and is not postponed to the stage of litigs ion. If the consignor is not satisfied, recourse to a Court of law is contemplated, and the Railway should sabmit their evidence first at the trial. If the consignor be not even then satisfied with the disclosure made, he should say so and the Court will decide whether the consignor's demands go beyond the obligation of the Railway. The Railway should then have an opportunity of meeting the demands of the consignor, so far as endorsed by the Court, before their ouse is closed; but if they fail to take this opportunity, they will be in breach of their contractual obligation of disclosure.

The question that next arises is whether misconduct may fairly be inferred from the evidence of the Railway; if so, the consignor is absolved from his original burden of proof. But in this case, the decision of the Court may be given after both sides have closed their evidence.

It is for the Railway to decide whether they have adduced all the evidence they consider desirable in avoidance of a fair inference of misconduct. If they withhold any material evidence, they may either be in breach of the contractual obligation of disclosure, or on the next question of a fair inference, may expose themselves to the presumption under S. 114 (g), Evidence Act. If the obligation of disclosure has been discharged and the evidence given by the Railway does not lead to a fair inference of misconduct, the proviso will cease to operate and the consignor will be relegated to his original burden of proof of misconduct."

[10] It is to be remarked that the procedure laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council makes no reference to pleadings, and we think, for the plain reason that the procedure stated by them is independent of the pleadings. The procedure as laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council is to be followed because of the particular obligation imposed by the proviso contained in the Risk Note B, and has nothing to do with the question of pleadings. In this view, we are unable to accept the contention of Mr. Medhi that before any question!

relating to the discharge of any obligation arose, the plaintiffs were bound to state that the loss of the consignment was due to the misconduct of the Railway Administration or its servants.

[11] Some 5 months before this litigation commenced, the plaintiffs called upon the Rail. way Administration to make an enquiry into the matter of the loss of the consignment, and sent a reminder to the Railway Administration 3 weeks later on 9th September 1944. It is true that in the 2 letters, there is no specific request made by the plaintiffs for a disclosure by the Railway Administration as to the manner in which it had dealt with the consignment in transit, but it is plain from the endorsement of the Chief Commercial Manager forwarding a copy of the letter to the Station Master B. & A. Railway, Santabar, and D. I., B. & A. Railway, Lalmonirbat, that he understood the implication of the request made by the plaintiffs in the matter of the enquiry into the non-delivery of the consignment and we think it was the duty of the B. & A. Railway Administration then before the litigation commenced to furnish to the plaintiffs particulars of the manner in which the consignment was dealt with in transit. Even after a pleader's notice was served upon the Railway Administration, the Deputy Direc. tor, Railway Board, merely replied that the pleader's notice, dated 12th October 1944, had been forwarded for disposal to the General Manager, B. & A. Railway, Calcutta. No communication, however, was received by the plaintiffs from the General Manager, B & A. Railway. It is clear then that before the litigation commenced, the Railway Administration had failed to discharge its obligation under the proviso contained in Risk Note B, and when the dispute came to the stage of litigation, the Railway Administration again did not lead any evidence in discharge of its obligation under the proviso contained in Risk Note B.

[12] Mr. Medbi for the appellants contends that when the plaintiffs found that the Railway Administration had not led any evidence in the matter of discharging its obligation under the proviso to Risk Note B, it was their duty to call upon the Railway Administration to give such evidence. We do not think there was any obligation on the plaintiffs to call upon the Railway Administration to give evidence at the trial in this behalf, the obligation of the Railway Administration was unconditional. The question then arises - what is the effect of the failure of the Railway Administration to lead evidence in the matter of discharging its obligation under the proviso contained in Risk Note B? The answer has been given by their Lordships of the Privy Council, in these words:

"It is for the Railway to decide whether they have adduced all the evidence they consider desirable in avoidance of a fair inference of misconduct. If they withhold any material evidence, they may either be in breach of the contractual obligation of disclosure or on the next question of a fair inference, may expose themselves to the presumption under S 114 (g) Evidence Act."

[13] These observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council apply with greater force in a case where the Railway Administration has elected not to lead evidence at all in the matter of discharging its obligation. We think, in this case, there is the clearest justification for raising a presumption against the Railway Adminis. tration under S. 114 (g), Evidence Act, for we cannot believe that, when the Chief Commercial Manager of the B. and A. Railway, forwarded a copy to the Station Master, B. & A. Railway, Santahar, and the D. I., B. & A. Railway, Lal. monirhat, asking them to let him know what had happened to the consignment, the Station Master and the D. I, failed to make any report at all. Is is reasonable to suppose that they did make a report, but that it has been withheld. The terms of cl. (g) of S. 114, Evidence Act, are there clearly attracted, the presumption being that if the Railway Administration had produced the reports and led evidence as to the manner in which the consignment was dealt with in transit, the reports and the evidence would have gone against the Railway Administration, and given rise to an inference of misconduct on the part of the Administration or its servents. It is not inconceivable that the Station Master and the D. I. reported that the consignment was lost owing to theft committed by the servants of the Railway, in which case, it is plain that the Railway Administration could not claim freedom from responsibility for the loss of the consignment, whether upon the basis of its responsibility as a bailee or its responsibility as limited by the terms of Rick Note B.

[14] Mr. Bose who argued the respondents' case with considerable ability, has quite properly invited us to hold that in any view of the case, bearing in mind the provisions of S. 72, Railways Act, the respondents were entitled to a decree. Taking first the responsibility of the Railway Administration as a bailee, Mr. Bose argued that even as a bailee it had to give evidence to satisfy the Court that it had discharged its obligation under the Contract Act, and that the only way in which it could have discharged its obligation as a bailee was by giving evidence as to the manner in which the consignment was dealt with in transit, quite agart from its obligation under the proviso contained in the Risk Note B, having regard to the provisions of 8. 106 Evidence Act. In support of his contention. Mr. Bose referred us to a decision of the Chief! Court of Sind reported in National Swadeshi Stores v. Governor. General in Council, A. I. R. (35) 1948 Sind 26: (I.L.R. (1947) Kar. 144). We think the contention is well-founded.

[15] Viewed in either light—whether in the light of the observations made by their Lordships of the Privy Council with reference to the proviso contained in the Risk Note B, or in the light of the provisions of S. 72. Railways Act, laying down that the responsibility of the Railway Administration is that of a bailee—the result is the same, where the Railway Administration elects not to give any evidence at all in the course of the litigation.

[16] Ray J. in a case reported in Governor-General in Council v. Visheshwar Lal, A. I. B. (34) 1947 Pat. 84: (280 I. O. 288), had occasion to deal with the dual aspect of the responsibility of the Railway Administration as a bailee and as limited by the execution of Risk Notes A and B. In Para. 7 of the recort, he observed:

Various problems that arise out of cases of loss or non-delivery where the cases are covered by Risk Notes A and B. The result of those Judicial decisions makes, however, one thing certain beyond any possibility of doubt that where the Railway Administration fails to make a full disclosure of how the consignment was dealt with during the time it was in its possession or control, the consignor is entitled to an inference in his favour and adverse to the Administration that if the materials withheld would have been produced, they would have supported the case of misconduct. This principle is based upon S. 114 (g), Evidence Act."

With respect, we agree with this principle which applies in all its implications to the facts of the case before us.

[17] In a case reported in Governor. General in Council v. Ranglal Nandlal, A. I. R. (35) 1948 Pat. 237, a case covered by Rick Note E. Agarwalla Ag. C. J. and Meredith J. observed:

"Here too the defendant (Railway Administration), in order to avoid an inference adverse to him, for non-examination of the Watch and Ward staff at Karambasa, and for the non-production of the reports, should have examined the men who were on duty. The mere fact that the plaintiff did not call upon the defendant to produce this evidence, was no reason why the Court below should not have drawn an adverse inference against the defendant on the ground of the non-production of this evidence."

We think these observations apply equally to a case where the responsibility of the Railway Administration is that of a bailee, or where it is limited by the execution of Risk Note B.

[18] Mr. Bose next referred us to two cases reported in Manchester Sheffield and Lincoln. shire Rly. Co. v. H. W. Brown, (1883) 8 A. C. 708: (53 L. J. Q. B. 124) and Duckham Brothers v. G. W. Rly. Co., (1899) 80 L. T. 774: (15 T. L. R. 828) but we do not think it is necessary to consider them in the view we have taken of the responsibility of the Railway Ad. ministration in the matter of discharging its obligation as a bailee and its obligation under the proviso to Risk Note B.

[19] Mr. Medhi for the appellant, on the otherhand, has relied on Ganesh Das Bisheshwar Lal v. E. I. Rly. Co., 6 Pat. 189: (A. I. R. (14) 1927 Pat. 193), in which it is stated that the Reilway Administration must first admit loss in. its pleadings and the onus will then be on the plaintiff to prove that the loss was due to wilful. neglect of the Company or its servants. Mr. Medhi has argued that as the Railway Adminis. tration did not admit the loss in its pleadings; it could be held responsible only upon proof of misconduct of the Railway Administration orits servants, and as no such proof was given by the plaintiff, the Railway Administration was free from all responsibility in the matter of the loss of the consignment. We do not think Ganesh Das Bisheshwar Lal v. E. I. Rly. Co., 6 Pat. 189 : (A. I. R. (14) 1927 Pat. 193) goesas far as that, but if it does, it goes o unter to the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council, to which we have referred. Two other cases reported in Ralliaram Dingra v. Governor-General in Council, A. I. R. (33) 1946 Cal. 219: (I. L R. (1944) 2 Cal. 487) and Governor. General in Council v. Kishengopal Bhartia, A. I. R. (85) 1948 Cal. 800, upon which Mr. Medhi relied, have no application to the facts before us.

Administration, in electing not to give any evidence at all, failed to discharge its obligation not only as a bailee but also its obligation under the proviso to Risk Note B, and its failure in this behalf makes it responsible for the loss of the consignment, by reason of the presumption as to misconduct which can fairly be drawn under the provisions of S. 114 (g). Evidence Act.

[21] It was next argued by Mr. Medbi that assuming that the Railway Administration was responsible for the loss, the amount claimed by the plaintiff is in excess of the amount to which. they are entitled. Mr. Medhi's argument is that the plaintiffs cannot claim the price paid by them, namely a sum of Rs. 19,000 odd, in view of the fact that the price of coccanut oil was con-. trolled under the provisions of the Prevention of Hoarding and Profiteering Ordinance No. XXXV. [85] of 1943. Whether, however, the price of coccanut oil was controlled in Assam, was aquestion of fact, and the Bailway Administrations should have pleaded it in its written statement. In spite of the fact that this defence was not: specifically taken in the written statement thelearned trial Judge thought fit to deal with it in: his judgment. It appears that 2 witnesses-one-Mr. Baker and another Mr. Osman-were examined by the Railway Alministration on the puestion of the price of cocoanut oil having been controlled. But Mr. Baker was unable to say that eocoanut oil was controlled in Assam. Mr. Osman was more definite on the print. He stated :

"So far as my information goes, there is no control on

Assuming now that S. 6 of the Orlinance can be invoked, there is no evidence on the record bearing on the question of the landed cost of eccount oil or the cost of its production. The only evidence we have before us is that the wholesale price of this oil in Calcutta and its suburbs was Rs. 42 a maund, and retail price Re. 1-1-0 per seer. Mr. Medbi's contention is that the plaintiff would be entitled at the most to a sum calculated by the addition of 20 per cent. to the wholesale price of Rs. 42 a maund prevailing in Calcutta and its suburbs. But admittedly Dum Dum is not a suburb of Calcutta. Moreover, S. 6 of the Ordinance does not refer only to landed cost, it also refers to cost of production. It is a common experience in India that cost of production in some cases exceeds the landed cost of the same article. It is impossible then to fix with any degree of certainty the price of cocoanut oil prevailing on the due date in this case by the addition of 30 per cent. to the wholesale price prevailing in Calcutta and its suburbs. In my opinion an addition of 33 per cent. to a sum of Rs. 8572 8.0 being the price of cocoanut oil calculated at the rate of Rs. 42 the control rate prevailing in Calcutta. (sic)

[22] On the question of interest also, we think the decision of the learned Judge cannot be sustained. Payment of interest is governed by the provisions of the Interest Act, and we can see nothing in the facts of this case which warrants the awarding of interest. To this extent, we propose to modify the decree of the trial Court by disallowing a sum of Rs. 1000 odd, claimed by the plaintiffs as interest.

[23] The result is that there will be a decree for the plaintiffs for Rs. 15,936 1-0 and costs thereon, and interest at 6 per cent. p. a. from the date of the decree till realisation. The plaintiffs have not claimed interest from the date of the suit till the date of the decree.

[24] Ram Labhaya J .- I have had the ad. vantage of reading the judgment of my Lord the Chief Justice. I entirely agree with him in the conclusions reached by him. I am adding a few words in view of the importance of the main question involved in the case. (His Lord. ship stated the facts and proceeded):

[25-27] The plaintiffs claimed to be a registered firm. In Para. 3 of the plaint, they, when alleging that the consignment was booked at Budge-Budge, admitted that the consignment was booked under Risk notes forms A and B. They further described the transactions as a result of which they became entitled to the consignment. In Para. 5 of the plaint they averred in clear terms that the consignment never reached its destination, was lost in tran. sit and defendants 1 and 2 (the Governor Gene. ral in Council and B. A. Railway) were liable to compensate them for the loss. In the heading of the plaint also, the claim was described as one for compensation for damage caused by non-delivery and loss of goods. The copy of the plaint sent with the notices to the defendants contained identical statements both in the heading and Para. 5. It is clear that the claim was for loss and non-delivery of the consignment and in spite of the admission that the consignment was booked under Risk Notes A and B, the plaint does not contain any allegation of misconduct on the part of the Administration or its servants.

[28] The written statement is a brief document couched in language which is clear and unambiguous. The pleas raised were as follows : 1. That plaintiffs had no cause of action against the defendants and they had no right to sue. The statements in Paras. 1 and 5 of the plaint regarding plaintiffs' title to the consignment in question were not admitted. Plaintiffs were put on proof of (1) that they were a registered firm and (2) that they had acquired a valid title to the consignment before suit. 2. That the suit was not maintainable in its present form. 3. That the suit was bad as notices sent were not sufficient and valid in law. 4. That the claim had been highly exaggerated. The plaintiffs were put to strict proof of the allegations made in this respect. The price at which it was alleged that the plaintiffs had purchased the consignment, was not admitted 5. Liability to pay interest was denied.

[29] The first three paras of the written state. ment embody the first three defences reproduced above. In para. 4, the defendants gave their answer to the claim for compensation. This para does not refer in express terms to Para. 5 of the plaint but from its contents it is clear that it embodied an answer to Para. 5 of the plaint. In Para. 5 compensation for loss and non-delivery of the consignment was claimed. The whole answer to the claim as put in Para. 5 of the plaint was that the claim had been highly exaggerated. Paragraph 4 of the written statement is as follows:

"That without prejudice to any of the foregoing pleas, the defendant submits that the claim has been highly exaggerated and unduly inflated and puts the plaintiffs to the strictest proof of the same. The defendant does not admit the price of the consignment given in the plaint and denies that the plaintiffs are entitled to interest at 12 per cent, from 26th April 1944 or any interest at all.

[30] It is important to note that the Administration was conscious that the plea that the claim was inflated, involved by necessary implication the admission of liability to compensate the true owner of the consignment. It was for this reason that it was stated expressly that the plea was not to prejudice defences raised in the foregoing paras of the written statement. The allegations of loss and non-delivery of the consignment were not denied. They shall be deemed to be admitted under O. 8, R. 5, Civil P. C. The liability to pay compensation was also admitted, if not expressly at least by necessary implication. The amount of compensation alone was disputed. In these circumstances, the learned Additional Sub Judge framed the following issues :

1. Whether legally valid notices under S. 77, Railways Act and under S. 80, Civil P. C. were served on the principal defendants?

2. Whether the plaintiff firm acquired any right to the consignment in question by the alleged sale thereof to them by the consignee and whether the alleged transfer of ownership of the consignment is binding on the contesting defendants? If not, whether the plaintiffs can maintain this suit?

3. Whether the plaintiffs claim is excessive as alleged in the written statement?

4. To what relief, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?

the locus standi of the plaintiffs, their right to sue as a firm, the validity of notices and the reasonable character of the amount claimed. No issue was framed as to whether the suit was maintainable in the form it was laid and the appellants are not making any grievance of it. It appears that this particular defence was abandoned at that very stage. All other points arising from the pleadings were put in issue. The defendants never claimed in the trial Court that they disputed their liability to compensate the original owner by reason of Risk Notes A and B, and at no stage asked for any issue or adjudication on that point.

[32] The trial Judge found all the issues in favour of the plaintiffs. He also allowed interest at 12 per cent. and granted them a decree for the sum claimed, viz., Rs. 20,073-7-0 with full costs. The amount decreed was to carry interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the decree till realisation.

[39] The appeal is on behalf of the Governor-General in Council. The first contention raised was that as the consignment was admittedly booked under risk notes A and B, the plaintiffs could not claim compensation without alleging and proving misconduct on the part of the Administration or its servants. This plea, whatever its nature, cannot be allowed to be raised at this stage for the first time. The plea involves a total denial of liability to pay compensation to the true owner of the consignment. It could be raised in the trial Court. Not only was there an omission to raise this plea, the liability to pay compensation was admitted though the extent of this liability in terms of money was in question. It has been shown above that without alleging misconduct of any kind, plaintiffs in Para. 5 of the plaint claimed compensation for the loss and non-delivery of the consignment. The defendants had the risk notes in their possession. They did not even remotely suggest that the agreement embodied in the risk notes restricted the liability of the Administration. The risk notes were not produced at any stage of the litigation. They are not on the record. There is no suggestion that the Administration and its legal advisers were not aware of their rights under the risk notes. In these circumstances and particularly in view of the language used in para. 4 of the written statement, the emission to dispute the liability to compensate the true owner of the consignment cannot even be attributed to inadvertance. It appears to be a conscious act and there ought to be some good reasons for the adoption of this course. The admission of liability necessarily implied in the written statement was subject to defences expressly raised in the first three paras of the written statement.

it would amount to permitting withdrawal of an important admission made in plaintiffs' favour. It will also involve allowing the defendant to put forward a case different from and diametrically opposed to the case they set up in the Court below. This, in my view, is not permissible. The defendants cannot be allowed to convert their admission into a denial of liability for the first time in appeal. They admitted a material fact in no mistake or misapprehension in their written statement. They cannot be allowed at a later stage to change their front and make out a new case by denying that fact.

(35) Ground No. 9 of the memo of appeal is to the effect that the learned Additional Sub-Judge ought to have held on a proper interpretation of the Riek Notes executed in the present case that 'plaintiffs were not entitled to compensation or at any rate as claimed.' It is urged that the allegation and proof of misconduct on the part of the Administration or its servants must be there, before any liability for compensation can be fastened on the Administration. Assuming for a moment that this is the correct interpretation of the risk notes, which are not on the record, and assuming that the proof of misconduct is a necessary pre-requisite to a decree for compensation for loss and non-delivery of con-

Bignment booked under Risk Notes A and B, can the defendants who admitted liability consciously and thus restricted the scope of controversy to the quantum of compensation, be permitted to resile from this position without any valid reason? The statement of the plaintiffs in para 3 of the plaint was that the consignment was booked under Risk Notes. What was conmeded was that the Risk Notes were executed. If, therefore, the Administration wanted to rely on the terms and the conditions of the Risk Notes it had to say so. The plea of denial of diability found on the risk notes should have been raised. Risk notes should have been produced. Instead of doing all these, the existence of liability as distinguished from its extent was conceded. Even if, therefore, the interpretation which Mr. Medhi, advocate for the appellants, seeks to put on the risk notes is accepted as correct for purposes of argument, the rlea in my humble opinion cannot be permitted to be raised at this stage in the circumstances of this case. It was not pressed at any stage of the litigation in the trial Court The gadgment of the trial Court assumes the existence of liability on the part of the Administrasion to compensate the true owner, without any objection from the defendants. It has dealt with the disputed question of the quantum of Mability after disposing of the questions covered by the first two issues.

[36] In this view of the matter, it is not necessary to consider whether in view of the fact that Bick Notes A and B were duly executed, the failure on the part of the plaintiffs to plead misconduct in the plaint was fatal to the suit. But as the question was discussed at great length and the learned Chief Justice has based his judgment on the interpretation of Risk Note B, I propose to deal with the question briefly.

[37] At the outset, it may be stated that in This case, the loss of consignment and its nondelivery are admitted. Risk Note A has no application to the case and Mr. Medbi has not relied on it. The rights and obligations of the parties have to be determined in relation to Risk Note B alone. Under S. 72 (1), Act, the responsibility of a Railway Administration for the loss, destruction or deterioration of animals or goods delivered to the Administration to be carried by railway is subject to the other provisions of the Act, that of a bailes under 88. 161, 162, 161. Contract Act 1872. Under oil. (2) of S. 72, a Railway Administration may limit its responsibility by an agreement in a form approved by the Central Government and signed by or on behalf of the person sending or delivering to the Railway Adminstration the animals or goods. Risk note B is in a form approved by the Government. It is utilised when in consideration of a lower charge the consignor is prepared to allow the Administration to restrict its ordinary responsibility of a bailee to the extent the use of this Risk notes makes pes. sible. When Risk note B is executed, a consigner agrees in consideration of the lower charge to hold the Administration harmless and free from all responsibility for any loss, destruction or damage to the consignment from any cause whatsover except on proof that such loss, destruction, deterioration or damage arose from the misconduct on the part of the railway Administration or its servants. The agreement is further qualified by a proviso which in certain cases mentioned below casts on the Administration a duty to disclose to the consignor as to how the consignment was dealt with throughout the time that it was in its possession or control and if necessary to give evidence thereof before the consignor is called upon to prove misconduct. It is only when misconduct on the part of the Railway Alministration or its servants cannot be properly inferred from the evidence given by the Administration that the burden of proving this misconduct lies on the consignor. The cases in which the duty of disclosure and proof, if necessary, as to how the consignment was dealt with whilst in the control of the Administration is cast on the Administra. tion are:

- (a) Non-delivery of the whole of the said consignment or of the whole of one or more packages forming part of the said consignment packed in accordance with the instructions laid down in the tariff or, where there are no such instructions, protected otherwise than by paper or other paking readily removable by hand and fully addressed, where such non-delivery is not due to accidents to trains or to fire;
- (b) Pilferage from a package or packages forming part of the said consignment properly packed as in (a) when such pilferage is pointed out to the servants of the Railway Administration on or before delivery.
- [38] In this case the entire consignment was lost. It consisted of 54 casks. There is no sugges. tion that the consignment was not properly addressed; nor was there any allegation of accident to the train or fire. The case was admittedly covered by cl. (a) of the proviso. The Administration was, therefore, bound to disclose and if necessary to prove to the consignor how the consignment was dealt with throughout the time it was in its possession or control before the consignor could be called upon to prove misconduct. When an entire consignment or package is lost during transit even though properly addressed, the circumstances attending the loss would be within the knowledge of the Administration. It is only when all facts bearing on the manner in which the consignment was dealt with are disclosed that it will be possible for the consignor to say that an inference of miscon. duct can be drawn or to allege and prove misconduct on the part of the Administration. Any allegation of misconduct on the part of the corsignor without knowing the circumstances as would happen when he is not taken into confidence as to the way in which the consignment was dealt with by the Administration before loss, would be a reckless conjecture bordering on falsehood. The rick note, therefore, provides that in cases falling under cls. (a) and (b) of the proviso, the burden of proving misconduct should lie on the consignor after the Administration has discolsed and given evidence, if necessary, of the maner in which the consignment was dealt with so long as it remained in its possession or control and if misconduct on the part of the Administration or its servants could not be fairly inferred from such evidence. [33] The Administration has admittedly not discharged its obligations of disclosure either before suit or during its pendency. On 14th August, plaintiff informed the Chief Commercial Manager that the consignment has not reached its destination. They requested him to make an enquiry into the matter and also requested other officers of the Administration for information about its whereabouts. They got no reply. A reminder had to be sent. In answer to it, a reply was received intimating that the matter was being enquired into. They waited for some time more. No further information was at all received as to what had bappened to the consignment. They sent notices under S. 77 . Railways Act and under S. 80, Civil P. C, alleging both loss and non-delivery. Their allegations were allowed to go unchallenged during the period of notice. In the plaint both loss and non-delivery were specifically pleaded. They were not denied either expressly or by necessary implication near or remote. The loss was for all purposes admitted before suit and even in the written statement. If, in spite of loss and non delivery, the Administration wanted to take advantage of their restricted responsibility under the risk notes, it had to show either that the case v not covered by cls. (a) and (b) of the proviso or to disclose and, if necessary, to prove how it dealt with the consignment before it was lost. When no information of any kind was vouchsafed to the plaintiffs about the handling of the consignment by the Administration, they were not in a position to allege misconduct and it seems to me that in the circumstances of this case it was not necessary in law for them to do so for obvious ressons. The contention that a plaintiff, where consignment has been booked under Risk Note B, cannot under any conceivable circumstances succeed without expressly alleging misconduct does not seem to be justified by the language of Risk Note B, and Mr. Medhi has not been able to cite any authority in support of so sweeping a proposition. An authoritative interpretation of the Risk note form B from their Lordships of the Privy Council is to be found in Surat Cotton Spinning and Weaving Mills Ltd v. Secy. of State, 41 C.W.N 837: (A.I R. (24) 1937 P.C. 152). This decision was followed in Governor-General in Council v. Visheshwar Lal, A. I. R. (34) 1947 Pat. 84: (230 I. C. 283). Lord Thankerton in delivering the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council observed as follows:

"The first portion of the proviso provides that the railway administration shall be bound to disclose to the consignor 'how the consignment was dealt with throughout the time it was in the porcession or control, and if necessary, to give evidence there if, before the consignor is called upon to prove misconduct.' In their Lordships' opinion, this obligation arises at once upon the occurrence of either of cases (a) or (b), and is not confined to the stage of litigation. Clearly one object of the provision is to obviate, if possible, the necessity for litigation. On the other hand the closing words of the obligation clearly apply to the litigious stage. As to the extent of the disclosure, it is confined to the period during which the consignment was within the possession or control of the railway administration; it does not relate, for instance, to the period after the goods have been theftuously removed from the premises. On the other hand, it does not envisage a precise statement of how the consignment was dealt with by the administration or its servants. The character of what is requisite may vary according to the circumstances of different cases, but if the consignor is not satisfied that the disclosure has been adequate, the dispute must be judicially decided. As to the accuracy or truth of the information given, if the consignor is doubtful or unsattefied, and considers that these should be established by evidence, their Lordships are of opinion that evidence before a Court of law is contemplated, and that, as was properly done in the present suit, the railway administration should submit their evidence first at the trial.

At the close of the evidence for the administration two questions may be said to arise, which it is important to ke p distinct. The first question is not a mere question of procedure, but is whether they have discharged their obligation of disclosure, and in regard to this, their Lordships are of opinion that the terms of the risk note require a step in procedure, which may be said to be unfamiliar in the practice of the Court; if the consignor is not satisfied with the disclosure made, their Lordships are clearly of opinion that it is for him to say so, and to call on the administration to fulfil their . bligation under the contract and that the administration should then have the opportunity to meet the demands of the consignor before their case is closed; any question as to whether the consignor's demands go beyond the obligation should be then determined by the Court. If the administration fails to make the opportunity to satisfy the demands of the consignor so far as endorsed by the Court, they will be in breach of their contractual obligation of disclosure.

The other question which may be said to arise at this stage is whether misconduct may be fairly inferred from the evidence of the Administration; if so, the son-signor is absolved from his original burden of proof. But, in this case, the decision of the Court may be given when the evidence of both sides has been completed. It is clearly for the Administration to decide for themselves whether they have adduced all the evidence which they consider desirable in avoidance of such fair inference of misconduct. They will doubtless keep in mind the provisions of S. 11, Evidence Act."

[40] According to this decision as soon as a case falls under cls (a) and (b) of the proviso, the obligation on the part of the Administration to disclose the nature of their dealings with the consignment arises. It is not postponed to the stage of the litigation. The necessary disclosure ought to be made before a claimant decides to go to law. The Administration was requested to make enquiries about the consignment as it did not reach the destination when expected. Information as to its whereabouts was asked for. Ultimately its loss was alleged in the notices sent to the Administration. Toe Administration had ample opportunities of discharging its initial obligation under the risk note. The language of the risk note as interpreted by their Lord. ships of the Privy Council does not require the owner of the consignment to make an express demand for disclosures at this stage. If the consignment is lost in circumstances which bring it under cl. (a) or (b), the Administration has to make the disclosure. In this particular case it cannot be said that no demand was made (by) plaintiffs when asking for enquiry as to what had happened to be communicated to them. If any demand was necessary, it was made in effect though not formally. The Administration had ample opportunity to discharge their obligation under the risk note. It preferred not to do so. Plaintiffs when instituting their suit had no knowledge how the consignment had been dealt with. They could not allege miscondust.

[41] After the institution of the suit, the A1. ministration had another opportunity. It could make the necessary disclosure and put the plain. tiffs on proof of misconduct. According to the view of their Lordships if the disclosure is made be. fore suit but it does not satisfy the claimant, the Administration has first to submit its evidence. In this case no disclosure at all had been made before suit. The initial obligation, therefore, continued. The Administration could discharge it if it so desired. The need, of course, for it would have been felt only if the Administration had believed that its dealings with the consignment did not disclose any misconduct on its part or on the part of its servants. After proving the nature of the dealings it could require the plaintiff to prove misconduct if it could not be infer. red from their own disclosures. It may not make any displosure at all and may not put the plaintiff to proof of misconduct by accepting liability for the loss. This is what the Administration has done in this case. If without making any disclosure, the Administration had contested its liability to compensate the true owner, it would obviously have been in breach of its con. tractual obligation and thus could not relegate the plaintiffs to the position in which they could have been called upon to prove misconduct. The plaintiffs were not in a position to plead misson. duct at any stage of the case. It was not possible for them to do so in point of fact. The legal obligation to prove misconduct also did not arise in the absence of disclosures or proof as to manner in which the consignment had been dealt with. This would be the situation according to the rule enunciated by their Lo:dships of the Privy Council. My conclusion, therefore, is that it was not necessary for the plaintiffs in this case to allege and prove misconduct. Apart from admitting liability the Administration has been clearly in breach of the contractual obligation and cannot claim in enforcement of the contract that the plaintiffs should have alleged and proved misconduct. No issue in these circumstances covering the question of misconduct really arose the сазе.

[42] If, however, proof of misconduct is regarded as a condition precedent to a valid claim for compensation, the Administration has by its conduct exposed itself to a presumption that the loss of the consignment was due to the misconduct of the Administration or its servants.

S. 114 (g), Evidence Act.

[44] The plaintiffs by claiming compensation for loss of the consignment without pleading misconduct on the part of the Administration or its servants can at the most be regarded as having treated the Administration as a bailee notwithstanding that Risk note B had been executed. In the absence of any information from the Administration as to how the consignment was dealt with, they did not concede to the Administration the benefit it could claim after discharging its contractual obligation. They were driven to this course and they could legitimately adopt it notwithstand. ing the admission that the Risk note had been executed. The breach of the contractual obligation under Risk note B disentitles the Administration to claim any benefit under the Risk note. Their responsibility in the case of such a breach would be that of a bailee under S. 72 (a), Railways Act. The Administration could resist the claim by merely showing that they had taken such care of the consignment as a man of ordinary prudence would have done under similar circumstances as required by S. 151, Contract Act. The initial onus of proving that the Administration had, as a bailee, discharged its legal obligation by taking such care as the law required was also on the Administration. In the words of Lord Halsbury:

"Where a ballment is made to a particular person, a ballment for hire and reward, the ballee is bound to show that he took reasonable and proper care for the due security and proper delivery of that bailment; the proof of that rests upon him," vide Morison, Pollexfon & Blair v. Walton, (Unreported, 10th May 1909) cited by Buckley, L. J., in Travers & Sons, Ltd., v. Cooper, (1915) 1 K. B. 73 at p. 89: (83 L. J. K. B. 1787).

(45) No effort has been made to discharge this onus either and it was evidently for the reason that the Administration never wanted to dispute their liability to compensate the rightful owner of the consignment. The Administration, in these circumstances, cannot on any conceivable basis evade responsibility to pay compensation for the loss and non-delivery of the consignment to the rightful claimant.

[46] The authorities relied on by Mr. Medhi are distinguishable and are not of any assistance to us in the decision of the case. In the first two cases, Hiralal Gourishankar, Firm v. Governor-General in Council, A. I. R. (36) 1949 Nag. 246: (I. L. R. (1949) Nag. 116) and Governor-General in Council v. Kishengopal, A. I. R. (85) 1948 Cal. 300, relied on by him, damages were claimed for short deliveries. The consignments were booked under Risk Notes A and B. In both the cases Risk Note A was applicable. Under Risk Note A, the responsibilities of the Administration are not the same as under Risk Note B. The decisions in these cases were based on the combined effect of both the Risk notes. In Ralliaram Dingra v. Governor-General in Council, A. I. B. (33) 1946 Cal. 249; (I. L. B. (1944) 2 Cal. 487), it was conceded in the circumstances of the case that the burden of proving misconduct was on the plaintiff. In Badridas Firm of Purulia v. Governor. General in Council, A. I. R. (34) 1947 Pat. 118: (225 I. C. 502), the claim for damage was also on account of short delivery. The defendant pleaded that there was no misconduct on the part of the Railway or its gervants. The counsel for the petitioners when arguing that all material facts relating to the details of the carriage of the goods from stage to stage had not been disclosed conceded that plaintiff had not called upon the Administration to furnish all the information. As plaintiff had not done so in the trial Court, they were not allowed to make a grievance of it in revision. The observation made in Ganesh Das Bisheshwar Lal v. Governor General in Council, 6 Pat. 189: (A. I. R. (14) 1927 Pat. 193) to the effect that the Administration must admit loss in its pleadings also do not help the appellant. The loss was alleged in the plaint and not denied in the written statement. This must be taken as admitted.

[47] The second contention relates to the amount of compensation which has been decreed. Mr. Medhi contends that the amount decreed is excessive. His contention is based on the provisions of the Hoarding and Profiteering Prevention Ordinance, 1943 (Ordinance No. XXXV (35) of 1943) as amended.

[48] The consignee firm Messrs. Bhuramall Schanlall were entitled to be reimbursed for loss caused to them by non-delivery. In para 10 of the plaint it was averred that the consignment was expected to be delivered on 17th July 1914. This allegation was not denied by contesting defendants. The loss to the consignees and also to the plaintiffs, their ultimate representatives, would, it is contended by the learned counsel for the defendant appellant, be represented by the price at which the consignment could be sold in open market in the middle of July. Plaintiffs have proved that the consignee firm (defendant 4) sold their rights in the consign. ment to Messrs. Meghraj Big vani (defendant 5). They, in their turn, sold the consignment to the plaintiffs Jitmall Oswal (P. W. 3), a gemasta of Messrs, Meghraj Begwani (defendant 5) was examined on plaintiffs' behalf. He deposed that the railway receipt, Ex. 8, was purchased by his firm for Rs. 17,548 12-3 and was sold to the plaintiffs for Rs. 19,027. According to him, the two transactions, viz., purchase by his firm and the sale to the plaintiffs took place on 26th June 1944. They were entered in the books of his firm on the same day. His statement was that as scon as his firm got the railway receipt they sold it to the plaintiffs. He also stated that the agreement for the purchase of the railway receipt from the consignees (defendant 4) had been made about 15 to 20 days before the actual purchase. This alleged agreement, however, is admittedly oral and there was no entry with respect to it in the books of account of the defendant firm. The actual sale to defendant 5 came on 26th June 1944. The consignment was booked on 17th June 1944. Jitmall's statement that there was an oral agreement to purchase the railway receipt some 15 to 20 days before the actual transaction is not credible. The consignment had not even been booked from Budge-Budge at that time. The books of account show that the two transactions took place on the same day. The price said to have been paid by Messre. Meghraj Begwani was Rs. 17,548-12-8 and the plaintiffs are alleged to have paid the sum of Rs. 19,027-7-0. P. W. 4 has deposed that on 29th Asar (14th July) his firm purchased 2 mnds, 19 srs. of oil (net) at the rate of Rs. 80 per maund. This is the only evidence about the alleged market price of occount oil at Gauhati in the middle of July.

[49] No representative of the consignors or the consignees was examined by the plaintiffs and there is no evidence on the record to show at what price the consignment was sold to Messrs. Bhuramall Sohanlall (defendant 4). Contesting defendants at a somewhat late stage of the case in the trial Court asked for leave to examine the consignors by interrogatories. This application was resisted by the plaintiffs and the permission to examine the consignors was refused. Assuming, however, that the consignment was sold by the consignees to Mesers. Meghraj Begwani for Rs. 17,500, it is not unfair to presume in the circumstances of this case that the consignees themselves got it at a lower price. They must have sold it at some profit. The fact, however, remains that the consignee parted with their rights in the consignment on 26th June 1944 for a sum of B: 17,500 if the statement of P. W. S is relied on. The consignees (tefen ant 4). according to the contention of the learned counsel for the appellant, could claim this sum or even a higher figure by showing that the market price in the middle of July was higher and the sum claimed was not in excess of the controlled price of cocoanut oil. Plaintiffs have olaimed that they paid Rs. 19,027-7-0 for the consignment and they have claimed this sum on this basis. It seems to me that they cannot claim this sum even if it is assumed that the sum of Bs. 19,027.7.0 was actually paid by them as held by the learned Additional Subordinate Judge. The consignees (defendant 4) sold their rights in the consignment to Messra. Meghraj Begwani (defendant 5). They sold it in their turn to plaintiffs. The measure of compensation ought to be the loss to the consignees even if the transactions of 26th June are to form the basis for the determination of the amount of compensation. The consignees on plaintiffs' own showing would not have lost more than Rs. 17,500 if the consign. men; had not been received. The subsequent sale of the consignment to the plaintiffs cannot be the basis for determining the amount of compensation without any reference to the market price in the middle of July. If that could have been made the basis, the amount of compensation could be increased to any extent by a series of transactions. The Administration is responsible only to the consignees. The subsequent or the ultimate transferee stands in the shoes of the consignee so far as the loss is concerned. The price that he pays cannot afford any criterion for assessing compensation, for it is the loss to the consignee which the Administration has to make good. Besides, the sum of Rs. 19,027-7-0 could not be regarded as the market price even on 26th June as the seller of the plaintiffs had purchased it that very day at Bs. 17,500. The plaintiffs cannot, therefore, claim Rs. 19,027.7.0 on any conceivable basis and the amount of compensation could not have been anything more than Rs. 17,500 on plaintiff's own showing. But Mr. Medbi contends that even if the consignee actually sold the consignment for Bs. 17,500, the plaintiffs cannot claim the amount unless they show that the price charged by the consignees was not in excess of that permitted by the provisions contained in the Hoarding and Profiteering Prevention Ordinance, 1943. He points out that the Ordinance was applicable to the whole of British India including Assam. Under S. 6 of the Ordinance, no dealer could charge more than 20 per cent. on the landed cost in the case of import. ed articles and on the producer's sale price in the case of indigenous articles. This Ordinance, he claims, was in force in 1944. He points out that the finding arrived at by the learned Additional Sub Judge that cocoaunt oil was not a controlled commodity in Assam is unsustainable in view of the provisions of S. 6 of the Ordinance.

[50] The learned advocate for plaintiffs-respondents had no answer to this contention. The Ordinance was admittedly in force in 1944. It also applied to the province of Assam. Under s. 3 of the Ordinance, the Central Government by Notification in the official Gazette had the power to fix maximum price or rate in respect of any article which may be charged by a dealer or a producer. There is no evidence on the record to show that any price of cocoanut oil was fixed by any competent authority for the province of Assam. In these circumstances, S. 6 of the Ordinance became operative. It provides that:

"Where no maximum has been fixed by Notification under cl. (c) of sub-s. (1) of S. 3, no dealer or producer shall sell or offer for sale or otherwise dispose of an article for a consideration which is unreasonable."

The word 'unreasonable' was defined in cl. (2) of S. 6. A consideration under the Ordinance was 'unreasonable' in the case of a sale by a dealer if it exceeded the amount represented by the addition allowed by the normal trade practice in force on 31st August 1939 to the cost landed as defined in S. 6 (2) (b) (1) of the Ordinance of the article imported or to the price at which the producer sold the article in the case of an article which is not imported, and in the case of a sale by a producer if the consideration exceeded the amount represented by the addition allowed by the normal trade practice in force on 31st august 1939 to the cost of production. Where, however, the addition allowed by the normal trade practice exceeded 20 per cent, the dealer or the producer, as the case may be, had to report the fact to the Controller General for his orders and the consideration was to be deemed 'unreasonable' unless it had the approval of the Controller General. The excess of 20 per cent, on the landed cost in the case of imported articles and on the producer's sale price in the case of articles not imported when the sale was by a dealer and similarly the excess of 20 per cent. on the cost of production in the case of the sale by a producer was the maximum limit of the reasonable consideration under the Ordinance till sanction for a higher profit was obtained from the Controller General. The fact that the price of coponut oil was not fixed under S. 3 of the Ordinance did not affect the operation of S. 6. The dealers at Gauhati therefore could not charge more than the maximum permissible under the Ordinance without special sanction from the Controller General. The plaintiffs had to prove the extent of the loss caused by nondelivery. They give no evidence as to whether the oil was imported or produced in the country; nor did they give any evidence as to the price that could be legitimately charged for it in conformity with the provisions contained in the Hearding & Profiteering Prevention Ordinance, 1943. They even resisted efforts on the part of the contesting defendants to bring evidence on the record which would have shown the price actually paid by the consignee defendant 4.

[51] From the statement of Mc. Baker, I. C. S., Deputy Director of Consumer Goods, Bengal, who was examined by the defendants it appears that the price of cocoanut oil had been fixed by a notification of the Government of Bengal dated 15th February 1913. The Notification applied to the town of Calcutta and its suburbs. The wholesale price of cocoanut oil was fixed at Bs. 42 per maund A copy of the Notification was placed on the record by Mr. Baker. This Notification makes on distinution between imported oil and oil produced in the country. The maximum price fixed by it covered both the varities within the specified limits. The current price of imported oil at Calcutta was even lower. This has been proved by the defendants by reliable evidence. Abdul Majid Osman Hakim, a representative of Messrs. Tata Oil Mills Co. Ltd., (Agents for the distribution of gocoanut oil imported at Bombay and Calcutta) deposed that the imported (Ceylon) cocoanut oil was being sold at the rate of Rs. 900 per ton including the cost of drums, ex jetty during the months of June and July 1944. The price of the imported oil was thus actually below Rs. 42 a maund. The oil produced in the country could not be sold at higher than Rs. 49 a maund at Calcutta and in its suburbs. Plaintiff's have made no attempt to prove the cost of production of cocoanut oil produced in the country. They prevented defendants from showing the actual cost of the consignees. It would be just to presume that the evidence about the price at which the consignment was purchased by the consignees (defendant 4) would not have been favourable for it, its cost of production at Calcutta if it was oil produced in the country could not have been higher than the selling price of Re. 42 a maund which applied to oil both imported and that produced in the country. It must have reasonable margin of profit for both.

[52] The consignment was booked Budge-Budge. A Calcutta firm were the consignors. Budge-Budge has not been shown to be included in the suburbs of Calcutta to which the Notification applied. It is at a distance of about 17 miles from the Sealdah Station of Calcutta. The maximum price of cocoanut oil at Budge Budge could not be substantially higher than Rs. 42 per maund. The learned counsel for the appellant defendant contends that in the absence of any evidence from the side of the plaintiffs showing the exact amount that could have been charged under the Ordinance at Guhati, a fair basis for assessing compensation would be afforded by the addition of 20 per cent profit a near equivalent to the maximum price of Rs. 42 a maund at which coconut oil could be sold at Calcutta and in its suburbs. This in any case, he represents, is the highest rate at which compensation may be assessed on the evidence produced by the defendants. We have found above that the highest sum that plaintiffs respondents can claim on their own showing is Rs. 17,500 for the entire consignment if the statement of P. W. 3 is relied on. The appellants have not disputed the amount claimed as the price of mixed Badama oil. The sum claimed under this head is Rs. 2,645-12 6p. A sum of Rs. 1,890 is claimed as the price of barrels. This also is not in dispute. The total of these undisputed items comes to Rs. 4 535-12 6 p. The balance of Rs. 12,964 3.6 would represent the price of occount oil if plaintiffs are awarded Rs. 17500 as compensation. The total quantity of cocoanut oil was 204 mnds. 4 srs. 5 chattaks. Its price at Re. 42 a maund would work out to about Rs. 8,572-8-0. If the sum of Re. 12,964-8-6 is allowed as the price of cocoanut oil, it would represent an addition of about 50 per cent. to the Calcutta price. We regard this addition as excessive. On the other hand, a strict calculation on the basis proposed by the learned counsel for the appellant also does not seem justified as the consign. ment was booked from Budge-Budge. Plaintiffsrespondents, in our opinion, would be adequately compensated and sufficient allowance will be made for any higher price than Rs. 42 a maund that the original consignees may have paid by their being allowed an addition of 33 per cent instead of 20 per cent to the maximum price for Calcutta and its suburbs. On this basis the price of cocoanut oil comes to Rs.
11,401. This added to the undisputed items of the claim brings the total to Rs. 15,936. This, in our view, is the highest figure that can be allowed to the plaintiffs by way of compensation on the evidence before us.

[53] I agree with my Lord the Chief Justice that plaintiffs are not entitled to charge interest for the period before suit The case is not covered by the provisions contained in the Interest Act and I do not think interest can be allowed on equitable grounds in the circumstances of this case. The result is that plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for the sum of R2. 15,936 with costs thereon in both the Courts. They shall have interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the decree till realisation.

Second proviso to S. 10 lays down that the want of or any defect or irregularity in a notice shall not be a bar to the entertainment of a claim if any person responsible to the employer for the management of any branch of the trade or business in which the injured workman was employed had knowledge of the accident from any other source at or about the time when it occurred. Where, therefore, an injured person working in a mill is removed to the hospital for treatment of injury caused while working in the mill and after the discharge of that person from the hospital the manager of the mill interviews him, it is reasonable to suppose that the management of the mill knew how the accident had occurred. In such a circumstance the absence of notice cannot be regarded as a bar to the entertainment of the claim. [Para 5]

J. C. Sen - for Appellant.
P. K. Gupta - for Respondent.

Thadani C. J.—This is an appeal under S. 30, Workmen's Compensation Act from an order passed by the Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation, Goalpars, dated 29th November 1949, by which he awarded a sum of Rs. 1,470 to the respondent, on Ramu Indu, a workman within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act in respect of injuries received by him, which resulted according to the Commissioner, in the loss of his left arm below the elbow and reduced his earning capacity by 50 per cent. in accordance with the schedule attached to the Act.

[2] The respondent was injured in the course of his employment on 22nd May 1949. As a result of serious injuries caused to his hand, he was forthwith removed to the Dhubri Civil Hospital where he was detained for over 2 months; he was discharged from the Hospital on 25th July 1949: 4 days later he appeared before the Deputy Commissioner, Goalpara, an ex-officio Commissioner under the Workmen's Compensation Act, and complained to him that while oiling the mill belonging to the Fakiragram Rice Mills, his left hand was fractured, resulting in his detention in hospital from 22nd May 1949 to 26th July 1949; his daily wages were Rs. 2-5-0 and he had worked continuously for 10 months.

[3] On receiving this complaint which the Commissioner treated as a claim, the Commissioner issued notice to the Mill to show cause why it should not be ordered to pay compensation. One Sri Maidhanda Agarwalla, a partner in the Mill, appeared before the Commissioner and denied liability and contended that as the workman had not filed a formal application he was not entitled to any compensation, that in any case he was a casual workman; his work lay outside the factory, and that he was forbidden to handle any part of the machinery; on 22nd May 1949, the respondent entered the factory building with his wife in order to demonstrate to his wife that he had become a full-fledged engineer; in the course of handling the engine, his hand was fractured.

[4] The learned Commissioner came to the conclusion from the evidence that the respondent and his wife both worked in the Mill and had quarters provided for them by the Mill authorities; he held that the respondent was not a casual labourer, and that the accident occurred in the performance of his duties as a workman employed by the Mill.

[6] Mr. Sen for the appallant has contended that in this case, the provisions of 8. 10 of the Act were not complied with in that no notice of the accident was given as required by the Act. Even so, Proviso 2 to S. 10 of the Act lays down that the want of or any defect or irregularity in a notice shall not be a bar to the entertainment of a claim if the employer or any one of several employers or any person responsible to the employer for the management of any branch of the trade or business in which the injured workman was employed had knowledge of the accident from any other source at or about the time when it occurred. From the fact that the injured person was removed to the Dhubri Hospital, it is reasonable to suppose that the management of the Mill then knew how the accident had occurred. It also appears from the evidence that after the respondent was discharged from the Hospital, the Manager of the Mill interviewed him. In these circumstances, we do not think the absence of notice can be regarded as a bar to the entertainment of the claim.

[6] Mr. Sen has next contended that the claim itself was not properly made; that a claim under the Act must be made by an application as required by S. 22 of the Act. We do not think a claim is required to be made by an application under S. 22 of the Act. A claim is required to be made under S. 10, and no particular form is prescribed. It is not disputed that the claim in this case was made before the Commissioner within one year of the occurrence of the accident. The application referred to in S. 22 of the Act is an application for the settle. ment of any matter by a Commissioner and has no reference to the manner in which the claim for compensation is to be made. Mr. Sen contended that as sub-s. (2) of S. 22 requires particulars to be mentioned in an application within the meaning of S. 22 particulars such as (a), (b) (o) and (d), it must by implication refer to the particulars of the claim. But S. 22 refers in terms to an application for settlement of any matter, that is to say it contemplates an application for settlement after a claim is made; under 8. 10.

[7] Assuming, however, that S 22 inc'udes a claim application, sub-s. (3) of S. 22 lays down that if the applicant is illiterate or for any other reason is unable to furnish the required information in writing, the application shall, if the applicant so desires, be prepared under the direction of the Commissioner. It is plain from what has been stated in the order-sheet, dated 29th July 1949, that the learned Commissioner, realising the disability of the respondent, himself wrote out the substance of the claim in his order dated 29th July 1949.

[8] Mr. Sen next contended that it was not the respondent's job to oil the machinery, that what he did was not only gratuitous but something against the warning of the management. This contention, however, is concluded by the finding of the learned Commissioner that the respondent received the injuries in the course of his employment.

[9] The last point argued by Mr. Sen was as to the amount of compensation which could properly be awarded under the Act. He contended that the injury received by the workman was not one of the injuries listed in schedule I to the Act, that the view of the learned Commissioner that the injury has resulted in the loss of the left arm below the elbow resulting in 50 per cent. loss of earning capacity was errone. ous. Mr. Sen has referred us to the evidence of Dr. A. N. Hazarika who has stated:

"This forearm has been shortened by about half; the movements of the left wrist and fingers have been impaired, and his gripping power greatly lost: the fingers have become smaller as they cannot be used. The left hand is permanently disabled to perform his usual occupation as a labourer, that is to say, he cannot use the hand in lifting ordinary loads, but he will be able to pick up a pencil or a piece of paper and will be able also to spread paddy in the sun if he is not to lift loads. His hand is permanently deformed and the tip of the middle finger is lost."

[10] From the evidence of Dr. A. N. Hazarika, it is clear that even if the injury is not to be regarded as one of the injuries listed in the schedule resulting in a 50 per cent. loss of earning capacity, the fact that the workman's hand is permanently deformed and he is unable to carry out his duties as a labourer, means that he has lost the use of the thumb and the 4 fingers of his left hand. For the complete loss of the use of the thumb, the percentage of loss of earning capacity is 25%; for the loss of the index finger 10 per cent., and for the loss of any finger other than the index finger, 5 per cent. Adding up these percentages, it comes to the same figure of 50 per cent. loss of earning capacity. We see no reason, therefore, to reduce the amount of compensation awarded by the learned Commissioner. The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs.

K. R. Barcoah and B. C. Barua — for Appellant. J. C. Sen — for Respondent

Ram Labhaya J. — This is an appeal from the judgment and decree of the Addl. Sub Judge, A. V. D., dated 31st July 1947 in a suit for compensation for wrongful catching and removal of fish by the defendant from a fishery leased to the plaintiff. The plaintiff claimed Rs. 5326-1-0. The claim was decreed to the extent of Rs. 4911 6-0 with proportionate costs. The decretal amount was to carry interest at the rate of 2 per cent. per annum from the date of the decree till realisation. The cross-claim of the defendant was disallowed.

[2] Plaintiff's case was that he was the lessee of fishery Mabal No. 11 in the Sadiya Frontier Tract of the Lakbimpur district for three years, (1944-45, 1945 46 and 1946-47) in succession. The lease in each year commenced from 1st of April, Bardigbaliteel was alleged to be included in plaintiff's fishery Mabal No. 11. Defendant was the lessee of Songkhong Mahal No 8 in the said tract for the year 1944-45. The two fisheries were said to be at considerable distance from each other. On 21st February 1915 defendant sent about 75 or more fishermen to collect fish from the Bardighalibeel and they at his instance caught and removed fish from that beel from 21st February to 25th February (both days inclusive) and from 3rd March to 11th March (both days inclusive). The fish was sent to Dibrugarh market where it was sold. Plaintiff reported the matter to the Superintendent of Police, Lakhimpur and the Political Officer, Sadiya Frontier Tract, on 21st February 1945. On 24th February, plaintiff's uncle went to the site and found the fishermen busy catching fish in the beel in ques. tion. They admitted that they had been fi-hipg in the beel since 21st February at the instance of defendant in this case. On that day they gave an undertaking to deliver all fish caught from the beel to the plaintiff, in future. A writing, Br. 1, was executed. In the document it was stated by the executants that they were all defendant's men and that they were catching fish in Borbsel under his orders. On their learning that Borbeel was settled with Abdul Majid and not with Kishori Ram Malla, defendant, they agreed to send fish to the town to plaintiff's men on receipt of a certain share agreed to between the parties. They further promised to realise the price of fish sent on previous days tothe defendant from him. Six out of the fishermen signed the document as executants and it was attested by witnesses.

[3] The Political Officer, Sadiya Frontier Tract, also passed an order on 24th February directing plaintiff to stop fishing in Bordighalibeel after a visit of inspection to the locality in the presence of both the parties. Plaintiff claimed Rs. 4253.5.0 on account of the price of the fish realised by the defendant. He also claimed a sum of Rs. 1083-12.0 on account of expenditure incurred in connection with the enquiry made by the Political Officer, S. F. Tract, on the spot and under another head.

[4] Defendant repudiated the claim. He averred that there was no beel by the name of 'Bardigbali' and no such beel was included in plaintiff's fishery. He denied that his men caught fish illegally or dishonestly from the alleged Bardighalibeel and claimed that the water from which fish was caught by his men from 21st February onwards was included in his Songkhong Mahal No. 8. He admitted receiv. ing a notice dated 24th February 1945 from the Political Officer Sadiya Frontier Tract to stop fishing, but alleged that he protested against the order by sending a telegram that he had been fishing in the waters covered by his lease. Lia. bility for compensation under both heads of claim was denied. Exhibit 1, referred to in the plaint, was said to have been obtained by intimidation. Defendant preferred a counterclaim of Rs 631.7.4 on the ground that plain iff had caught fish from the disputed water on 26th February, 27th February and 2nd March 1945 without any right.

[5] The learned Sub.Judge found that the fish had been caught from Borbeel which was included in fishery No. 11 leased to the plaintiff. In his view defendant had no right to catch fish from that beel and that his catching fish through his men from that beel was a wrongful act on his part. He further found that the price of fish realised by him was Rs. 4127-100 which the plaintiff was entitled to recover from him. He also allowed a sum of Rs. 783 12.0 to the plaintiff on account of expenses incurred by him in connection with the enquiry as to his rights by the Political Officer, Sadiya and for money spent under another head.

[6] The learned counsel for the appellant has first pointed out that plaintiff's case as put in the plaint was that fish had been caught from Bardighalibeel. The finding of the Court was that fish had been caught from Borbeel. It is urged that without any amendment of the plaint, the plaintiff could not claim to recover the price of fish caught from Borbeel as his case was not that fish was caught from Borbeel or that Borbeel was included in his fishery No. 11. (Holding that this contention had no force his Lordship examined the contention that plaintiff had failed to establish that Borbeel was included in his fishery No. 11 and concluded:) In these circumstances there can be no manner of doubt that the finding arrived at by the learned Sub-Judge that Borbeel from which fish was caught was part of fishery No. 11 is correct.

[7] The learned Sub-Judge allowed the plaintiff a sum of Rs. 783-12 0 on account of expenses incurred by him in connection with the inquiry by the Political Officer, Sadiya, as to the rights of the parties to catch fish in Borbeel and also on account of payment made by him to one Sarju for catching the fish there. The learned counsel for the appellant has not disputed the liability of the defendant to pay this amount. He, however, disputes the correctness of the assessment of the price of the fish which according to the decree of the Court below was Rs. 4127-10 0. The learned counsel points out in this connection that defendant-appellant was a military contractor. He could sell good quality fish to the Army at a rate higher than that prevailing in the open market, and the plaintiff was not en. titled to the full sum realised by the defendant by sale of a part of the fish as a contractor to the Army. We do not think defendant is entitled to keep with himself any part of the money realised by the sale of fish which had been caught as the result of a wrongful act on his part. The fish was caught at his instance. His men trespassed into the fishery of the plaintiff. He and all those were wrong doers. The money that was made by the sale of the fish was the result of wrongful operations. The learned counsel has not been able to refer us to any law or principle of equity on which the defendant could be permitted to withhold any portion of the profit accruing to him as the result of a wrongful act on his part. The learned counsel has claimed that in collecting the fish defendant had to pay a certain portion of the proceeds to his fishermen. We think for reasons given above he cannot claim any amount by way of collection charges either. This view finds support from Rohan Singh v. Durga Bakhsh Singh, A. I. R. (16) 1929 Ou h 55: (111 1.C. 760). In this case the learned Judges held that

"Mesne profits are in the nature of damages which the Court may mould according to the justice of the case In the case of fraudulent and disbonest trespassers whileawarding mesne profits against them on rent basis it is right to refuse them charges for collecting rent of preperty in their presession as trespassers."

The principle laid down in this case is in point and we are not persuaded to hold that the assessment of compensation in this case is exces. sive or that it calls for any interference,

[8] The result is that the appeal fails and is-dismissed with costs.

Whether objections to an award are dismissed on the merits or they are dismissed on the ground that they are filed beyond time, the Court by dismissing them in effect refuses to set aside the award, and an order refusing to set aside an award is clearly appealable under S. 39.

Thadani C J .- This is an application under S. 115, Civil P. C., directed against an order of the learned Additional Subordinate Judge, L. A. D. dated 80th November 1949, by which he dismissed the applicants' appeal on the ground that no apreal lay from an order passed by the Munsiff of Nowgong who had dismissed certain objections to an award on the ground that they were filed beyond time. The learned Subordinate Judge, while dismissing the appeal on the ground that no appeal lay, agreed with the Munsiff that the objections to the award.

[2] It is contended on behalf of the applicant that the learned Sub-Judge was in error in holding that no appeal lay. We think this contention must prevail. Whether objections to an award are dismissed on the merits or they are dismissed on the ground that they are filed beyond time, the Court by dismissing them in effect refuses to set aside the award, and an order refusing to set aside an award is clearly appealable under S. 39, Arbitration Act.

[3] In a case reported in Bholanath v. Chantra Shekhar, A. I. R. (37) 1950 Cal. 53, Das J., observed:

In a case reported in Hola Ram Verhomal v. Governor. General of India in Council, A. I. R. (34) 1947 Sind 145: (I. L. R. (1946) Kar. 459), the view taken was that an order refusing to set aside an award on the ground that objections were filed out of time, was an appealable order under S. 39, Arbitration Act. The learned Sub-Judge has referred to a decision of the Rangoon High Court reported in D. B. Das v. Daya Lal & Sons, A. I. R. (20) 1933 Rang. 38: (142 I. C. 835), but that decision was given before the passing of the Arbitration Act of 1940.

[4] While we think the learned Judge was in error in holding that no appeal lay against the order of the Munsiff who refused to set aside the award on the ground that objections to the award were filed beyond time, it does not follow that our interference in this matter is called for. Both the Courts below have found as a fact that the objections to the award were filed out of time. In order to meet this difficulty, the applicant's advocate for the first time in this Court contended that the applicant was not served by the Court of the first instance with a notice of the filing of the award under the provisions of 3. 14 (2), Arbitration Act. We cannot permit this point to be raised for the first time in revision. Moreover the diary shows that a notice under S. 14 (2) was served upon the applicant. The date of the service is stated to be 5th Feb. ruary 1948 and the objections were filed on 24th March 1918, clearly beyond the period allowed

[5] Accordingly we decline to interfere, and the revision application is dismissed with costs.

The rule is discharged.

[6] Ram Labhaya J.—I agree.

R. A. No. 11 of 1949, D/- 29-6-1949.

Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (I [1] of 1886), S. 148 (3) — "Sufficient cause" — Order cancelling annual patts of appellant — Appellant not served personally with non-renewal notice—Appeal after period of limitation—Maintainability — Effect of non-service.

Appeal against an order of Deputy Commissioner cancelling the annual patta filed after the period of limitation shall be deemed to be in time if the appellant had no knowledge of the order due to want of personal service of non-renewal notice.

[Para 3]

From the fact that the appellant had applied for periodic patta, no inference can be drawn that he must have known that his annual patta had been cancelled, as a periodic patta can be granted even if annual patta is not cancelled.

[Para 3]

The effect of non-service of non-renewal notice personally is that the annual patta must be deemed to be in force and until the annual patta is cancelled by a notice in accordance with law, it will be deemed to be renewed from year to year until duly cancelled.

[Para 4]

K. R. Barman, Govt. Advocata - for Respondent.

Judgment. — In this case, Mr. Barman for the Government has taken a preliminary objection as to limitation contending that the appeal has been filed long after the period of limitation. It is contended by Mr. Barman that the order in question was made by the Deputy Commissioner, Kamrup, on 9th July 1947 cancelling the annual patta of the appellant and that the appeal under S. 148 (1) (c) should have been filed within two months of the date of the order. The appeal was in fact filed on 25th January 1949.

[2] Sub section (3) of S. 148, Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, says :

"An appeal may be admitted after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by this section when the appellant satisfies the tribunal or officer to whom he appeals that he had sufficient cause for not presenting the appeal within that period."

In para. 5 of the petition of appeal it is stated:

"That, to the great surprise of the humble appellant, he came to learn on 3rd December 1948 that not only no orders regarding issue of periodic patta had been passed, but on the contrary, by an order which was not communicated to the appellant, the Deputy Commissioner, Kamrup, had by his order dated 23rd February 1948, passed a composite order as to this land along with some Government lands (for which no pattas had ever been issued to anybody) that the land would not be settled. The appellant further came to learn on that date (3rd December 1948) for the first time that the annual pattas had been cancelled on 9th July 1947 without the service of any non-renewal notices on

[8] While Mr. Chaudhuri for the appellant has relied upon the statement contained in para. 5 of the memorandum of appeal. Mr. Barman has contended that the order cancelling the patta itself states that notice of non-renewal was to be issued to annual patta-holders and that this order was in fact carried out, and that the appellant was duly served with the non renewal notice. It is true that the peon attempted to serve some 12 annual patta-holders who were affected by the order of the Deputy Commissioner, dated 9th July 1947. But it is also clear from the report made by the process server that he did not serve the appellant personally but left the notice hanging, whatever that may mean, in his dwelling house. I am not prepared to hold, on the facts in this case, that the service of the non renewal notice alleged to have been made upon the appellant, was a satisfactory one. If the appellant did not know anything about the non-renewal notice, it is not unlikely that he was not aware of the cancellation of the annual patta cancelled by the Deputy Commissioner's order dated 9th July 1947. Mr. Barman relies upon a circumstance which, he contends, indicates that the appellant knew about the cancellation of his annual patta. He points out that in January 1948, when the appellant made an application for the grant of a periodic patta, in regard to the same land, the Deputy Commissioner visited the place and refused the grant. Mr. Barman contends that at any rate in February 1948, the appellant must have known that his patta had been cancelled. This argument might have prevailed, if it were a fact that a periodic patta is granted only when an annual patta is cancelled; but Mr. Barman very properly admitted that a periodic patta can be granted when the annual patta in respect of the same land had not been cancelled. I do not think an inference should necessarily be drawn from the fact that when the appellant made an application for the grant of a periodic patta, he must have known that his annual patta had been cancelled.

[4] Accordingly I hold that the appeal is in time and in the view I take of the service upon the appellant of the non-renewal notice of the annual patta, namely, that it was not served upon him, it follows that his annual patta must be deemed to be in force with effect from 1st April 1948, and until the annual patta is cancelled by a notice in accordance with law, it will be deemed to be renewed from year to year until duly cancelled. The result is that this appeal is allowed, but with no order as to costs.

Oriminal Revn. No. 61 of 1950, D/- 21-7-1950. 1950 Assam/25 & 26 (a) Penal Code (1860), S. 411—Conduct of accused in concealing property at time of its recovery— Evidence Act (1872), S. 8.

The conduct of the person, accused of having purchased a stolen property, in unsuccessfully concealing it at the time of recovery is indicative that at that moment he either suspected or believed that the article purchased by him must have been the subject-matter of some offence. But it cannot be regarded as any conclusive evidence of the state of the mind of the accused at the time when he purchased it. This piece of circumstantial evidence does not exclude the possibility that the purchase was innocent and without any guilty knowledge or belief.

(b) Penal Code (1860), S. 411—Word "believe" if equivalent to "suspect"—Purchase of stolen property in presence of other persons.

The word "believe" occurring in S. 411 is much stronger than "suspect". It involves the necessity of showing that the circumstances were such that a reasonable man must have felt convinced in his mind that the property with which he was dealing must be stolen property. A person who has purchased stolen property openly in the presence of others cannot be said to have purchased it, knowing it to be stolen or having reason to believe that it is stolen. In a case like this it is not sufficient to show that the accused was careless or had reason to suspect that the property was stolen or that he did not make sufficient enquiry to ascertain whether the property had been honestly acquired.

S. K. Ghose and P. Chaudhuri—for Petitioners.

Government Advocate and C. Lyngdoh — for the State.

Ram Labhaya J.—The two petitioners, Bharat Chandra Das and Barada Charan Das are brothers. They were convicted under s. 411, Penal Code, by Mr. B. M. Dam, S. D. O., Silchar, and were sentenced each to 6 months rigorous imprisonment. On appeal their convictions and sentences were maintained. They have petitioned for the revision of the orders of the Courts below.

[2] The petitioners were dealing in watches and fountain pens at Badarpur. The shop house of Bhupendra Nath Sen Gupta (P. W. 1) at Silchar was burgled on the night following 1st June 1948 and five new watches, one clock, three fountain pens and some cash and papers were removed. A report of the burglary was made on and June 1948.

[3] During the course of the investigation two persons viz., Dinesh Chandra Kar and Prabhat Chandra Shome were arrested. Dinesh Chandra Kar, a previous convict, was found guilty under Ss. 457/380/75, Penal Code, and was sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for 2 years. Prabhat Chandra Shome was convicted under S. 411, Penal Code, and sentenced to three months rigorous imprisonment. They did not appeal from their convictions. While the investigation was in progress, Dinesh Chandra Kar led the Investigating Officer to the Shop of the petitioners at Badarpur. Three watches and two fountain pens, which were identified by the complainant as his, were recovered from the shop. These were found to be stolen property. The finding that the watches and the pens were part of the stolen property removed from the shop of the complainant on the night following 1st June 1948, is not in question.

(4) The defence put forward by the petitioners was that all the five articles were purchased by them from Dinesh Chandra Karfor Rs. 100 and that they had no knowledge that the articles were stolen. The only basis on which the orders of the Courts below are assailed, therefore, is that it has not been proved that the petitioners knew or had reason to believe that the property which was recovered from their possession was stolen property.

property. [5] The complainant deposed that the value of the entire property stolen was about Rs. 500. No documentary evidence was produced at the trial in support of this allegation. So far as the articles recovered from the petitioners are concerned, their value was not stated separately at all. The case of the petitioners was that they paid Rs. 100. In this they are supported by D. W. 1 in whose presence the transaction took place. There is nothing on the record to show that the value of these articles was more than Rs. 100 or that they were purchased at a price much lower than their usual market price. There were some other persons present at the time of the transaction besides D. W. 1. The transaction was in no sense secret. If these articles were purchased openly and at a reasonable price the transaction would not justify an inference of guilty knowledge. No attempt has been made from the prosecution side to bring to light any other circumstance which would go to show that at the time of the transaction the accused knew or had reason to believe that the property they were purchasing was stolen property. learned Additional Sessions Judge has no doubt observed that the price of Rs. 100 said to have been paid by the petitioners was a moderate price and even inadequate but he has not referred to any evidence on which this finding could be based. No one has made any statement as to the approximate value of the articles recovered from the possession of the petitioners. It cannot, therefore, be said that the sum of Bs. 100 paid by them was not adequate consideration for these articles. There is no document evidencing the transaction by which the accused purchased these watches. This may be a suspicious circumstance but by itself it would not be sufficient for attributing guilty knowledge to the petitioners at the time of the transaction, particularly in view of the fact that Dinesh Chandra Kar was offering the articles for sale openly in the presence of several persons.

[6] The conduct of the petitioners at the time of the recovery has really formed the foundation for the finding that the petitioners knew or had reason to believe that the articles purchased by them were stolen. Dinesh Chandra Kar, accused, was taken to Badarpur. There he pointed out the shop of Bharat Chandra Das and Barada Charan Das, petitioners. At that time Barada Charan Das alone was present in the shop. The Investigating Officer asked him if Dinesh Chandra Kar had sold three watches and two fountain pens to him. He was then reading a newspayer. He did not answer the question but very slowly opened the drawer of a table close to him, took out of it a watch, wrapped it in a piece of paper torn from the newspaper be was reading and went out of the shop through the back door. The complainant was standing behind him at the time.

[7] He saw him going with the watch. He brought this fact to the notice of the Investigating officer who followed Barada Charan and caught him with the wrist watch in the courtyard behind. He then asked him to produce the 2 other watches and 2 fountain pens. The stolen watches and a fountain pen were produced from the almirabs where other watches and fountain pens were kept by the accused for their trade. One fountain pen was produced by Bharat from under a bedding. The attempt on the part of Barada Charan Das to take out the watch from the drawer does no doubt indicate that at that moment he either suspected or believed that the articles purchased from Dinesh Chandra Kar must have been the subjectmatter of some offence. The presence of the police officer with Dinesh and the enquiry about the three watches and the 2 fountain pens would lead him to that conclusion. But the question is not whether at that moment one or both of the petitioners suddenly realised that the property they had purchased was stolen but it is, whether at the time they purchased it they knew or had reason to believe that they were purchasing stolen property. The unsuccessful attempt to conceal a watch can merely show that state of the mind of the petitioners at the time of the recovery. The presence of the police could make them nervous and apprehensive. The conduct at the time of recovery cannot be regarded as any conclusive evidence of the state of the mind of the petitioners at the time when they purchased it. This piece of circumstantial evidence does not exclude the possibility that the purchase was innocent and without any guilty knowledge or belief. The evidence being circumstantial in nature it must be con. clusive. It should exclude the possibility of innocence. It should be incompatible with any other hypothesis except that of guilt. We do not think the conduct of one out of the two petitioners leads necessarily to the conclusion that they had guilty knowledge at the time they purchased the articles in question. It cannot therefore be held positively that they received or retained stolen property. The circumstances are no doubt suspicious but suspicion is no substitute for proof. The word "believe" occurring in S. 411, Penal Code, is much stronger than "suspect." It involves the necessity of showing that the circumstances were such that a reasonable man must have felt convinced in his mind that the property with which he was dealing must be stolen property. A person who is purchasing stolen property knowing it to be stolen or having reason to believe that it is stolen, would not purchase it so openly as the petitioners did. There were other persons present. Even they did not suspect that the property was stolen. In a case like this it is not sufficient to show that the accused were careless or had reason to suspect that the property was stolen or that they did not make sufficient enquiry to ascertain whether the property had been honestly acquired. We think the petitioners are entitled to the benefit of doubt.

[8] The petition is allowed. They are acquitted. Their bail bonds shall stand cancelled.

Supreme Court Appeal No. 2 of 1950, D/- 10th July 1950, for leave to appeal to Supreme Court from judgment and decree of this Court, D/- 5th January 1950.

(a) Hindu law — Joint family — Family property — Presumption — Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 101 to

There is no presumption that a Hindu family, bacause it is joint, possesses joint property or any property. To render a property joint, the claimant has to prove that the family was possessed of such property with the income of which the property could have been acquired or from which the prenumption could be drawn that the property possessed by the family is joint property or that it was purchased with joint family funds or by joint efforts. These alternatives are not matters of legal presumption. They must be proved by evidence like any other fact. [Para 6]

Anno. Evidence Act, Ss. 101-108 N. 4 and 16.

(b) Hindu law - Joint family-Trade-Presumption-Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 101 to 103.

There is no presumption that a business carried on by a member of a joint Hindu family is joint family business. [Para 10]

Anno. Evidence Act, St. 101-103 N. 4 and 16.

(c) Hindu law — Joint family—Family property — Joint business by two brothers — Acquisition of property from proceeds by one—Property, if joint samily property.

Two brothers started joint business from the proceeds of which one of them acquired certain property. It was not alleged that they had any joint family property. There was no proof that any family nucleus was utilised for the joint business. All that was alleged was that the two brothers formed a joint Hindu family:

Held that the property belonged exclusively to the brother who acquired it and that an express finding that there had been a separation between the two brothers before the acquisition was not necessary to arrive at such a finding.

8. K. Ghosh and K. M. Brahamin

- for Respondents.

Ram Labhaya J.—This is a petition for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court from the judgment and decree of this Court dated 5th January 1950, by which the decree of the trial Court was affirmed. Leave is sought on the basis that the present value of the property in dispute exceeds Rs. 20,000; the decree also involves indirectly a claim or question respecting property of like value and the case involves substantial questions of law. It is also claimed in the petition that the case is a fit one for appeal under cl. (c) of Art. 133 of the Constitution of India. The defendant is the petitioner.

[2] We do not think any substantial question of law is involved in this case. Plaintiffs respondents were the transferees of the property in suit. They purchased it from the sons and grandsons of Jainarain by a registered deed dated 9th May 1941. The property sold consisted of 8 dags (fields) measuring 4 K. 19 L. There were also super structures on the land which were included in the sale.

[3] The case of the plaintiffs-respondents was that Jainarain was the sele owner of the firm working under the name and style of Messrs. Ramjasrai-Jainarain. He purchased the property, of which the suit property was only a part, in 1901. The sale deed was in favour of Jainarain and his father Ramjasrai. Jainarain mortgaged the whole of the property purchased except dag No. 1452 to the plaintiffs as its sole owner with the concurrence of Srinibas who attested the mortgage and thus acquiesced in the claim of Jainarain. The successors of Jainarain, viz., his sons and grandsons, sold the property to the plaintiffs in 1941. Defendant at that time was in possession of a part of the property sold. According to the plaintiffs, his possession was permissive.

- [4] The defence set up by the petitioner was that Ramjasrai, father of Jainarain, and Ramchandra his father were brothers. They were members of a joint Hindu family. They started joint business when they came to Assam (from Rajputana) at Khowang and Khowant T. E. in the name of Ramjasrai Jainarain and acquired properties in Dibrugarh sub-division including the suit property, with the proceeds of this business.
- (5) It was apparently common ground that the property in suit was acquired by the earnings of the business which was being carried on in the name and style of Messrs. Ramjasrai. Jainarain. The point at which the parties were at issue was whether the firm itself was a joint family firm started and continued by the two brothers Ramchandra and Jainarain, or whether Jainarain was the sole owner of the business. This was the real point in controversy.
- [6] The learned trial Judge while recognising the possibility that the two brothers Ramchandra and Jainarain may have been members of a joint Hindu family addressed himself to the question whether the two brothers were also joint in business which admittedly was being carried on in the name of two members belonging to one branch of the family. While considering this question he observed that "even if it be presumed or assumed that defendant's

"even if it be presumed or assumed that defendant's father Ramchandra and paternal uncle Ramjas were living joint while in Dibrugarh as a joint family, there cannot be a presumption that they possessed joint properties or acquired properties jointly. There must be proof or evidence that they were jointly possessed of such properties or such nucleus that with its help the properties now in question claimed by the defendant to have been joint acquisition, could have been acquired."

- the learned trial Judge after carefully considering the evidence of the parties came to the conclusion that there was no evidence that Ramjasrai and the defendant's father Ramchandra formed a joint Mitakshara Hindu family or that they jointly acquired the properties in suit or that those properties were acquired from their joint family funds. He also found that the properties in suit were the properties of Ramjasrai Jainarain in which the defendant had failed to establish that he had any share or interest.
- [8] It may be noted that the above findings were arrived at on the assumption that the two brothers were members of a joint family. The finding that there was no evidence that the two brothers Ramchandra and Ramjasrai formed a joint Hindu family or they jointly acquired the property in suit disposed of the limited question covered by issue 1 which arose out of the defence set up. The language of the issue is not happy but the question it involves was whether the two brothers were doing business as members of a joint Hindu family after migration to Assam as alleged by the defendant.

[9] What the learned trial Judge decided was that the property in suit was not acquired by the two brothers acting jointly as members of a joint Hindu family. The second part of the finding that Jainarain was the sole owner of Messrs. Ramjasrai-Jainarain and, therefore, of the property in suit, is covered by issue 2, which arose out of the case set up by the plain. tiffs. The two issues are facets of the same problem which is involved in this litigation and which is to the effect, whether the business from the proceeds of which the property was acquired was started and carried on by the two brothers or that it belonged all through to Jainarain who merely used his father's name for the purposes of his business.

[10] The statement of Hindu law contained in the judgment of the trial Court to which reference has been made above was not questioned before us at the appeal stage. It is settled law that there is no presumption that a family, because it is joint, possesses joint property or any property. To render a property joint, the claimant has to prove that the family was possessed of such property with the income of which the property could have been acquired or from which the presumption could be drawn that the property possessed by the family is joint property or that it was purchased with joint family funds or by joint efforts. These alternatives are not matters of legal presumption. They must be proved by evidence like any other fact that may be alleged. It is equally true that there is no presumption that a business carried on by a member of a joint Hindu family is joint family business. The learned counsel, who argued the appeal, did not claim the benefit of any legal presumption in favour of the defendant. There was thus no question of Hindu law at which the parties were at variance. The only live issue before us was whether Jainarain was the sole owner of the firm Ramjasrai-Jainarain and, therefore, also of the property in suit as alleged by the plaintiffs or whether the business which the firm Ramjasrai-Jainarain was carrying on was started and carried on bythe two brothers jointly as alleged by the defendant.

[11] This was a simple question of fact and after considering all available evidence on the record, we came to the conclusion that the finding arrived at by the trial Court with respect to the property in question was correct. No question of Hindu law was raised or decided and we fail to see how it can be said that a substantial question of law is involved in the appeal.

[12] The learned counsel for the defendant petitioner does not seem to contend that the defendant was unjustifiably deprived of the benefit of any legal presumption. He himself relied on Anand Bao v. Vasant Bao, 110. W. N. 478: (9 Bom L. R. 595 P. C.) a pronouncement from their Lordships of the Privy Council. In this it was held that "when the question was whether a certain property was the joint property of a Hindu family or the separate estate of a member and it was proved that the family lived joint in one house and that there was nucleus of joint property of substantial value, the onus was on the party setting up a case of a separate estate."

[13] This authority supports the statement of law which was not challenged till the appeal stage. The onus of proving that a property was separate and not joint family property would be on the party alleging it if the circumstances which existed in the Privy Council case are proved. In this case no allegation was made in the written statement, and no proof was given later that there was any nucleus with which the business in question could have been started. The Privy Council case is no authority for the proposition that there is any presumption that a joint family possesses joint property or that a business in the name of one mamber of a joint Hindu family is joint business.

[14] Parbati Dasi v. Bai Kuntha Nath, 18 C. W. N. 428 : (22 I. C. 51) was another Privy Council case relied on by the learned counsel. This also does not help him. In this case the dispute was whether a property standing in the name of a junior member of a Hindu family was his self-acquired property. The criterion laid down by their Lordships was the source from which the sale consideration came. In the particular case before them, it was found that there was no evidence that the son, in whose name the property was purchased, had any separate fund or that the properties in dispute were purchased with money belonging to him. On those facts it was held

"that the presumption was clear and decisive that the preperty was acquired by the father in the name of his son and it was not the latter's self-acquired property." There was no initial presumption made in favour of the property being joint family property. It was only after it was found that there was no evidence that the son had any separate fund or that the properties in dispute were purchased with money belonging to him that a presump. tion was made to the effect that the property in dispute was acquired by the father in the name of his son. What was stated as presumption was no more than an inference from proved facts. This case was not decided on any Hindu law presumption and has no application to a case where property is admittedly acquired from the proceeds of a business which has been car. ried on in the name of two members of a family for years

[15] The learned counsel has urged that there ought to have been an express finding on the question whether Ramchandra and Ramjas. rai did not form a joint Hindu family governed by Mitakshara school of Hindu law at the time the property in suit was acquired. His point was that before a decree could be passed in plaintiffs' favour it should have been found that the two brothers had separated before the property in suit was acquired in the name of Ram. jasrai Jainarain, [16] The contention is based on some mis. apprehension. The question whether the busi. ness of the firm of Messrs. Ramjasrai-Jainarain was started and carried on by the two brothers as members of a joint Hindu family or by Jai. narain alone was dealt with fully and disposed of. The finding concurrently arrived at has been that Jainarain was the sole owner of the busi. ness and that Ramchandra, father of the defendant, was not interested in that business in any capacity. This finding disposes of the first two issues in the case. But the learned counsel insists that an express finding was necessary that there had been a separation between the two brothers before the acquisition of the property in suit in order that a valid finding to the effect that the property in dispute belonged exclusively to Jainarain could have been arrived at. He has relied on two decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council in support of this contention.

[17] The first of these is reported in Mt. Cheetha v. Babu Mireen Lall, 11 M. I. A. 369: (2 Sar. 803 P. O.). In this case the dispute was admittedly about property which was originally ancestral belonging to a joint and undivided Hindu family governed by the Bengal School of Hindu Law. The plaintiff claimed title as widow and heiress of one Damodar Doss. Their Lordships held that in order to make out a case sufficient to rebut the well-established presumption of Hindu law that a family which was once joint retains that status, it was for the plaintiff to show that it had become divided. It was fur. ther held that the aucestral property of such a family would remain joint unless it is shown by partition or otherwise to have become separate. A mere statement of the facts of this case is enough to show that this case has got no bearing on the facts of the present case. In the case before their Lordships of the Privy Council, the property was admittedly a part of an undivided estate and plaintiff claimed exclusive title. She could not succeed without proving that there was partition of the family property or that the interest of her husband's brother, who was a coparcener, had been conveyed to her husband or it had been relinquished in his favour. There is nothing in common between this case and the case now before us.

[18] The second case relied on is reported in Prit Koer v. Mahadeo Pershad Singh, 22 Cal. 85 : (21 I. A. 134 P. C.). In this case a daughter in the absence of sons, after the deaths of her father's widows, claimed to inherit the estate alleging that it belonged to her father separately. It was found that the estate had been at one time in her father's possession jointly with his only brother, they having been members of a joint family under the Mitakshara. On the death of plaintiff's uncle, his sons became entitled to the property jointly with plaintiff's father as survivors. It was held that it was for the plaintiff to adduce evidence that there had been a separation between her father and his co-sharer or co-sharers. From the evidence the inference drawn was that the previous joint holding had continued till her father's death. Tois case is also obviously distinguishable and does not support the contention of the learned counsel. In both the Privy Council cases the property in dispute was admittedly joint family property. The claimant in each case was from one branch of the family. The claim to exclusive title could not be substantiated except by proof of separation of the family. In the present case there was no allegation in the written statement that the two brothers had any joint family property before migration to Assam. There was no proof that any family necleus was utilised for the joint business. All that was alleged was that the two brothers formed a joint Hindu family. Both came to Assam and started joint business from the proceeds of which the disputed property was acquired. It was held by the learned trial Judge that even if the two brothers were joint, there was no presumption that the business which was being carried on in the name of two members of one branch was joint or that the property acquired in their names was jointly acquired.

[19] The proposition so stated assumes the existence of a joint Hindu family. It was in the background of this assumption that the trial Judge came to his conclusion that the property in suit could not be held to be joint property of the two brothers as the defendant did not allege or prove that family nucleus existed or was utilised for the business carried on in the name of Ramjasrai Jainarain and he could not also substantiate that two brothers jointly started and carried on the business. It was on this basis that the question in dispute was decided in this Court also. It was not necessary to find that the two brothers had separated before the property in dispute was acquired. The dispute did not relate to any property which at one time admittedly belonged to the joint family as in the two Privy Council cases considered above. The question of separation may have arisen if defendant had alleged or proved that there was joint family property which was actually utilised or which could have been utilised for starting a new business in Assam.

[20] The contention of the learned counsels rests on an entirely erroneous view of the significance of the two decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council and has got absolutely no force.

that the finding that there was no ancestral nucleus is not based on any evidence. No evidence was needed as defendant had not pleaded that the business in question was started with the aid of any ancestral nucleus. He also made no attempt to prove that any nucleus existed. His case merely was that the property was acquired by the two brothers jointly and finding on the point was against him.

[22] The learned counsel has cited certain authorities bearing on the question as to what is signified by the words substantial question of law' occurring in Art. 193, Constitution of India. In these cases it has been held under 8. 110, Oivil P. C., that a question of law in respect of which there may be difference of opinion would be a substantial question of law. This proposition is unexceptionable but we have not been able to discover and the learned counsel has not been able to show that there is any question of law in this case on which difference of opinion is possible. As said above, the dispute between the parties was narrowed down by their pleadings to a question of fact which was determined by our judgment against which an appeal is sought to be preferred. We also held that at that stage the question of onus had become immaterial as all the evidence was before the Court and it was not necessary in the circumstances of the case to resort to onus for the decision of this case. No objection has been taken to this view of the matter. What is left in these circumstances is a decision on a pure question of fact.

[23] The learned counsel has not assailed the correctness of the view that defendant-petitioner was estopped by his acquiescence from challenging the title of Jainarain to the property in dispate. The decree in plaintiffs' favour cannot be reversed if this finding is not challenged.

[24] It is a question whether the case fulfils the requirements of cl. (a) of Art. 183 as to the valuation of the subject-matter or whether the final decree involves directly or indirectly some claim or question to or respecting property of which the value is not less than Rs. 20,000. But it is not necessary to go into this question as in the view that we take of the matter it is not possible to grant a certificate for leave to appeal either under cl. (a) or (b) of Art. 133, Constitution of India.

[25] We are not satisfied that any substantial question of law arises in this case. The case. therefore, does not falfil the requirement of ols. (a) and (b) of Art. 133, Constitution of India, and it manifestly does not attract the application of cl. (c) of the article. No question of any great public or private importance is involved. The petition, therefore, must fail and is dismissed with costs.

[26] Hearing fee Rs. 50.

Criminal Revn. No. 62 of 1950, D/-10th August 1950, against order of Dist. Magistrate, Sibsagar, D/-29th March 1950.

Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 424, 367, 439 and 537 -Defective appellate judgment - When can be set eside in revision.

The question whether an appellate judgment, which on the face of it does not comply with the requirements of S. 424 read with S. 367, Crimical P. C., should be set aside must be decided on the facts and circumstances of each case. It would not be safe to lay down any hard and fast rule on the point. [Para 20]

Where the appellate judgment without stating the oxurrence, the points for decision, the decision thereon and the reasons therefor merely states that after hearing the parties it agrees with the finding of the trial Court, the defect in judgment is not merely a technical non-compliance with the requirements of law, inasmuch as it does not enable the High Court to exercise its revisional jurisdiction as required by law. Such a judgment must be set aside and the case remitted back for rehearing of the appeal. [Paras 21, 24]

J. C. Medhi -for Opposite Party. B. C. Barua, Govt. Advocate (Jr.) -for the State.

Ram Labhaya J .- This petition of revision is directed against the order of the District Magistrate, Sibsagar, dated 20th March 1950 by which the order of the 3rd Class Magistrate, Sibsagar, convicting the petitioners under 8. 426, Penal Oode, and sentencing them to pay varying amounts of fine was upheld.

[2] The prosecution case was that the land in dispute measuring 9 bighas belonged to the complainant. It was in his possession. He got the land ploughed and had it transplanted through Bhekuli Saikia, P. W. 1. Subsequently, the accused trespassed into the land, harrowed the entire transplanted paddy over 5 bighas and completely destroyed it,

- [3] It was admitted that Tileswar Kalita and Lakheswar Barua, two of the accused, had been occupying the disputed 9 bighas of land on Khandus terms. It was in January 1919 that they were served with a notice to vacate the land. It was averred that after the expiry of the period of notice the complainant got possession of the land and had it cultivated through his ploughmen.
- [4] The defence was that 3 of the accused persons were in occupation of the land in question for about 10 years or even more and they got the land ploughed and transplanted as before even at the time when, according to the complainant, he was dispossessed. They denied the allegation of the complainant that the land was cultivated by his Halowa (ploughmen) in the year 1949 as alleged.
- [6] The learned Magistrate has found that it was difficult to come to any definite conclusion whether a plot of about 2 bighas of land was ploughed by ploughmen on behalf of the landlord. He was not satisfied that there was any re-transplantation over this area and therefore found that no offence had been committed with respect to this plot.
- [6] As regards another area of 5 bighas out of the total area in dispute, his conclusion was that the land represented by 5 bighes had been cultivated by complainant's ploughmen and this afterwards was harrowed by the accused. In spite of this finding he did not convict any of the accused for trespass which was the main charge. He convicted some of the accused only under S. 426, Penal Code, for causing destruction of the property dishonestly.
- [7] On appeal, the learned District Magistrate observed that he had heard the counsel for the parties and had perused the record and also the judgment of the learned Magistrate. He also stated that he had perused the comments on the petition of appeal. He found the judgment of the learned Magistrate detailed and remarked that it dealt clearly with the points at issue. With these observations he held that the accused were rightly convicted under S. 426, Penal Code, as wrongful loss was caused to the complainant.
- [8] The appellate judgment is not in conformity with the provisions contained in S. 867 read with 8. 424 Oriminal P. O.
- (9) Section 867, Criminal P. O., requires that the judgment of the original Court shall contain the point or points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision. Section 424, Criminal P. C., lays down that the rules contained in Chap. 26 as to the judgment of a criminal Court of original jurisdiction shall apply, so far as may be practicable, to the judgment of an appellate Court other than a High Court. By virtue of this provision, the judgment of the appellate Court should also contain the points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision.

[10] The judgment of the District Magistrate does not comply with the requirements of the provisions contained in S. 367. The point for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision have not been stated. The order does not contain any statement as to the prosecution case or of the defence. The judgment would not give any idea about the facts of the case. In order to understand the case, it would be necessary to refer to the judgment of the trial Court or to other documents referred in the order. The judgment, therefore, is not a proper judgment. It clearly contravenes Ss. 424 and 367, Criminal P. C. It may be that the learned District Magistrate gave his full consideration to the case. His judgment, however, is one which is subject to revision and It is obvious that he had not given sufficient material to this Court to come to a decision on the points which arise in the case. As held in Arinara Rajbanshi v. Emperor, 20 C. W. N. 1296: (A. I. R. (4) 1917 Cal. 285: 18 Or. L. J. 294), it is necessary that there ought to be sufficient mate. rial in the appellate judgment itself to enable the High Court to form a conclusion as to the propriety of the conviction of each of the accused having regard to the offences with which he was charged, and to enable it to come to a conclu. sion as to the correctness of the sentence which has been passed upon each of the accused having regard to the nature of the offence with which each of the accused was charged.

(27) 1940 Sind 113: (41 Or. L J. 724), it was held that a judgment must contain the points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision. Where the reasons in the judgment of the appellate Court are not such as to enable a revisional Court acting under the provisions of S3. 435 and 439, Criminal P. C., to form any conclusion as to the correctness, legality or propriety of the findings, the judgment is clearly defective and the appeal must be reheard.

[12] In Gaharali v. Emperor, A. I. B. (12) 1925 Cal. 266: (25 Cr. L. J. 901), it was held that if the judgment of an appellate Court does not discuss evidence and does not give facts indicating the occurrence dealt with in it, the judgment is not a judgment under S. 367, Criminal P. O., and such a judgment must be set aside.

[13] Mr. Medhi on behalf of the opposite party has urged that the judgment of the appellate Court, though not strictly in compliance with the requirements of S3. 367 and 424, Oriminal P. C., is not vitiated by the omission to state the points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons therefor. He urges that it is an irregularity which is curable and in these circumstances of this case rehearing of the appeal is not necessary.

[11] His contention is that the only point in the case was whether loss had been caused to the complainant. The learned District Magistrate after hearing the counsel for the parties and going through the record agreed with the learned Magistrate that the accused, who had been convicted, had been guilty of causing loss to the complainant. In these circumstances a rehearing of the appeal was not necessary. In support of this contention he had first relied on Patilbuva Raojibala v. Emperor, A. I. B (13) 1926 Bom. 512: (27 Cr. L. J. 1153). In this case also, the District Magistrate's judgment was very brief. He did not state the points for determination and reasons for his finding as contemplated by 8s. 367 and 424, Criminal P. C. But the learned Judge held, in the circumstances of that particular case, that the District Magistrate had gone into the facts of the case. This was indicated by his having acquitted the accused on the charge under S. 434, Penal Code, and the learned Judges were of the view that though mere expression of agreement with the judgment of the Court below was not ordinarily sufficient, regard must be had to the circumstances of the case. On the facts before them, their view was that there was no absence of judgment' and that the irregularity in drawing up the judgment was curable under S. 537, Criminal P. C.

reported in Durga Charan v. Isamuddin Mahmud, 48 Cr. L. J. 389: (A. I. R. (35) 1948 Cal. 6). It was held that where the appellate judgment upholds the conviction and sentence but does not set out the prosecution case and the defence and how the prosecution case has been established, the judgment would be defective. But this fact was not considered sufficient to justify interference when the appellate Court had applied its mind to the evidence and had come to the necessary findings.

[16] The last case cited by him is reported in Abdul Rahman v. Emperor, A. I. R. (22) 1935 Cal. 316: (36 Cr. L. J. 982). It was laid down in this case that S. 367, Criminal P. O., must be interpreted reasonably and so long as the appellate Court below writes a judgment from which the High Court can gather what the decision of the appellate Court really was, that in the majority of instances ought to be sufficient.

[17] I have carefully considered the authorities relied on by the learned counsel. These cases are distinguishable. In Patilbuva Rasjibala v. Emperor, A. I. R. (13) 1926 Bom. 512: (27 Cr. L. J. 1153) no general rule was sought to be laid down and the decision was based on the facts and circumstances of that particular case.

[18] In Durgacharan v. Isamu idin Mahmud, 48 Cr. L. J. 389: (A. I. R. (35) 1948 Cal. 6), the learned Judge held that though the judgment was defective, when read with the judgment of the Court of the first instance, it showed that the learned Magistrate had applied his mind to the evidence and had, in fact, come to the necessary findings.

[19] In Abdul Rahman v. Emperor, A. I. R. (22) 1935 Cal. 316: (26 Cr. L. J. 982), the judgment in question affirmed the convictions of 30 persons and the convictions of some of the accused were set aside. The objection to the judgment was that it was not sufficiently detailed or sufficiently definite. It was pointed out that the judgment did not contain an express finding that there was any conspiracy as alleged in the charge. On facts, this case is easily distinguishable. The learned Judges were dealing in this case with an elaborate judgment and they held that if it is possible for the High Court reasonably to arrive at an understanding of what has been found in the Court below, it is not necessary that it should captiously or capriciously set aside the judgment of the Court below.

[20] It seems to me that the question whether an appellate judgment, which on the face of it does not comply with the requirements of 8. 424 read with 8. 367, Oriminal P. C., should be set aside must be decided on the facts and circumstances of each case. It would not be safe to lay down any hard and fast rule on the point. Where the judgment in question does disclose that sufficient attention has been paid to the points in dispute and the necessary findings are contained therein, it may not be necessary to order rehearing of the appeal though there is no strict compliance with the requirements of Ss. 367 and 424, Criminal P. C.

[21] On the other hand, as held in Abdul Karem v. Emperor, A. I. R. (27) 1910 Sind 118: (41 Or. L. J. 724) where the reasons in the judgment of the appellate Court are not such as to enable a revisional Court acting under the provisions of Ss. 435 and 439, Oriminal P. C., to form any conclusion as to the correctness, legality or propriety of the findings, the judgment is defective and the appeal ought to be reheard.

[22] The reason for this view is obvious. Where no reasons are stated in the judgment of the appellate Court, the exercise of revisional jurisdiction is not possible. The revisional authority can then dispose of the case only by going into the facts. It then must discharge the func. tions which an appellate Court is required by law to discharge. It may be that the revisional authority may go into facts and may dispose of the case but by doing so it assumes functions of the appellate Court which is not in consonance with the requirements of the Code Even if, therefore, a judgment of the appellate Court is not strictly in conformity with the requirements of S. 424, it should be such that it should enable the revising authority to exercise its revisional jurisdiction in the manner requir. ed by law. The judgment should not be such that the revisional authority must in order to dispose of the case be compelled to hear the case as if it were a Court of appeal. It was apparently this view of the matter which induced the learned Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Coart in Arindra Rajbanshi v. Emperor, 20 C. W. N. 1296 : (A. I. R. (4) 1917 Cal. 285 : 18 Or. L. J. 294) to order rehearing of the appeal even though the judgment in question had been prepared with considerable care. The defect in the judgment was that it did not give the revising authority sufficient material to enable it to come to a decision on the points which arose in the case.

[23] In Gaharali v. Emperor, A. I. R. (12) 1925 Cal. 226: (25 Cr. L. J. 901), it was not possible to ascertain from the appellate judgment as to what the occurrence was. The judgment was set aside and the case remitted to the lower appellate Court for rehearing.

[24] The case before me is fully covered by these authorities. It does not state the occur. rence. It does not mention the points that arosa for decision, the decision thereon or the reasons therefor. It merely states that the counsel of the parties have been heard. The judgment of the Court below, according to the learned Dis. trict Magistrate was detailed and that the ac. cused had been rightly convicted as wrongful loss was caused to the complainant. In fact, the judgment merely expresses agreement with the finding arrived at in the Court below without stating anything more. The defect or the omission is not merely a technical non-compliance with the requirements of the law. The judgment does not state the reasons which led the learned District Magistrate to come to his conclusion, and thus does not enable this Court to exercise its revisional jurisdiction as required by law. the that the general transfer [25] In these circumstances rehearing of the case seems appropriate. The judgment of the learned District Magistrate is, therefore, set aside. The case is remitted back to him for rehearing of the appeal and its disposal in accordance with law in the light of the observations made above.

Appeal remanded for rehearing. K.S.

Parties should not be encouraged to resort to the Oriminal Courts in cases in which the points at issue between them are such that they can more appropriately be decided by a civil Court. Any tendency on the part of the litigants to take a short cut by instituting a complaint where a suit is the proper remedy should be checked by criminal Courts and they should be on their guard against lending aid to Euch procedure: [Para 21]

Thadani C. J .- This is an application under the provisions of Ss. 439 and 561A of the Code of Oriminal Procedure for quashing a complaint brought in the Court of Mr. N. C. Sarma, Magistrate, 1st Class, Gauhati, on 4th April 1950, by one Chowthmal Sharma, describing himself as the Manager of Messrs. Krishna Chandra Muralidhar a firm doing business at 71, Cross Street, Calcutta, against three persons (a) Sir Bhag Chand Soni, son of Tikam Chand, Ajmir, (b) Joykumar Patni, son of Hirala!, and (c) Hiralal Patni-under S3. 417 and 420, Penal Code, and Ss. 6 and 7, Merchandise Marks Act, (IV [4] of 1883). The complaint is in these terms:

'The humble petition of the complainant abovenamed

most respectfully sheweth;

(1) That the complainant is the Manager of Messrs. Krishna Chandra Murlidhara partnership firm dealing, amongst other things, in cotton cloth and yarn and also acting as commission agents, having their guddy at 71 Cross Street, Calcutta.

(2) That Messra. Assam Stores at Fancy Bazar, Gaunati, is one of the agents of the complainant's firm at Assam.

(3) That sometime in the month of March 1949, the complainant's firm contracted with the Maharaja Kishangarh Mills Ltd., Kishangarh, Rajasthan, for supply by the said Mills of 475 bales of yarn, of which 373 bales were to be of 10s (10 counts) and the rest of higher counts according to the well-known standard of grey cotton yarn and the scheduled price fixed by the Government and the sail yarn was to be sent to the aforesaid Assam Agents, e. g. Messrs. Assam Stores of Fancy Bazar, Gauhati.

(4) That Messrs. Tikkamchand Bhachand Ltd., were the Managing Agents of the said Maharaja Kishangarh Mills Ltd., hereinafter referred to as the Mills.

(5) That the accused 1 is the Managing Agent the accused 2 is the main executive in the Company, as Attorney Managing Agents, and the accused 3 is the Deputy Managing Director of the said Mills.

(6) That at the time of making the contract as aforesaid, it was stipulated that the accused persons would secure for the complainant's firm the enecessary permit from the Textile Commissioner of India for sale and despatch of the said bales of yara contracted for.

(7) Toat in pursuance of the said contract, the complainant's firm deposited with the accused persons a sum of Rs. 50 000 towards the price of the yarn which was to be adjusted against bills with Railway Receipt and Draft to be submitted by the accused persons through Banks after despatch of the goods contracted for.

(8) That the said Maharaja Kishangarh Mills Ltd., through their Agents, the abovenamed two accused, got the necessary permit No. CYC 10D/6/Prejan/1143 of 20th April 1949, in favour of the Assam Stores from the Textile Commissioner of India, the supreme authority in textile matters, and thereafter began despatching bales of yarn from June 1949 and the first consignment arrived at Gauhati in July 1949. Between July and September 1949, the petitioner's firm made a total payment of, including the aforesaid deposit of Rs. 50,000, the sum of Rs. 2,51,412-5-6 through Banks against Railway Receipts, Involves and Drafts cleared through the Banks covering 412 bales only of grey yarn out of the contracted quantity of 475 bales, in four consignments, and the accused persons did not despatch the remaining 63 bales.

(9) That according to rules then prevalent due to Assam Government Control of Cotton Yarn, the said bales on arrival at Gaubati, were freezed by the Assam Government and the same could only be sold on a Release and Distribution Order by the Textile Commissioner of the Assam Government.

(10) That on 31st August 1949, the Provincial Textile Commissioner of Assam passed the Release Order covering the bales by his Memo No. TCP 72/49/204 of 31-8-49, but the Deputy Commissioner of Kamrup ordered the Assam Stores to sell 100 bales of 10s (10 counts) yarn out of those goods to Gauhati Central Trading Co-operative Society Ltd., by his latter No. DKGTX

37/49/13 of 13-9 1949.

(11) That on opening of some of the bales of yarn and on examination, the complainant's Gauhati Agents found that the yarn was not all up to the standard and quality of the yarn contracted for. Thereafter, on 27.9.49, the Assam Stores applied to the Head Teacher of the Government Weaving Institute of Gauhati for a test and report of the samples of yarn. The said Head Teacher's report of 3.11.49 revealed that out of the six samples tested by him, not one was of the standard 10s (10 counts) and the count number as well as the breaking strength of the yarn supplied marked as 10s (10 counts) were much under the average allowed under the law.

(12) That the complainant, after the report of the Head Teacher of Government Weaving Institute got suspicious that the accused had cheated him by passing of old, unsaleable low count yarn, but charging the scheduled price for 103, sent samples of four bales to the Textile Commissioner of India (Bombay) whose report showed that the accused had committed wholestle cheating and that they had sent to the complainant yarns not ordered and below the average standard. Complainant had a forther test made of four samples by the Technological Laboratory of the Government sponsored Indian Central Cotton Committee whose report showed the same state of affairs.

(13) That learning of this state of affairs, the Textile Commissioner of the Government of India had ordered that the Mills shou'd refund Rs. 1 14-0 per 10 lb. of yarn from the price charged and that the bales should be re-stamped in the presence of the Mills' representative, but the Mills' representative refused to be present.

(14) That the accused persons applied false trade descriptions of the bundles of grey yarn by making them 10s (10 counts) whee, in fast, they were not so. The accused persons also deliberately cheated the complainant's firm by invoicing and by permit the goods at 10s (10 counts) etc., knowing fully well that they were not so and thereby inducing the complainants' firm to accept the said goods under a belief that they were, in fact, of the standard counts as represented and to pay for them which they would never have done had they been not so deceived and the complainants' firm suffered heavy loss as they had to sell the goods at a much lower price. The accused have thus committed offeaces under Ss. 417 and 420, Penal Code, and also under Ss. 6 and 7, Merchandise Marks Act. The accused have also cheated the complainants' firm in respect of 68 bales of yarn alleging them to be 22s and 26s (counts) and they were found by the Government Weaving Institute, Gauhati, to be of inferior count.

The complainant, therefore, charges the accused persons under Ss. 417 and 420, Penal Code and Ss. 6 and 7, Merchandise Marks Act (IV [4] of 1889) and prays that your honour would be graciously pleased to issue process against them.

It is further prayed that warrants of arrest may be issued against the accused.

Sd/Chothmal Sharma. 4-4-1950."

[2] The learned Magistrate examined Chowth.
mall Sharms upon this complaint and the examination recorded by the Magistrate is:

"I complain against Heralal Patni, Joykumar, and Bhagchand. They are partners of the firm of a Kishangarh Mills Ltd., and accused Bhagchand is the Managing Agent. Joykumar Patni is the main executive of the Managing Agency. Hiralal Patni is the Doputy Managing Director. The Assam Stores of Fancy Bazar is our Agent in Assam. I belong to the firm of Krishna Chandra Muralidhar and I am the Manager of that firm. We obtained a permit for 475 bales of yarn of various counts to be supplied at Gaubati. We arranged with the three accused for supply of the yern according to specifications and deposited Rs. 50,000 with them as advance. After that we made payment and the total amount paid was Rs. 2,51,412 and odds. They supplied 412 bales, and on the bales there were specification marks showing the trade description, that is to say, the counts of yarns contained in the bales. We had these yarns examined, but the yarn did not agree with the descriptions given in the bales and the yarns were mixed and of low counts and breaking strength. The yarn was tested by the Head Teacher of the Gaubati Weaving School and was also sent to the Textile Commissioner of India in Bombay and the result was as I have stated. I would not have paid the money if I had known that they would not supply according to the permit. We have thus been cheated and the accused have also committed an offence under Ss. 6 and 7, Merchandise Marks Act. Bhabani Saha, the Head Teacher of the Government Weaving School, Gauhati, and others are my witnesses. Their names are given in the petition."

[3] Mr. Fakhruldin Ahmed for the complainant conceded that nothing that is stated in paras. 1-13 of the complaint constitutes an offence. He, however, relied upon para. 14 and contended that the accused named in the complaint deliberately supplied a false trade description to the bundles of grey yarn, in that, whereas the contract was for the sale of yarn of ten counts tensile strength, the yarn delivered, when tested, was discovered to be an average tensile strength of 8.75 counts, and thereby they cheated the complainant firm by obtaining from them a price for the yarn delivered to which they were not entitled, and also committed an offence under Ss. 6 and 7, Merchandise Marks Act.

[4] The petitioner's case is this: The contract which is the subject-matter of the complaint, was made on 16th March 1949 by one Narsingdas Jain with the mill at Kishangarh, and was duly entered in the 'Sowda" book of the mill and signed by Narsingdas Jain; on behalf of the mill it was signed by one Hiralal, a salesman of the mill; none of the three accused persons personally had anything to do with the making of the contract; the yarn was to be delivered ex-mill at the stipulated price; on 17th March 1949, Narsingdas Jain pail to the mill a sum of Rs. 26,000 and another sum of Rs. 1,00,000 (one lao) on 14th March 1949 for which receipts were given to Narsingdas; in due course Narsingdas gave instructions to the Mill to despatch 412 bales of yarn to Assam Stores at Gauhati instructions which were duly complied with by the mill in June 1949; the relevant Railway receipts and hundis were made over to the Central Bank of India Limited at Ajmer in the case of two consignments and to the Panjab National Bank Lid., at Kishangarh in the case of the remaining two consignments; the amount of the bills paid by the banks was Rs. 2,01,412-15 6 and the balance of Rs. 40,498-2-0 was adjusted against the deposit of Rs. 1,26 000 held by the Mill. On 24th August 1949 the Mill called upon Narsinglas Jain for instructions in the matter of the despath of the remaining 63 bales of yarn and 969 bales of cloth the latter of which are not the subject matter of the complaint; Narsingdas failed to give instructions in this behalf, and the Mill sent reminder to him on 7th September 1949 followed by a registered notice on 19th September 1949 intimating Narsingdas that if he did not take delivery of the goods, the mill would sell the goods by public auction on his account; Narsingdas made no reply and the Mill advertised the sale of the goods, which were in due course sold by auction on 25th September 1949 and 26th September 1949, the mill intimated Narsingdas that after giving him credit for a sum of Rs. 5,92,207-10-0 being the saleproceeds of the goods realised at the auction, the balance still due from him was Rs. 82,422-15.8; on 25th October 1949, the mill instituted a suit against Narsingdas in the Court of the District Judge, Kishangarh, being suit No. 1552 of Sambat 2006, for the recovery of a sum of Rs. 82,422-15 3 together with certain other amounts due from Narsingdas, amounting to a total sum of Rs. 1,92,516-6-3; on 1st December 1949, the District Judge issued a writ for attachment before judgment against Narsingdas: 4 months later on 4th April 1950 the present complaint was brought at Gauhatiagainst the accused persons by one Chowthmall Sharma.

[5] Now, it is significant that the contract which the complainant Chowthmall Sharma has alleged in the complaint is also purported to have been made in March 1949, but equally significant is the fact that the date of the contract has been omitted from the complaint. Moreover, the contract alleged by Chowthmall Sharma is not in writing. This was admitted by Mr. Fakhruddin for the complainant. Mr. Fakhruddin also admitted the price at which the complainant firm is alleged to have bought the yarn. Mr. Fakhruddin further admitted that no receipt was obtained by the complainant firm or anybody else for the payment of Rs. 50,000 alleged to have been made by the complainant firm to the mill.

(6) We have set out the rival versions of the complainant and the accused, not with a view to indicating our preference for the one to the other, but with a view to indicating how undesirable it is, on the facts of this case, to permit a criminal Court to decide questions which a civil Court is best suited to decide. It is obvious that if the present complaint were to be tried and decided by a Magistrate, he would have to decide such complicated questions as the formation of the disputed contract, including the parties thereto, the terms of the contract, its breach, whether the alleged breach of the terms as to countage amounts to a breach of the contract, or a breach of warranty and other allied questions. We do not think these questions can properly be decided by a criminal Court.

[7] On the other hand, there is a suit instituted by the mill in Rajasthan against Narsingdas Jain for the recovery of nearly two lacs of rupees arising out of the contract for the sale of 475 bales of yarn and some bales of cloth. The suit was instituted before the present complaint, It is true that in the suit filed by the mill in the Rajasthan Court, the complainant firm is not a party. But there is nothing to prevent the complainant firm from instituting a suit to enforce their rights, if any, arising from the breach of the contract as alleged in their complaint.

[8] Apart from the fact that the issues involved in the complaint are more appropriate to adjudication by a civil Court, we have come to the conclusion that, on the face of the complaint, no criminal offence has been made out. There is no allegation in the complaint that the complainant firm paid monies to the mill as a result of any deception practised by the accused personally. It is not the case of the complainant firm that the tensile strength of the yarn was personally tested by the accused persons and found to be below 10 counts, nor is it the case of the complainant firm that the accused persons stamped the yarn with their own hands as of 10 counts, knowing it to be untrue. The stamping of the yarn was an act done apparently by the employees of the mill, and not by any of the accused personally. In the absence of any allegation by the complainant firm that the mill had deliberately delivered yarn stamped as of 10 counts tensile strength, knowing it to be untrue, we do not think any question of deception arises within the meaning of S. 415, Penal Code. The essence of cheating is first, deception, and then inducing the person so deceived, to deliver property. The fact that on testing the yarn it was found to be below 10 counts, is not necessarily evidence of deception. Moreover, the report, the only evidence in the case upon which Mr. Fakhruddin has relied, says that the average tensile strength of the yarn marked 10 counts was 8.75 counts. Mr. Fakhruddin conceded that an allowance of 5% is ordinarily made to provide variations in tensile strength of yarn owing to climatic and other conditions. The average tensile strength of the yarn delivered to the complainant firm should then have been 9.5. According to the report, the average strength of the specimens tested was 8.75. But the report also shows that certain specimens were of higher tensile strength, namely, over 10 counts, and some 12 counts. The presence of higher counts in the yarn stamped as ten counts negatives the suggestion of deception or intention to deceive. It is also to be observed that the specimens were tested some 4 months after the goods had been delivered — not at a place where, under the contract, the yarn was to be delivered, but at Gauhati, which is notorious for the humidity, a circumstance which might easily account for a further deterioration of 75% in the tensile strength of the yarn delivered.

[9] It was next contended that even if the complaint does not show a prima facie case of cheating, it shows a prima facie case under Ss. 6 and 7, Merchandise Marks Act of 1859. Section 6 contemplates applying a false trade description. Assuming the description of the tensile strength of yarn amounts to trade description, which, in my opinion, it does not from the fact that on testing certain specimens of the yarn described as 10 counts, they were found to be under 10 counts, it does not follow that a false trade description had been applied to the yarn. Nowhere is it stated in the complaint that when the yarn emerged from the mill in a manufactured state, the accused knew that it was below 10 counts, and that in spite of this knowledge, they applied a false trade description. For the same reason, it cannot be said that the complaint falls within the purview of S. 7, Merchandise Marks Act.

[10] We are satisfied that the complaint discloses no criminal offence, and that the proceedings taken upon the complaint must be set aside.

[11] We accordingly quash the complaint and the process issued against the accused named in the complaint. The bail bonds if executed by any of the accused will stand cancelled. The rule is made absolute.

[12] In conclusion, I wish to observe that the Magistrate who entertained this complaint has not exercised that care and caution which was expected of him when he decided to issue bailable warrants against each of the accused in the sum of Rs. 20,000, on the facts of this case.

[13] Ram Labhaya J. — I entirely agree with my Lord the Chief Justice that the proceedings in this case be quashed, but I wish to add a few words. (After stating the facts his Lordship continued:)

[14-16] The version given above suffers from some obvious defects. The date of the contract, from which the complaint arises was not given. The name of the person who entered into the contract on behalf of the complainant's firm is not disclosed. In the complaint and the statement of the complainant that followed it was not stated distinctly who represented the Mills when the order for the supply of yarn was placed. It was said in a vague way that the sum of Rs. 50,000 was deposited with the accused. In the counter affidavit put in on behalf of the complainant in this Court a clearer statement was made on this point. It was stated that at the time of the contract the three accused persons were present (vide Para. 6 of the counter-affidavit). The statement necessarily implies that there was some other person representing the Mills at the time of the contract. His name has not been disclosed. These defects may not be fatal to the complaint. They, however, raise doubts as to the bona fide nature of the complaint. The transaction related to 475 bales of yarn. The price of 412 bales came to about Rs. 2,50,000. The bargain is alleged to be oral and not supported by a receipt for a huge sum of Rs. 50,000 that was alleged to have been paid at the time of the contract. This fact seen in the light of omissions stated above make the alleged transaction ex. tremely unusual and strange. Added to these, there is another serious omission in the complaint which goes to the root of the matter. As stated above, all that is said about the three accused against whom the complaint has been lodged is that they were present at the time the order for the supply of yarn was placed. There is no allegation contained in the compaint or in the statement of the complainant made on 4th April 1939 that the accused personally entered into the contract or that they had any criminal intent to cheat or defraud at that time. They are proceeded against as they happen to be Managing Agents of the Mills (vide Paras. 4 and 5 the complaint). The element of criminality which is alleged to exist in the case is brought out in Para. 14 of the complaint. It is alleged in this para that the accused persons applied false trade descriptions to the bundles of grey yarn by making them appear as containing 10 counts yarn when in fact they did not contain such yarn. The accused persons also, it was alleged, deliberately cheated the complainant's firm by invoicing the goods of 10 counts knowing full well that they were not so and thereby induced the complainant's firm to accept the said goods. It would be noticed that acts attributed to the accused are not stated as their personal acte. Paragraph 16 of the counter-affidavit from the complainant's side brings this aspect of the matter into clear relief. It is stated in this para that in the case of the yarns under dispute, the usual formalities were observed:

"The Maharaja Kishangarh Mills, the Managing Agents of which are admittedly the three accused persons, obtained the permit from the Textile Commissioner of Government of India and began despatching the yarns to Assam Stores, Gaubati, marking the packages with the quality of the yarn and the price fixed by them and realising the price of the goods through Banks from the complainant's Firm Krishnachandra Muralidbar of Calcutta."

In plain words it was stated that the Mills obtained the permit and sent the goods. In Pars. 12, the responsibility for marking the goods was fixed on the Mill's Executives. Their names were not mentioned. A direct statement that the three accused were personally liable for applying false marks was, to say the least, avoided. The accused were described as the Managing Agents. They were thus made responsible for every thing done in the Mills in connection with the consignments in question and have been sought to be made liable in their capacities as Directors of the Managing Agency. That, this was the idea underlying the complaint is also indicated by the fact that learned counsel for the complainant-respondent relied on Emperor v. Dhanraj Mills Ltd., A. I. R. (30) 1943 Bom. 182: (44 Cr. L. J. 574) for showing that a Corporation can be guilty under 8. 6, Merchandise Marks Act. This case, however, does not help him. In that case the complaint was not against any of the Directors concerned with the management of the Company but it was against the Company itself. Assuming that a Company can be prosecuted under the Merchandise Marks Act, the complaint ought to be against the Company. This is intelligible as it would not be possible in most cases to fix responsibility for giving false description on individual employee of the Company who may have been responsible for it. If it could be established that the description on the bales or on the yarn was false, a prima facie case may be made out against the Company but not necessarily against individuals who constitute the managing agency of the Company. The liability for false description, if any, would be of the Mills and it would be for the Company to show that if there is any false description, it was not with intent to defraud. The existence or proof of false description by itself would not make out a case against the Directors of a Company, who are acting as Managing Agents of the Manufacturing Mills. In these circumstances it is fairly obvious that no basis for criminal liability has been disclosed against the three accused personally.

[17] Accused 2, the petitioner before us, has given his version in the petition of revision which is supported by an affidavit. His case is that there was a contract between one Nursingdas Jain and the Mills at Kishangarh for the supply of 475 bales of yarn. It was entered in "Sowda" book of the Mills. It was signed by Narsingdas Jain, who placed the order with the Mills. The order was not limited to 475 bales of yarn; 1322 bales of cloth had also to be supplied. The Mills were represented by their salesman and none of the accused was present at the time of this transaction which came on 16th March 1949.

[18] On 17th March, a sum of Rs. 26,000 and on 24th March another sum of rupees one lakh were paid as deposits towards the price of the goods required to be supplied later. It was alleged that this money which Nursing. das Jain paid was obtained by him from Kishanchand Muralidhar's Indore Firm whose account at Kishangarh he used to operate. Permits were obtained from the Textile authorities by the Mills in the name of various parties under instructions, written and verbal, from Nursingdas Jain. The permit for despatch of 475 bales of yarn was obtained in the name of Assam Stores, Gaubati, and 412 bales of yarn were sent to Assam Stores, Gauhati, in June 1949 and the amount recovered against railway re. ceipts and hundis was shown as Rs. 2,01,412-15-6. The balance of the price, viz., Rs. 40,498-2-0 was adjusted from the initial deposit of Rs. 1,26,000. As no instruction was received from Nursingdas Jain for the balance of 63 bales of yarn and 969 bales of cloth, notices were sent to him. No reply was received to the registered notice of 13th September 1949. The Mills after publishing a notice on 19th September 1949 for auction of the goods, sold them in open auction on 25th and 26th September 1949. The difference payable by Nursingdas Jain on the transaction came to Rs. 82,422-15-3. He had other transactions with the Mills. His total liability on all the transactions came to Rs. 1,92,516-6-3, and a suit was instituted against him on 25th october 1949 for the recovery of this sum.

[19] The points which arise for determination from the two conflicting versions are:

(1) Whether the complainants' firm entered into an oral contract with the Mills directly without the intervention of Nursingdas Jain and if so, when and by whom were the parties to the contract represented ? (2) What sum, if any, was paid on behalf of the complainants' firm on the date of the contract? (3) What were the terms of the contract? (4) Was any breach of the contract committed by the Mills ? (5) Whether the yarn supplied did not answer the quality and the standard stipulated for and was a false description marked on them ? (6) Were the three accused responsible for false description of the goods personally or was it with their knowledge or under their directions that the false description was applied and was the false description applied with intent to defraud? (7) Could all the accused be held responsible for false description by virtue of their position as Managing Agents, even if they had no personal knowledge that a false description within the meaning of the Merchandise Marks Act had been applied to the consignments?

[20] A mere statement of the questions which arise for decision shows clearly that complicated questions of fact and law arise for decision in the case and that a criminal Court is not the proper forum for the decision of such cases.

[21] Parties should not be encouraged to resort to the criminal Courts in cases in which the points at issue between them are such that they can more appropriately be decided by a civil Court. Any tendency on the part of the litigants to take a short cut by instituting a complaint where a suit is the proper remedy should be checked by criminal Courts and they should be on their guard against lending aid to such procedure. The correctness of this view has not been questioned. Its application to the facts of this case seems equally unquestionable. The question whether there was a false description of the goods would admittedly depend on expert testimony. According to the complaint, about 14 samples presumably from 14 bales were examined. These samples were taken out by the agents of the complainants' firm. No less than 412 bales of yarn were received at Gaubati. The bulk of the yarn has not been tested. It is pointed out that experts may differ, and climatic condition in Assam may possibly have affected the quality of a part of the yarn to some extent. These are all possibilities. The very foundation of the complaint, viz., the alleged oral contract and its items, is in dispute. The question whether there has been any breach and whether that breach amounts to an offence on the part of the parsons proceeded against is another substantial issue in the matter. It is not disputed that difficult questions of law and fact do arise. The learned counsel realising this urged in the alternative that the complaint could at least be proceeded with so far as the case under the Indian Merchandise Marks Act is concerned. He urged that the allegations in the complaint do make out a case under this Act. It is alleged that a substantial quantity of yarn was falsely described, and it is contended that this is all that the complainant need prove for making out a prima facie case under the Indian Merchandise Marks Act. The learned counsel, however, ignores the fact that where description of the goods is proved to be false, it is open to the accused to show that there was no intention to cheat or defraud. The question of intention, therefore, does arise. Even in the Bombay case that was relied on by him, Emperor v. Dhanraj Mill Ltd., A. I. R. (20) 1943 Bom. 182: (44 Cr. L. J. 574), it was remarked by the learned Chief Justice in relation to the case before him that

"some pieces were correctly stamped and some were even longer than the figure with which they were stamped; which facts suggest insufficient checking rather than a fraudulent design."

The question of criminal intent, therefore, would arise and will have to be decided on a careful expert examination of the entire quantity of yarn supplied. Besides this, the proof of false description alone may make out a primate case against the company but not necessarily against the Managing Agent personally So, a case under the Indian Merchandise Marks Act would involve substantially the same questions as would arise if the complaint were under Ss. 417 and 420, Penal Code, alone.

[22] Another factor which has an important bearing on the question whether the complaint is bona fide is the obvious delay in instituting the complaint. The complainants' firm bad received all the reports from experts by 7th January 1950. This complaint was not lodged till 4th April 1950. The suit against Narsingdas-Jain with whom the contract for the supply of 475 bales of yarn along with cloth was made (according to the petitioner) was instituted on 25th October 1949. Narsingdas Jain was said to bave received Rs. 26,000 that he had paid as deposit in March to the Mills from the account of the Indore Firm of Kishenchand Muralidhar (com. plainants' firm). He was also described as a partner of a firm in some transactions at Kishangarh. These allegations about Nursingdas Jain contained in Para. 5 of the petition to this Court are not all denied. All that was said in answer to Para. 5 of the retition was that the cor. rectness of the statement was not admitted and the deponent was not aware of the fact that Nursingdas Jain made any payment in connection with the contract in question by obtaining money from the Indore Firm (sic) not correct to say that Nursingdas Jain was a partner in the transaction out of which this case arises. There is an implied admission that he was a partner in other transactions. As regards the alleged withdrawal of the money by Nursingdas Jain from the account of the Indore Firm of the complainants, ignorance was pleaded. The petitioner's version of the claim does substantially form the subject-matter of the suit instituted against Nursingdas Jain. He is said to have denied the existence of a valid contract with the Mills. The complaint, it is pointed out, is really a counterblast to the suit and has been instituted with a view to obtaining a settlement of the dispute by putsing pressure on the Mills. It is not easy to avoid this impression. From the facts as stated above it is safe to conclude that the complaint is an attempt to obtain from the criminal Courts in Assam a decision on matters which are pre-eminently fit for determination by a sivil Court. It is apparent that the case is of an exceptional nature and a bare statement of the facts is enough to show that the case is fit for interference at this stage. The dispute is of a civil nature and can more appropriately be decided in a civil Court. Both parties have claims against the other. They arise out of a contract. Some complicated questions are also involved and a decision on these questions involves an elaborate and a very prolonged enquiry.

[23] The learned counsel for the respondent has drawn our attention to Hariram Onkar v. Mt. Radha Jairam, A. I. R. (30) 1943 Nag. 327: (45 Cr. L. J. 175). The broad proposition laid down in this case is that proceedings can only be quashed when no offence whatever is disclosed or when the prosecution is bound, on the face of it, to fail, or for some other cause equally powerful. We agree with this statement of law. But on the peculiar facts of this case and for reasons given above, we hold that interference is fully justified. I, therefore, agree that the proceedings be quashed.

THADANI C. J. AND RAM LABHAYA J.

Maitham Bania-Appellant v. Ritu Kaivarta and others—Respondents.

Second Appeal No. 12 of 1950, D/- 11th August 1950, from judgment and decree of Addl. Sub-J., L. A. D., D/- 23rd November 1949.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 41, R. 33-Power of appellate Court to take notice of subsequent events.

The power to make further or other decree or order under R. 33 as the case may require, would justify consideration of events taking place after the institution of the suit in proper cases. There would not, therefore, be any excess of jurisdiction if the appellate Court takes notice of facts which entitles a plaintiff to a relief which though claimed in the plaint could not be given to him on the date of the suit. Normally, and as a general rule, a Court of appeal in considering the correctness of the judgment of the Court below is to confine itself to the state of the case at the time when the judgment was given. But in exceptional cases it may depart from this rule in order to shorten litigation or to achieve the ends of justice. [Para 10]

Where the sult for redemption was not premature but the relief claimed was that redemption or delivery of possession of the property be decreed without payment of mortgage money on the ground that the charge had been extinguished by operation of law and this relief was not available to the plaintiff on the date of the suit, but became available during the pendency of the appeal, it was held that the appellate Court could grant such relief. [Paras. 8 and 14]

Annotation: Civil P. C., O. 41, R. 33, N. 4.

J. N. Borah _for Appellant. P. N. Roy-for Respondents.

Ram Labhaya J .- This is an appeal from the judgment and decree of the Additional Sub-Judge, L. A. D., dated 23rd November 1949 by which the order of the trial Court decreeing plaintiff's claim was affirmed. Defendant has appealed.

[2] The suit was for redemption of a mortgage alleged to have been made by a registered instrument for a sum of Rs. 80 in 1937. The property in question was 5B 14 Ls. of land. It was prayed that redemption be allowed without payment of the mortgage money as the mortgage had been extinguished by operation of law, viz., under S. 9, Assam Money lenders' Act as amended by Act VI [6] of 1943.

[3] The defence raised was that the property had been sold to the defendant in 1933-34. This has been negatived by the two Courts below. The finding is on a question of fact and is not assail. able at this stage. The learned counsel for the appellant, therefore, has not challenged this finding.

[4] The trial Court found that the mortgages had been in possession for 9 years from the date of the mortgage. The usufruct of the land for 9 years was, according to the learned trial Judge, more than double the consideration of the mort. gage. Plaintiff was thus found entitled to a decree for possession of the property without payment of the mortgage money.

[5] The learned Sub Judge has affirmed the decree but on a different basis. He has come to the conclusion that the mortgage charge could be extinguished under 8. 9 (2) (1) only after the expiration of 12 years from the date of the execution of the mortgage deed. As this period had not expired on the date of the suit and even on the date of the decree of the trial Court, the learned Sub Judge was of the view that the decree for possession without payment of the mortgage money could not have been passed by the Munsiff. He, however, affirmed the decree on the ground that the period of 12 years also had expired before the date of the hearing of the appeal and the mortgage then stood completely discharged.

[6] The learned counsel for the appellant urges that on the date the suit was instituted the plaintiffs could not ask for possession of the property without payment of the mortgage money. His contention is that the suit, in these circumstances, was premature, and any cause of action that may have accrued during the pendency of the appeal could not have been taken notice of. The suit should have been dismissed and the plaintiffs directed to institute a fresh suit.

[7] We think the argument is not well found. ed. The suit was essentially one for redemption, There was a cause of action for the suit for redemption of the property. There was no impediment in the way of the plaintiffs asking for redemption on payment of money. The cause of action existed for a redemption suit therefore.

[8] The relief claimed was that redemption or delivery of possession of the property be decreed without payment of mortgage money on the ground that the charge had been extinguished by operation of law. It is not disputed that this relief was not available to the plaintiffs on the date of the suit. But it became available during the pendency of the appeal, in the lower appellate Court. The ordinary rule is that the rights of parties must be determined as at the date of the action, and not on the basis of rights which accrued to them after the institution of the suit. This rule should not apply to this case. It cannot be said that plaintiffs had no cause of action for the suit. The relief that was claimed on the basis of action was in excess of what they were entitled to. But they became entitled to the relief claimed later on. It would be extending the operation of the rule if it is applied to the circumstances of the case before us.

[9] The rule itself has not been followed consistently in all the High Courts. A redemption suit which was premature was dismissed in Rangayya Naidu v. Basanna Simon, A. I. R. (13) 1926 Mad. 594: (94 I. C. 639) even though the cause of action had accrued to the plaintiffs after the institution of the suit. But in Tulsi Ram v. Dina Nath, A. I. B. (13) 1926 Lah. 145: (89 I. C. 833), the view taken was that if a suit was premature at the date of its institution, it should not be dismissed if the cause of action has accrued after the institution of the suit.

[10] We need not resolve this conflict of authority on this point as in the opinion that we have taken of the matter the rule above stated has no application to the facts of this case. The powers of the appellate Court have been described in O. 41, R. 88, Civil P. C. This rule was introduced in the Code in 1922. It confers on the appellate Court the power to pass any decree and make any order which ought to have been passed or made and to pass or make such further or other decree or order as the case may require. The power to make further or other decree or order as the case may require would justify consideration of events taking place after the institution of the suit in proper cases. There would not be any excess of jurisdiction if in the exercise of the power given to the appellate Court under O. 41, B. 93 the Court takes notice of facts which entitled a plaintiffs to a relief which though claimed in the plaint could not be given to him on the date of the suit. Normally, and as a general rule, a Court of appeal in considering the correctness of the judg. ment of the Court below is to confine itself to the state of the case at the time when the judgment was given. But in exceptional cases it may depart from this rule in order to shorten litigation or to achieve the ends of justice.

[11] In Derasadh Dishnois v. Busti Ram, A. I. R. (27) 1940 Lah. 194 (188 I. C. 616), Dalip Singh J., held that where a suit when instituted was premature but had ceased to be premature in appeal, the question whether it should be decreed or not was a matter within the discretion of the appellate Court.

[12] In Pandurang Narayan v. Ramchandra, A. I. R. (17) 1930 Bom. 554: (54 Bom. 902), a Division Bench of the Bombay High Court held that the Court was not precluded from taking cognizance of events which have happened since the filing of the suit or appeal.

[13] The learned counsel for the appellant has not been able to cite any authority in support of the contention that in the circumstances of the case the lower appellate Court exceeded its jurisdiction in allowing the relief which the plaintiffs became entitled to during the pendency of the appeal.

[14] We think the power to take notice of subsequent events did exist in this case particularly as the suit for redemption was not premature. The exercise of the power is fully justified on facts. It would not have been fair or just to force the plaintiffs either to pay the money which was not due or to institute another suit.

[15] We see no reason to interfere. The appeal is dismissed. Parties shall bear their own costs in this Court.

[16] Thadani C. J.—I agree. G.M.J. Appeal dismissed.

Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (I [1] of 1886) _Patta-holder _ Annual patta _ Grant of.

An annual patta, until it is either cancelled or notice of non-renewal given to the patta-holder by the authorities concerned, confers good title upon the person to whom the patta is issued. The possession of a person other than the annual patta-holder is irrelevant. His possession might be that of a trespasser or a permissive

K. C. Goswami-for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal fagainst the decision of the learned A. D. C., Kamrup, dated 4th March 1947, by which he ordered that the annual patta should remain in the name of Balabox Agarwalla and refused to recognise the possession of the present appellant.

[2] Mr. Lahkar for the appellant has contended that it has been found as a fact that the appellant was in possession of the land, although the respondent was nominally the patta-holder, and having regard to the long possession of the appellant, the patta should have been granted to him and that the name of the respondent should have been removed from the patta.

An annual patta, until it is either cancelled or notice of non-renewal given to the patta-holder by the authorities concerned, confers good title upon the person to whom the patta is issued. The possession of a person other than the annual patta-holder is irrelevant. His possession might be that of a trespasser or a permissive possession emanating from the patta-holder himself in which case obviously he cannot claim the rights of a patta-holder and claim that the annual patta be issued to him.

[4] There is no reason to interfere with the judgment of the learned A. D. C. The appeal is accordingly dismissed, with no order as to costs.

Gayanath Mandal — Appellant v. Dhruba Hazarika—Respondent.

R. A. No. 75 of 1949, D/-22nd December 1949.

(a) Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (I [1] of 1886), S. 81—Maintainability of application by ostensible purchaser.

Section 81 refers to an application by anybody whatsoever. Hence, a purchaser having estensible title to property, which has been sold at a revenue auction, is not debarred from applying under the provisions of that section on the ground of hardship or injustice. Whether the seller had or had not title to the property is not material to the maintainability of his application.

[Para 2]

(b) Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (I [1] of 1886), Ss. 81, 74 (2)—Property sold in contravention of S. 74 (2) - Revenue sale set aside.

A revenue sale of property held tefore the expiration of the period of thirty days mentioned in S. 74 (2) being not in accordance with the provisions of the Regulation is liable to be set aside under S. 81.

[Para 3]

D. N. Medhi-for Appellant. B. C. Barua-for Respondent.

Judgment. — This is an application under s. 81, Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, by one Gayanath Mandal seeking to set aside a revenue sale on the ground of hardship.

[2] A preliminary objection has been taken by Mr. Barua for the respondent to the effect that an application by the petitioner who has no locus stands does not lie under the provisions of S. 81 of the Regulation. Section 81 is in these terms:

"The Provincial Government may, on application made to them at any time within one year of a sale becoming final under S. 80, set the sale aside on the ground of hardship or injustice."

Manifestly it refers to an application by anybody whatsoever. In this case, the applicant is a purchaser of the property sold at a revenue auction from one Biswanath Agarwalla for a sumof Rs. 1000. Apparently on the strength of the sale-deed, he bases his title to the property, and I do not think it can be contended that a person having ostensible title to property, which has been sold at a revenue auction, is debarred from applying under the provisions of s. 81 of the Regulation on the ground of hardship or injustice. Whether the seller had or had not title to the property is not material to the maintainability of an application under S. 81 of the Regulation.

[3] In this case, the allegation of the appellant is that the property which is situated in a village bazar, measuring approximately $\frac{1}{2}$ of an acre, was sold at Rs. 12, when the market value of the land in that locality was in the neighbourhood of Rs. 1000. Mr. Medhi for the appellant has contended that in this case the sale is liable to be set aside on the ground of injustice within the meaning of S. 81 of the Regulation in that the sale has not been conducted in accordance with the provisions of the Regulation. He has referred to S. 74 of the Regulation which is in these terms:

"74. (1) Every sale under this Chapter shall be made either by the Deputy Commissioner in person, or by an officer specially empowered by the Provincial Government in this behalf.

(2) No such sale shall take place on a Sunday or other authorized holiday, or until after the expiration of at least thirty days from the date on which the list of estates has been published under S. 72.

(3) The Deputy Commissioner may, from time to time, postpone the sale, and every postponement of sale of a permanently settled estate shall be reported to the Commissioner or (where there is no Commissioner) to the Provincial Government."

Section 74 refers to S. 72 which is in these terms:

"72. (1) If the Deputy Commissioner proceeds to sell any property under S. 70, he shall prepare a statement in manner prescribed, specifying the property which will be sold, the time and place of sale, the revenue assessed on the property and any other particulars which he may think necessary.

- (2) A list of all estates for which a statement has been prepared under sub-s. (1) shall be published in manner prescribed, and the copy of the statement relating to every such estate shall be open to inspection by the public free of charge in manner prescribed.
- (3) If the revenue of any estate for which a statement has been prepared under sub-s. (1) exceeds five hundred rupees, a copy of the statement shall be published in the official Gazette.
- (4) When the arrear has accrued on an estate, not being a permanently settled estate in the district of Sylbet, a copy of the statement prepared under subs. (1) shall be served on the defaulter, or, if he cannot be found, posted on the estate in manner prescribed.
- (5) When the arrear has accrued on a permanently-settled estate in the district of Sylhet, a copy of the statement shall be posted on, or in the vicinity of, the estate in manner prescribed and, if any proprietor of the estate has registered his name and address in the manner prescribed, a copy of the notice shall be despatched to him by post in a registered cover to that address.
- (6) In making rules prescribing the manner of registering names and addresses for the purposes of subs. (5), the Provincial Government may impose a fee for such registration and may fix a period after which such registration will, unless renewed, become void."

Sub-section (2) of S. 72 refers to the manner in which the list of all estates shall be published, and the manner is laid down in R. 136 of the rules for recovering arrears framed under Chap. V. Part II, Land Revenue Manual. Rule 136 reads as follows:

"136. The list of estates referred to in the foregoing rule shall be published—(a) in the Court of the Revenue Officer by whom it has been prepared; (b) at the office of the sub-Deputy Collector in whose circle the estate is situated; (c) at the Office of the Tahsildar or house of the mauzadar within whose tahsil or mauza the defaulting estate lies and (d) where gaonburas are employed, on the signboard of the gaonbura within whose charge the defaulting estate falls.

136A. The sale statement mentioned in R. 135 shall be served under sub s. (4) of S. 72 of the Regulation on the defaulter or, if he cannot be found, it shall be posted on a conspicuous part of the estate."

It is not disputed that the list of estates, as prepared by the Deputy Commissioner, was published in this case in the Court of the Revenue Officer on 19th February 1949, at the Office of the Sub-Deputy Collector on 18th February 1949 at the Office of the Mauzadar on 15th February 1949, and on the sign-board of the gaonbura on 18th February 1949. The last date on which the publication was made in terms of cl. (a) of R. 186 was on 19th February 1949. Thirty days within the meaning of sub-s. (2) of S. 74 of the Regulation, expired on 20th March 1949, but it is common ground that the sale was effected on 16th March 1949, clearly, therefore, the sale was not in accordance with the provisions of the Regulation.

[4] In this view, I set asie the sale on usual terms. The appeal is allowed accordingly.

Kanakeswar Bora—Complainant v. Asatu Kalita and others—Accused.

Criminal Reference No. 9 of 1949, D/- 21-11-1949.

Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 258, 259 — Charge framed—Complainant and his witnesses remaining absent—Acquittal of accused—Legality of.

After examining the complainant and his witnesses the Magistrate framed charges against accused under Ss. 379 and 426, Penal Code. But when he found both the complainant and his witnesses absent on the date to which the trial was adjourned he passed an order to the effect that the accused were not guilty and that they were acquitted under S. 258 (1), Criminal P. C.

Held, that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate was not warranted by law and that if the complainant and his witnesses were absent on the adjourned date the Magistrate should have secured their presence by coercive process; their absence was not a ground for acquitting the accused. [Para 3]

Annotation: Cr. P. C., S. 258, N. 3; S. 259, N. 9. J. C. Medhi-for Complainant.

Judgment.—This is a reference made by the learned Sessions Judge of Upper Assam Districts under the provisions of S. 438, Criminal P. C., in the case of one Kanakeswar Bora v. Asatu Kalita and 4 others.

[2] The complainant, Kanakeswar Bora, brought a complaint before the Senior Magistrate, Jorhat, in which he alleged that on 2nd February 1948, the accused persons (respondents in this case) at about 8 P. M. met him on the road and stole a money-bag from his possession containing Rs. 250. The Senior Magistrate, Jorhat, transferred the case to the and Class Magistrate, Jorhat, who examined the complainant on oath and sent the complaint to the Police for report; on 24th May 1948, on receipt of the report from the Police, the learned 2nd Class Magistrate issued process against the accused persons under Ss. 379 and 323, Penal Code. The accused apparently did not respond to the summons and the learned Magistrate issued warrants against them on 24th June 1948, and 20th July 1948. On 20th September 1948, the Magistrate examined the complainant and 4 of his witnesses; on 5th October 1948, he framed charges against the accused Asatu Kalita and Bopai under Ss. 379 and 426, Penal Code, and discharged the other accused persons under S. 253, Oriminal P. C. On 28rd October 1948, the complainant's witnesses failed to appear and the case was adjourned to 20th November 1948, on which date also the complainant and his witnesses were absent. The learned 2nd Class

Magistrate then proceeded to pass the following order:

"Complainant absent and no cause shown. The defence is ready. The P. Ws also are absent and are not presented for cross-examination, and no cause is shown for the absence Under the circumstance, I do not find the accused guilty under Sa. 379/426, Penal Code, and I acquit the accused under S. 258 (1), Criminal P. C."

- [3] The learned Sessions Judge points out that the order of the learned 2nd Class Magietrate acquitting the respondents cannot be maintained in the absence of a judgment in accordance with the provisions of S. 367, Criminal P. C., holding that there were not sufficient reasons to convict the respondents. We think the procedure adopted by the learned 2nd Class Magistrate was not warranted by law, and that if the complainant and his witnesses were absent on 20th November 1948, the learned Magistrate should have secured their presence by coercive process; their absence was not a ground for acquitting the accused.
- [4] We accordingly set aside the order of acquittal passed by the learned Magistrate and remand the case for re-trial from the stage at which the learned Magistrate committed the particular illegality. We direct the learned Magistrate to secure the presence of the complainant and his witnesses for further crossexamination after charge by such means as are authorised by law, and thereafter to call upon the respondents to lead evidence in their defence, if they so desire, and after hearing arguments, to dispose of the case according to law, bearing in mind the provisions of S. 367, Criminal P. C.

Case remanded. V.S.B.

(a) Assam Land and Revenue Regulation (I[1] of 1886)-Rules under, R. 190-A-Settlement of fisheries otherwise than by auction-Provincial Government if can order settlement.

When a S. D. O. or Deputy Commissioner decides to settle a fishery otherwise than by an auction sale, he is obliged to communicate to Government the name of the person on whom the fishery is proposed to be settled. But that does not mean that the Provincial Government can make a counter proposal as regards the person upon whom the S. D. O. or Deputy Commissioner should settle the fishery. There is no rule which empowers the Provincial Government to name the person upon whom the S. D. O. or the Deputy Commissioner is obliged to settle the fishery.

B. N. Deka -for Respondent.

Judgment. - This is an appeal purporting to be an appeal under R. 190 of the Rules framed under the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation.

[2] The facts of the case are these: On 2nd December 1948, the Subdivisional Officer, Sibsagar, forwarded to the Deputy Commissioner, Sibsagar, Jorhat, a petition of one Nagaram Gaonbura and others and a petition of Mvi. Paharatdin Ahmed, the appellant, for settlement of Demow Fishery otherwise than by sale. The S. D. O., Sibsagar, had recommended the petition of the appellant for the following reasons. According to the S. D. O., the appellant, Mvi. Pabaratdin Ahmed, had obtained fishing rights for 3 years from 1st April 1946 to 31st March 1949 on an annual payment of Rs. 2600 on certain conditions which included the clearing of water-hyacinths within the first year of the lease and an undertaking to supply one maund of fish daily to Sibsagar Town during the months of July to September on a rate fixed by the Subdivisional Officer. The S. D. O., Sibsagar, reported that the appellant had carried out the conditions of the lease and had spent a considerable amount of money in clearing waterhyacinths and removing logs and had supplied fish in the Municipal Market according to the terms of the lease. He, therefore, recommended that the Government should settle the fishery upon the appellant for a term of 3 years from 1st April 1949 to 31st March 1952 The Deputy Commissioner, Sibsagar, forwarded the petitions to the Government recommending that the fishery be settled upon the appellant. The Government of Assam, however, did not agree with the recommendations of the S. D. O., or the Deputy Commissioner and passed the following order, dated 10th February 1949:

"This fishery was leased out at an annual value of Rs. 2600 for 3 years. This lease expires on 31st March next. The Deputy Commissioner, Sibsagar, now recommends to lease it out for a term of 3 years at an annual value of Rs. 3,500 (three thousand five hundred). The Government policy with regard to settlement of fisheries is to settle fisheries with fisherment Co-operative-Societies even at a 10% rebate. In this case, the Bhati Bongaon Co-operative Fishery Society is one of the * applicants for settlement of the Dimow Fishery. The Subdivisional Co-operative Inspector, the Primary and District Congress Committee Presidents certify its bma fides and recommend its case. This Dimow fishery is, therefore, settled under R. 190A of the A. I R. Manual for 3 years from 1st April 1949 to 31st March 1952 with the Bhati Bongson Co-operative Fishery Society at an annual value of Rs. 3,500 (three thousand and five hundred) subject to the following conditions:

- That the lessee will effect considerable improvement in the fishery by clearing water byacinth etc. within the first year of settlement.
- 2. That the lessee will execute a bond binding himself to supply one maund of fish per day regularly in Sibragar Town during the months of July to September, failing which, the lease of the fishery will be liable to cancellation with forfeiture of security deposit."

The Sub-divisional Officer, on receipt of the order passed by Government, passed the following order on 24th February 1949:

"Settlement sanctioned with the Bhati Bongaon Fishery Society for 3 years, with an annual value of Rs. 3,500 from 1st April 1949 to 31st March 1952, vide Government No. B.F.28/48/41, dated 10th February 1949, received with D. O's Memo No. S.J.R.III/1/49/30, dated 19th February 1949."

It is against this order of the S. D. O. that an appeal under R. 190 of the rules framed under the Regulation has been preferred.

- [3] Mr. Barman for the Government contends that no appeal lies against the order, which is only nominally an order passed by the S. D O. but is, in fact, an order of the Provincial Government. Mr. Chaudhuri for the appellant, on the other hand, contends that the order against which the appellant has preferred the appeal is an independent order passed by the S. D. O. and, as such, is appealable under R. 190.
- [4] Whether one interprets the order of the S. D. O., dated 24th February 1949, as an independent order or merely as an order which purports to communicate to the parties concerned the order of the Provincial Government, the result of the appeal will, in my opinion, be the same. Mr. Chaudhuri on behalf of the appellant has contended that the Provincial Government has no power under the Regulation to settle fisheries upon any body, that the power to settle fisheries under the Regulation is given to the Deputy Commissioner alone and that there is a procedure prescribed for settling fisheries which lays down that ordinarily, fisheries shall be settled by an auction sale unless by previous canction, the Provincial Government decides that it may be settled otherwise than by an auction sale.
- [6] Mr. Barman for the Government contends that the proper interpretation of R. 190A is that the Provincial Government has the right to settle fisheries upon anybody it likes and in any manner it likes. It may be that the Provincial Government has the right to settle fisheries upon anybody it likes and in any manner it likes but not under the Regulation. Under the Regulation, the Provincial Government is merely empowered to sanction previously a sale other. wise than by auction; that is to say, the Deputy Commissioner, in virtue of the previous sanction accorded by Government for sale of a fishery otherwise than by auction sale, is empowered to settle the fishery, but not the Provincial Government.

(6) In this case the S. D. O. and the Deputy Commissioner had recommended that the fishery in question should not be sold by public auction but should be settled without a public auction. It is true that both the S D. O. and the Deputy Commissioner had recommended that the appellant should be given the fishing rights without an auction. They were apparently under an obligation to inform the Government that the fishery should be settled upon the appellant otherwise than by an auction sale. When a fishery is sold by public auction under the Regulation, the sale is subject to confirmation by the Develop. ment Commissioner. Naturally, therefore, when a S D. O. or Deputy Commissioner decides to settle a fishery otherwise than by an auction sale, he would communicate to Government the name of the person on whom the fishery is proposed to be settled. But that does not mean that the Provincial Government can make a counter proposal as regards the person upon whom the S. D. O or Deputy Commissioner should settle the fishery. If the Government decides to accord sanction for settlement of a fishery otherwise than by an auction sale, so far as I can see from the rules framed under the Regulation, there is no rule which empowers the Provincial Government to name the person upon whom; the S. D. O. or the Deputy Commissioner is obliged to settle the fishery.

[7] Mr. Chaudhuri's contention is that the order of the S. D. O. is an order in respect of which the S. D. O. had assumed full responsibility and is, therefore, an appealable order. I am inclined to accept the contention. The difficulty, however, in giving effect to the order of the S. D. O. is this. It is clear from the correspondence in the case that it was never the S. D. O.'s intention to settle the fishery upon the respondent; he clearly intended to settle the fishery without an auction sale upon the appellant, and yet in his order he states that the fishery is settled upon the respondent, which I cannot regard, under the circumstances, as an order uninfluenced by the order of the Provincial Government. I am not prepared, therefore, to uphold the order of the S. D. O., which I hereby set aside.

[8] But even after setting aside the order of the S. D. O., the difficulty created by the order of the Provincial Government, dated 10th February 1949, still remains. The order of Government is an order against which no right of appeal is given under the Regulation. This difficulty was pointed out to Mr. Chaudhuri, namely that even after the order of the S. D. O., dated 24th February 1949, is set aside, the order of the Provincial Government will stand, and to that extent the appeal would be infructuous.

[9] The result then is that while the order of the S. D. O., dated 24th February 1949, is set aside, the order of the Provincial Government dated 10th February 1949, survives.

[10] The appeal is disposed of by the above order.

R. K. Goswami-for Petitioner.
C. Lyngdoh - for Opposite Party.

Thadani C. J.—This is an application under 8. 86 of the rules framed for the Administration of Justice and Police in the Khasi and Jaintia Hills against an order, dated 16th December 1948, passed by the Deputy Commissioner, Khasi and Jaintia Hills.

[2] One Ka Or Shabong instituted a suit against certain defendants for a declaration of her right, title and interest to certain properties situated at Laitlyngkot in the Khasi and Jaintia Hills. At the trial of the suit, the E. A. C. tried two issues as preliminary issues—one relating to jurisdiction and the other to the payment of requisite court-fee—both in favour of the plaintiff, by his order, dated 20th August 1947. Against this order, the defendants preferred an appeal to the Deputy Commissioner who, by his order, dated 16th December 1948, while agreeing with the E. A. C.'s finding on the issue as to jurisdiction, took the view that the plaintiff's suit for a declaration only was not competent, and called upon the plaintiff to seek consequential relief and to pay additional court-fee on the relief as to possession, and directed the E. A. C. to try the suit on payment of ad valorem court-fee.

- [3] The learned advocate for the applicant has contended that the learned Deputy Commissioner, in ordering the plaintiff to add consequential relief as to possession and to pay additional court fee on the consequential relief, has misconstrued the scope of the rules framed for the Administration of Justice and Police in the Khasi and Jaintia Hills - a construction which has resulted in depriving the trial Court of its jurisdiction to try the suit, as framed, namely, a suit for declaration of title only. It appears that the learned E. A. C., in disposing of the question as regards relief as to possession, took the view that the Specific Relief Act was not applicable either to the parties or to the territories in which the cause of action arose and declined to order the plaintiff to seek additional relief and to pay court-fee thereon.
- [4] Mr. Lyngdoh for the opponent has contended that in view of the judgment of this Court in Civil Revision No. 33 (H) of 1949, the application must be rejected.
- [5] We have carefully read our judgment, dated 17th August 1949, and we think that the question involved in the present application was not then under consideration. What we are concerned with in this case is the question whether or not the Specific Relief Act is applicable to this particular territory. The learned Deputy Commissioner has apparently founded his order on the supposition that the Specific Relief Act is in force in the territory in question. It is true that a revisional Court will not interfere simply because there has been an error of law. But it is plain that the question whether a particular enactment is applicable to a particular territory is a question of fact, and not one of law, and it is equally plain to us that if the trial of the suit depends on the question whether a particular enactment is in force in a particular territory, the decision of the question goes to the root of the jurisdiction of the trial Court.
- [6] The learned Deputy Commissioner has taken the view, by implication at any rate, that the Specific Relief Act applies to the territory in question. But a bare reference to S. 1, Specific Relief Act shows that the Act does not extend to Scheduled Districts as defined in Act XIV [14] of 1874, and it is not disputed that the territory in question forms part of a Scheduled District. No regulation or order has been brought to this territory.

- [7] We, therefore, set aside the order of the learned Deputy Commissioner, dated 16th December 1948, and restore that of the trial Court, which will dispose of the suit according to law without calling upon the plaintiff to seek further relief and to pay ad valorem court-fee, as ordered by the Deputy Commissioner.
- [8] Ram Labhaya J.—I agree in the conclusions. The Deputy Commissioner has apparently exceeded his jurisdiction in including the relief for possession in the suit by his own order and ordering the plaintiff to pay ad valorem courtfee thereon. His order is, therefore, liable to reversal. The relief prayed for is properly valued and the court-fee is not deficient. Issue 2 must, therefore, be decided in plaintiff's favour, as has been done by the trial Court. In the result, the order of the trial Court on the issue in question must be restored and that of the Deputy Commissioner reversed.

P. K. Lahiri -for Appellant.

J. Chaudhuri -for Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal against an order of the learned Deputy Commissioner of Nowgong, dated 25th March 1949, by which he set aside an order of the S. D. C., dated 6th January 1949, by which he had removed the name of Jahuruddin Sheik from the Mutation Register. On appeal by Jahuruddin to the Deputy Commissioner, the learned Deputy Commissioner set aside the order of the S. D. C. Muzafar Sheik has now appealed to this Court seeking to have his name restored in the Mutation Register.

[2] It is conceded by Mr. Labiri for Muzafar Sheik, the appellant, that the order in the Field Mutation Register in favour of the respondent Jahuruddin was made on 10th August 1933; i. e., before the Assam Land and Revenue (Amendment) Act 1916 (Act XI [11] of 1946) came into force, there was no time limit for filing an application under S. 53A, sub.s. (2). But by S. 2, Assam Land and Revenue (Amendment) Act of 1946 (Act XI [11] of 1946) in sub-s. (2) of S. 53A of the principal Regulation, namely, the Assam Land and Revenue Regulation, between the words 'may' and 'apply,' the words 'within a period of three years of the date of such order' have been inserted. Sub-section (2) of S. 53A of the Regulation will, therefore, read thus:

"Where any person is aggrieved by an order directing registration under this section which has been made after verification of the information received by local inquiry only, he may within a period of threeyears of the date of such order apply to the Deputy Commissioner to have such order set aside."

- [3] It is common ground that the appellant in this case applied to the Deputy Commissioner to have his name entered in the Mutation Register on 1st July 1947 and the Assam Land and Revenue (Amendment) Act, 1946, came into force on 2nd January 1947. Mr. Lahiri for the appellant contends that the amendment Act has no application to an order such as the one passed in this case, for if 3 years period applies to the order in this case made on 10th August 1943, the application would have been barred in August 1946. He contends that it was not the intention of the Legislature to apply the Assam Land and Revenue (Amendment) Act of 1946 to orders which had been passed before the Act came into force namely on 2nd January 1947.
- [4] I am unable to accept this contention. If that was the intention of the Legislature, it could have been stated in express terms. Indeed, it may well be the intention of the Legislature to leave untouched orders made under S. 53A more than 3 years before the Amendment Act of 1946 came into force. The language of sub-s. (2) of S. 59A. as amended, in my opinion, applies to all orders which direct registration under S. 53A, Assam Land and Revenue Regulation. In this case, the order having been passed more than 3 years before 2nd January 1947, the Deputy Commissioner was right in rejecting the application of the appellant.

[5] The appeal fails and is, therefore, dismissed with no order as to costs.

Second Appeal No. 13 of 1949, D/- 16-12-1949.

(a) Evidence Act (1872), S. 114 - Payment towards principal-Inference as to interest.

The fact that a certain sum is paid towards the principal on a certain date does not justify the conclusion that interest up to that has been paid. In fact, it is not a matter of presumption or inference at all.

[Para 5]

Anno. Evidence Act, S. 114, N. 39.

(b) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 100 — Erroneous inference drawn from a proved fact justifies interference in second appeal. [Para 5]

Anno. Civil P. C., 100-101, N. 28, 32.

B. O Barua-for Appellant; U. K. Goswami-for Respondents.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of a sum of Rs. 320 on the basis of a registered deed of mortgage executed on 1.9 1930. The deed provided that the mortgagor would pay interest at the rate of Rs. 3 per cent. per mensem. The debt was to be repaid within one year. A sum of Rs. 80 only was paid on 4-8-1943 towards the principal. An endorsement stating this fact was made on the back of the mortgage-deed. The suit was for recovery of Rs. 320, representing the balance of the principal, viz. Rs. 120 and Rs. 200 as interest.

[2] The defendant pleaded repayment of the debt. He also raised the plea of limitation.

[3] The learned Munsiff of Jorhat found that the payment of as 80 towards the principal on 4-8-1943 was proved. The endoresement on the back of the bond was signed by the debtor. This saved the limitation for the suit. He found that the plea of repayment had not been substantiated. He, however, granted plaintiff a decree for a sum of Rs. 140-5-0 only on the ground that the payment of Rs. 80 on 4-8-1943 raised a presumption in favour of the debtor that interest up to that time had all been paid.

[4] The plaintiff appealed and that learned Subordinate Judge agreed with the trial Court. Plaintiff has come to this Court on second appeal.

[5] The only question that arises for consideration is whether plaintiff is entitled to interest from the date of the mortgage debt up to the date on which the sum of Bs. 80 was paid on the entire amount of the debt and interest from that date onwards on the balance that remained

due. The presumption that the Courts below have raised from the fact of payment of principal on a certain date has got no basis or justifi. cation. The fact that a certain sum is paid! towards the principal on a certain date does not justify the conclusion that interest up to that date has been paid. In fact, it is not a matter of presumption or inference at all. If repayment of the loan was not proved and if there was no evidence that interest up to that date had in fact been paid, no presumption should have been drawn in favour of the defendant. The erroneous inference drawn from a proved fact justifies interference in second appeal, as besides excepting (?) the inference there is no evidence on which the finding arriv. ed at by the Courts below could rest.

[6] The loan was advanced on 1-9-1930. This suit was instituted on 31-5-1946. Plaintiff is claiming only Rs. 200 as interest, that is, a sum equal to the principal. This claim is not excessive and is permitted by law. He is, therefore, entitled to the full amount claimed The appeal is allowed. The plaintiff is granted a preliminary decree for Rs. 320 which includes principal and interest. He shall also be entitled to his cost of the suit on this amount. The decree shall further direct that the amount due shall be paid within six months from the date of the decree and on payment being made, plaintiff shall deliver up to the defendant or to such person as the defendant appoints, all documents in his possession or power relating to the mortgage property and shall, if so required, retransfer the property to the defendant at his cost, free from the mortgage and from all incumbrances created by the plaintiff or any person claiming under him, and on his failure to pay the amount on or before the date fixed. plaintiff shall be entitled to apply for a final decree directing that the mortgage property or a sufficient part thereof be sold and the proceeds of the sale (after deduction therefrom of the expenses of the sale) be paid into Court and applied in payment of what has been found due to the plaintiff under the preliminary decree together with such amount as may have been adjudged due in respect of subsequent costs and charges, etc., and the balance, if any, be paid to the defendant or other person entitled to receive the same.

Calcutta High Court

A. I. R. (37) 1950 Calcutta 1 [C. N. 1.] G. N. DAS AND LAHIRI JJ.

Sm. Maya Debi and others — Appellants v. Sm. Rajlakshmi Debi and others — Respondents.

A. F. O. O. Nos. 83 of 1945, 145 of 1947 and 22 of 1948, Decided on 2nd May 1949, from orders of Sub-Judge, Nadia, D/- 4th December 1944 and 13th August 1947.

(a) Bengal Patni Taluqs Regulation (VIII [8] of 1819), S. 13 (4)—Position of depositor under S. 13 (4) stated — Putni sale—Darputnidar depositor entering into possession of putni and obtaining decree for rent against other darputnidar — Subsequent relinquishment of possession in favour of putnidar by giving notice authorising him to realise all arrears accruing due during his period of possession — Putnidar becomes assignee by operation of law or by writing and is entitled to execute decree for rent — Civil P. C. (1908), O. 21, R. 16.

It is difficult to describe the position of the depositor under S. 13 (4), Bengal Putni Taluqs Regulation either as that of a bailiff, or as an agent, or as a trustee, or the holder of a lien, or as that of an owner. The position dopends on the true view one has to take of the effect of S. 13 (4) of the Putni Regulation. His position is an anomalous one and it is difficult to define it accurately by a legal concept ordinarily known to law. He is in the position of a creditor who holds the defaulting tenure as if it was mortgaged to him. He has an additional right to be put in possession on his applying for the same. In the latter event if he obtains possession, he can retain possession of the same and collect the profits of the tenure saved from sale including rents which were unrealised at the time of his entering into possession and rents accrued during the subsistence of his possession and apply the same in satisfaction of the deposit made by him. He can, however, give up possession even before the advance made by him is satisfied, amicably without recourse to a suit or an order of the Collector. If he gives up possession in such circumstances, his right to collect the rents already accrued or to accrue thereafter, decretal or otherwise, cease and all such rights which had inhered in him because of his entry into possession becomes vested in the defaulting tenure-holder who goes into possession on the depositor vacating the same: Case law discussed.

A, a dar-patnidar who had deposited under S. 18 (4) the arrears of revenue to avoid a putni sale entered into possession of the putni and obtained a decree for arrears of rent against B, another dar-putnidar. A gave up possession of the putni by giving notice to C, the putnidar. The terms of the notice showed that A intended to vest C with the right of realising all arrears of rent, decretal or otherwise, during the time be was in possession of the putni:

Held that the putnidar C could be regarded as the assignee of the decree-holder A by operation of law or by assignment in writing within the meaning of O. 21, R. 16, Civil P. C. and therefore C was entitled to execute the decree for rent obtained by A: A. I. R. (8) 1921 Cal. 74 and A. I. R. (23) 1936 Mad. 543, Rel. on; A. I. R. (11) 1924 Cal. 661 and A. I. R. (19) 1932 Cal. 439, Disting. [Paras 18 and 20]

Annotation: ('44-Com.) C. P. C., O. 21, R. 16 N. 4, 5 and 9.

(b) T. P. Act (1882), S. 111 (d) — Merger — To constitute merger there must be union of entire interest of lessor and lessee — Putni sale — Darputnidar depositing amount under S. 13 (4), Bengal Putni Regulation — He subsequently acquiring interest of another dar-putnidar in execution of his rent decree — Position of depositing dar-putnidar being that of mortgagee there is no merger of darputni purchased by him — Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII [8] of 1885), S. 168A—T. P. Act (1882), S. 63—Trusts Act (1882), S. 90.

In order to constitute merger within S. 111 (d), T. P. Act, the interest of the lessor and the lesses in the whole of the property should become vested at the same time in one person in the same right; that is to say, there must be a union of the entire interest of the lessor and the lessee or the landlord's interest must sink in the reversion.

A, a dar-putnidar who had made a deposit under S. 13 (4), Bengal Putni Regulation 1819, entered into possession of the putni, obtained a decree for arrears of rent against another dar-putnidar B under the same putni and purchased the same in execution sale. A subsequently sought to execute another decree for arrears of rent against B by attachment and sale of his other property. The question was whether there was a merger of B's dar-putni interest in the putni for purposes of S. 168A, Bengal Tenancy Act:

Held that the acquisition of B's dar-putni interest by A did not have the effect of extinguishing the dar-putni interest so purchased and, therefore, there was no merger in the eye of law. A being in the position of a mortgagee by reason of the deposit the dar-putni so purchased would not be an accession ipso jure so far as the mortgagor putnidar was concerned. The combined effect of S. 90, Trusts Act and S. 63, T. P. Act is that till the redemption of the security, the accession, that is, the purchased property, does not become the absolute property of the mortgagor. [Para 22]

(c) Hindu law — Debts — Decree against father — Decree cannot be executed personally against sons on strength of pious obligation (Obiter).

(Obiter). — Hindu son is under no pious obligation to pay the debts of his father out of his personal assets. No personal execution can be levied as against a Hindu son on the strength of a pious obligation on the part of the son to repay the father's debt: A. I. R. (21) 1934 Pat. 187, Rel. on. [Para 22]

Annotation: ('44-Com.) Civil P. C., S. 53, N. 1..

(d) Benami transaction — Burden of proof — Burden lies on person alleging it — Gift of land by father to son — Son's name mutated in land-lord's sherista and rent paid by him — Gift is not benami — Indebtedness of father at time of gift is not conclusive—Evidence Act (1872), Ss. 101 to 103.

The question of proving that a transaction is benami rests on the person who argues against the tenor of the deed. It is also well established that no conclusion as regards the benami character of a transaction can be founded on suspicion. [Para 31]

Where a gift of land is made by a father in favour of his son and the name of the donee is mutated in the landlord's sherista and rent is paid by the donee to the landlord it must be assumed that the payment was made by the donee on his own behalf unless it is shown that he acted as agent of the donor. The fact that the donor had debts at the time of gift is not conclusive to show that the gift was a benami transaction.

G. N. Das J.—These three appeals arise out of proceedings in execution of decrees for rent. In First Miscellaneous Appeal No. 83 of 1945, the appellant is Sm. Maya Debi. First Miscellaneous Appeal No. 22 of 1948 and First Miscellaneous Appeal No. 145 of 1947 arise out of the same execution proceedings. In F. M. A. 22 of 1948, the appellants are Probodh Kumar Roy and Pabitra Kumar Roy. In F. M. A. 145 of 1947, the appellants are Kshitish Chandra Roy and Shib Chandra Roy. The facts common to all these appeals may be stated now.

[2] The Maharaja of Cossimbazar was the proprietor of a zemindary under which a putni was held by one Sarat Moni Debi whose interest is now represented by Maya Debi. Under the putni there were several dar putnies. We are concerned with three of such dar putnies in these appeals. One of the dar-putnies was held by the Midnapore Zemindary Company. A second Dar-putni was held by Satish Chandra Roy, since deceased, Kshitish Chandra Roy and Shib Chandra Roy and Suryyapada Dutta. A third dar-putni was held by the said Roys and Dutt and Bibhuti Bhusan Pal Choudhury and three others. The putni of Sarat Moni Debi was put up for sale under Regulation VIII [8] of 1819 on 17th November 1930. On that date the Midnapore Zemindary Company, one of the dar-putnidars deposited a sum of Rs. 22,974-5-3 pies and saved the putni from sale. The deposit was made under the provisions of S. 13 (4), Putni Regulation (Regulation VIII [8] of 1819).

Zemindary Company, the company was put in possession of the putni on 26th November 1930. The company continued in possession till the end of Bhadra 1952 B.S. On 10th August 1945 the company gave a notice to Maya Debi the defaulting putnidar expressing their intention to relinquish possession on the expiry of the month of Bhadra 1352. The notice has been marked Ex. A and is printed in the paper book of F. M. A. 22 of 1948, the terms whereof will be adverted to hereafter. We now come to F.M. A. No. 83 of 1945, in which the appellant, as we have said, is Maya Debi.

[4] The facts so far as they are relevant for the purposes of decision of this appeal are that in regard to the dar-putni held by the Roys and Dutt a decree for arrears of rent was obtained by the Midnapore Zemindary Company on 30th June 1934. In execution of that decree, the darputni of the Roys and Dutt was brought to sale on 9th December 1935 and was purchased by the decree-holder Midnapore Zemindary Company. In 1935, the Midnapore Zemindary Company instituted a suit for rent, being Rent Suit No. 48 of 1935, claiming arrears of rent from Srabana 1341 B. S. to Jaistha 1342 B.S. This suit was decreed and the company proceeded to execute the same in Rent Execution Case No. 13 of 1942. The prayers made in the execution petition were a sale of other immovable properties of the judgment-debtors and in case the decretal dues were not realised thereby, the appointment of a receiver and for arrest of the persons of the judgmentdebtors. In this execution proceeding an objection was raised by the Roys giving rise to miscellaneous case No. 28 of 1942. The miscellaneous case was dismissed on 29th April 1942.

[5] Against the order of dismissal an appeal was taken to this Court by the Roys, being First Miscellaneous Appeal No. 125 of 1942. This appeal was allowed by this Court by its order, dated 28th July 1944. The miscellaneous case was remanded to the trial Court for a decision on the question whether there was in fact a merger of the dar putni held by the Roys and Dutt and secondly whether in law there could be such a merger.

[6] After the case went back, the learned Subordinate Judge by his order dated 4th December 1944, held that there could be no merger in law and secondly that the merger, if any, did not take place before the amendment of the Bengal Tenancy Act by the addition of S. 168. A to the Act. The learned Subordinate Judge did not come to any finding whether in fact there was such a merger but observed that a prayer for arrest of the persons of the judgment.debtors was possible. In the result, however, the learned Subordinate Judge allowed the objection case and dismissed the execution case started by the Midnapore Zemindary Company.

[7] The Midnapore Zemindary Company preferred an appeal to this Court, giving rise to First Miscellaneous Appeal No. 83 of 1945. The Midnapore Zemindary Company, it appears, did not prosecute the appeal, after the company had declared its intention of surrendering possession of the putni in favour of Maya Debi. The appeal was dismissed on 14th January 1946, for non-prosecution.

[8] Sometime thereafter Maya Debi made an application for restoration of the appeal. The question was heard in the presence of the learned advocates appearing on behalf of Maya Debi, the Midnapore Zemindary Company and the contesting respondents. On 11th December 1946, this Court passed an order setting aside the dismissal of the appeal for non-prosecution and restoring the appeal to file, striking out the name of the Midnapore Zemindary Company and substituting Maya Debi in its place. The question whether the interest of the decree-holder the Midnapore Zemindary Company had devolved on Maya Debi was left open for future adjudication.

[9] At the hearing of the appeal, Mr. Panchanon Ghose, appearing for the respondents objectors, raised a preliminary objection that this appeal cannot be continued by Maya Debi, inasmuch as Maya Debi is not an assignee of the decree-holder the Midnapore Zemindary Company either by operation of law, or by an . assignment in writing. This objection has to be considered first.

[10] It is true that a decree can be executed either by the decree-holder, or by an assignee of the decree either by operation of law, or by assignment in writing. The expression "assignment in writing" has been the subject of judicial interpretation in several cases to which our attention has been drawn. In the case of Mathurapur Zemindary Co., Ltd. v. Bhasa. ram Mondal, 51 Cal. 703 at p. 708: (A. I. R. (11) 1924 Cal. 661), Mukherjea J. observed that in order that the applicant for execution should be considered as an assignee of the decree, there must be a vesting of the interest of the decreeholder by operation of a statute. The view so expressed by Mukberjea J. was approved of in the case of Prabashini Deli v. Rasiklal Baner. jee, 59 Cal. 297: (A. I. R. (19) 1932 Cal. 439). In the case of Mahadeo Baburao Halte v. Anandarao Shankarao Deshmukh, 57 Bom. 513: (A.I.R. (20) 1933 Bom. 367), Rangnekar J. observed:

"A transferee by operation of law would be a legal representative of the decree-holder, or the person in whom the interest of the decree holder has become vested under a statute, e.g., the Official Assingee of an insolvent under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, or the purchaser at a Court sale in execution of a decree."

[11] In a still later case of the Bombay High Court, namely, the case of G. N. Asundi v. Virappa Andaneppa, I. L. R. (1939) Bom. 271: (A. I. R. (26) 1939 Bom. 221), a Division Bench of the Bombay High Court observed that an assignment of a decree by operation of law was confined to testamentary succession, forfeiture, insolvency and the like.

[12] The question depends on the legal position of a depositor under S. 13 (4) of the Putni Regulation who has gone into possession and thereafter relinquished possession in favour of defaulting putnidars. Section 13 (4), Putni Regulation provides that if an inferior talukdar who is not himself in default makes a deposit to stay the sale of the superior tenure, out of his private funds, the deposit

"shall be considered as a loan made to the proprietor of the tenure preserved from sale by such means, and the taluk so preserved shall be the security to the person or persons making the advance, who shall be considered to have a lien thereupon in the same manner as if the loan had been made upon mortgage."

The clause goes on to state that the depositor on his application shall be entitled "to obtain possession of the tenure of the defaulter, in order to recover the amount so advanced from any profits belonging thereto."

[11] The position of the depositor has been stated by Dr. Rash Behari Ghose in his Law of Mortgages in British India as that of a bailiff of the mortgagor without any salary. In the case of Shah Mukhun Lall v. Baboo Sree Keshen Singh, 12 M. I. A. 157: (2 Beng. L. R. 44 P. C.), the Judical Committee stated that the position of a mortgagee was akin to that of an agent of the mortgagor for collection of rent.

[12] Mr. Mukherjee, appearing for the appellants, has submitted that the position of the depositor who has gone into possession is that of a trustee, having no rights of his own but holding the putni merely for the benefit of the defaulting putnidar. He has also stated that the position of the depositor in such circumstances is that of the holder of a lien within the meaning of S. 100, T. P. Act.

[13] Mr. Ghose, appearing for the respondents, on the other hand, has submitted that the position of the depositor in such circumstances is really that of an owner for the period of his possession.

[14] In our opinion, it is difficult to describe the position of the depositor either as that of a bailiff, or as an agent, or as a trustee, or the holder of a lien, or as that of an owner. The position depends on the true view one has to take of the effect of S. 13 (4) of the Putni Regulation. His position is an anomalous one and it is difficult to define it accurately by a legal concept ordinarily known to law. Mr. Mukherjee's contention that he is merely a trustee is obviously unsound, for the depositor has rights of his own which a trustee does not enjoy. He can appropriate the income of the property in his possession with a view to get repayment of the sum advanced. He can purchase the interest of the putnidar without being subject to disabilities which attach to a trustee. At the most his position may be said to be similar to that of a trustee. Mr. Mukherjee's further contention that he is the holder of a lien having no interest whatsoever in the property is negatived by the express terms of S. 13 (4) of the Putni Regulation and is opposed to a series of decisions of this Court to which we shall advert presently.

[15] Mr. Ghose's contention that he is the owner for the time being is also untenable, for the simple reason that the mortgagor's title is never destroyed, the depositor coming into possession for very limited purpose, namely, the purpose of realising his advances. Section 13 (4) of the Regulation states that the depositor should be regarded as having advanced a loan on a mortgage. It is true that the word "mortgage" as used in S. 13 (4) of the Regulation must have the connotation which the term bore in the year 1819. In the case of Ramkinkar Banerjee v. Satya Charan Srimani, 66 I. A. 50 at p. 59: (A. I. R. (26) 1939 P. C. 14), the Judicial Committee observed that:

"Upto the time of the passing of the Transfer of Property Act the rights of mortgagors and mortgagees of land in India were subject to much controversy, though in general the law of England, subject to such modification as justice, equity and good conscience required, was recognised as the law of India also."

In the case of Gopal v. Parsotam, 5 ALL. 121

at p. 127: (1882 A. W. N. 128 F. B.), Mahmood J. observed that the definition of a mortgage in the Transfer of Property Act has not altered the law but only formulated in clear language the notions of mortgage as understood by writers of text books on Indian mortgages. It is, therefore, futile to say that the position of the depositor is simply that of a lien-holder having no interest in the property saved by the deposit or of an owner for a limited period. In the case of Abdul Aziz v. Beharilal, 41 I.C. 711: (A.I.R. (5) 1918 Cal. 466), Fletcher J. observed that a depositor under S. 13 (4) of the Putni Regulation who enters into possession has the express right of a mortgagee in possession and is the only person who can collect rents, grant receipts and give a discharge for the rents due from the subordinate holders of the putni saved by the deposit. In the case of Jakhomull Mehere v. Saroda. prosad Dey, 7 C. L. J 604 at p. 609, Mukherji J. stated the position of a depositor to be that of a usufructuary mortgagee. In the later case of Ramjitan Bhadra v. Tazuddin Kaji, 15 C. W. N. 404: (9 I. C. 489), this Court held that S. 13 (4) of the Putni Regulation gave the darpatnidar making the deposit a usufructuary mortgage of the putni in order to recover the advance from the profits of the putni. This view was assumed to be correct in the case of Midna. pur Zemindary Co. Ltd. v. Saradindu Mukhopadhaya, 52 C. W. N. 724: (A. I. R. (35) 1948 Cal. 250) and the rights of the depositor were worked out on the footing that S. 76, T. P. Act was attracted.

[16] The above discussion, therefore, shows that the position of the depositor is not that as contended for either by Mr. Mukherjee for the appellants, or by Mr. Ghose for the respondent. In our opinion his position is an anomalous one. He is in the position of a creditor who holds the defaulting tenure as if it was mortgaged to him He has an additional right to be put in posses. sion on his applying for the same. In the latter event if he obtains possession, he can retain possession of the same and collect the profits of the tenure saved from sale including rents which were unrealised at the time of his entering into possession and rents accrued during the subsistence of his possession and apply the same in satisfaction of the deposit made by him. He cap, however, give up possession even before the advance made by him is satisfied, amicably without recourse to a suit or an order of the Collector. If he gives up possession in such circumstances, his right to collect the rents already accrued or to accrue thereafter, decretal or otherwise, ceases and all such rights which had inhered in him because of his entry into posses. sion becomes vested in the defaulting tenureholder who goes into possession on the depositor vacating the same. In this view, the conclusion follows that on the Midnapore Zemindary Company giving up possession by notice and on Maya Debi's entry into such possession, the latter became entitled to the interest of the decree-holder, the Midnapore Zemindary Company, in the decree with which we are now concerned which was not realised by the Midnapore Zemindary Company and satisfaction whereof was not accorded by the Midnapore Zemindary Company. In our opinion, therefore, Maya Debi may be regarded as an assignee of the decree-holder by operation of law.

[17] The question also arises whether Maya Debi can be regarded as an assignee of the interest of the decree holder Midnapore Zemin. dary Company by assignment in writing. The question really turns on the interpretation of the notice Ex. A read in the light of the facts and circumstances of the case. The notice Ex. A recited that the tenants would be informed of the fact of relinquishment of possession by the Midnapore Zemindary Company and Tabsildars would be similarly informed. The notice required Maya Debi to take all steps to realise the rents due which, in our opinion, include the rents already accrued, or which might accrue after the notice. The notice proceeds to state that if Maya Debi so desires, the company will supply Maya Debi with a list of the rents due from the tenants upto the date of relinquishment of possession by the Midnapore Zemindary Company. Basanta Kumar Mukherjee, an officer of Maya Debi has deposed that Maya Debi has realised other decrees for rents which had been obtained by the Midnapore Zemindary Company, while the company was in possession, without any objection on the part of the company. He has also deposed that a list of the unrealised decrees obtained by the Midnapore Zemindary Company was made over to Maya Debi. It is true that the list has not been produced in Court, but this was never called for from Maya Debi. It appears from the records that the Midnapore Zemindary Company was served with a notice of the intended execution by Maya Debi in the connected case. The notice was duly served, but the Midnapore Zemindary Company did not object to the execution proceeding at the instance of Maya Debi. In this appeal, as we have already pointed out, Maya Debi was substituted in place of the Midnapore Zemindary Company without any objection on the part of the latter.

the position that the Midnapore Zemindary Company intended to vest Maya Debi with the right of realising all arrears of rent, decretal or otherwise and Maya Debi can be regarded also as an assignee of the interest of the decree-holder by assignment in writing within the meaning of O. 21, R. 16, Civil P. C. This view, in our opinion, is supported by the decision of this Court in the case of Ananda Mohan Roy v. Promotha Nath Ganguly, 25 C. W. N. 863: (A. I. B. (8) 1921 Cal. 74). In that case, there was an assignment of the property with all arrears. A decree for arrears of rent was obtained simultaneously with the execution of the deed of assignment. It was held that the decree passed to the assignee of the property under the words "assignment with all arrears". A similar view has been taken in the case of Periakatha Nadar v. Mahalingam, A. I. R. (23) 1936 Mad. 543 at p. 545 : (166 I. C. 922) where it has been held that anything in writing which transfers a decree and clearly shows an intention to do so, should be regarded as coming within the scope of O. 21, R. 16, Civil P. C.

[19] Mr. Ghose appearing for the respondents, has relied strongly on two decisions of this Court, namely, the case of Mathurapore Zemindary Co. Ltd. v. Bhasaram Mondal, 51 Cal. 703:

(A. I. R. (11) 1924 Cal. 661) and the case of Prabashini Debi v. Rasiklal Banerjee, 59 Cal. 297: (A. I. R. (19) 1932 Cal. 439). In both these cases, the assignment preceded the passing of the decree for arrears of rent. As such they do not apply to the facts of the present case.

[20] On these grounds we hold that Maya Debi is entitled to execute the decrees for arrears of rent obtained by the Midnapore Zemindary Company prior to its relinquishment of possession in favour of Maya Debi, the decree remaining unrealised at the date of such relinquishment. The preliminary objection of Mr. Ghose must, therefore, be overruled.

(21) Coming to the merits of the case we are not inclined to accept the argument put forward on behalf of the appellants that there was no merger in law. There is no evidence on the record to show that the deposit of the Midnapore Zemindary Company has been satisfied. The Midnapore Zemindary Company has, therefore, a mortgage so far as the interest of the putnidar Maya Debi is concerned. In order to constitute, merger within S. 111 (d), T. P. Act, the interest of the lessor and the lesses in the whole of the property should become vested at the same time in one person in the same right; that is to say, there must be a union of the entire interest of the lessor and the lessee or as is said, the landlord's interest must sink in the reversion.

[22] In the present case, the acquisition of the dar-putni of the Roys and Dutt by the Midnapore Zemindary Company did not have the effect of extinguishing the dar-patni so purchased. The dar-putni would not be an accession ipso jure so far as the mortgagor is concerned. The combined effect of S. 90, Trusts Act and S. 63, T. P. Act, is that till the redemption of the security, the accession, that is, the purchased property, does not become the absolute property of the mortgagor. There is, therefore, an intervening state in the Midnapore Zemindary Company, that is the depositor, under S. 13 (4) of the Regulation which prevents the union of the interest of the lessee with that of the lessor. There cannot, therefore, be a merger in the eye of law. The learned Subordinate Judge, in our opinion, was right in the view he took of the matter. In this view, S. 168A, Bengal Tenancy Act, precludes Maya Debi from proceeding against the other properties of the judgment debtors by attachment and sale thereof. It only remains for us to consider the prayer for arrest of the persons of the judgment-debtors. In so far as Probodh Kumar Roy and Pabitra Kumar Roy are concerned, they are not the original judgment debtors, but they have been substituted in place of their father Satish Chandra Roy. Mr. Mukberjee for the appellants contends that they are under a pious obligation to repay the debts of their father. This is true but only in a limited sense. A Hindu son is under no pious obligation to pay the debts of his father out of his personal assets. No personal execution can be levied as against a Hindu son on the strength of a pious obligation on the part of the son to repay the father's debt. This was so held in the case of Bissessor Ram v. Rama Kanta Dubey, 13 Pat. 7: (A. I. R. (21) 1934 Pat. 187). Moreover, this point was not raised in the Court below. The only prayer, therefore, which may be granted so far as Maya Debi is concerned is the prayer for the arrest of the persons of Kshitish Chandra Roy and Sib Chandra Roy, two of the judgment-debtors. The learned Subordidate Judge seemed to be inclined to the view that such arrest was possible. The learned Sabordinate Judge, however, did not consider whether the prayer was admissible in the view of the provisions of S. 51, Civil P. C. This last point, therefore, requires further investigation.

[23] In the result, this appeal is allowed in part, the order of the Subordinate Judge is varied and this case remitted to the Subordinate Judge for a decision as to whether the prayer for arrest of the persons of Kshitish Chandra Roy and Sib Chandra Roy can be allowed in the facts and circumstances of the present case. If necessary, he may take further evidence on this point.

[24] This appeal is allowed with costs, hearingfee being assessed at two gold moburs to be paid by Kshitish Chandra Roy and Sib Chandra Roy. [25] We shall now deal with F. M. A. No. 22 of 1948 and F. M. A. No. 145 of 1947. A few further facts have got to be stated in order to dispose of these appeals which are at the instance of the judgment-debtors.

[26] In 1933, the Midnapore Zemindary Company instituted a suit for dar-putni rent, being Rent Suit No. 38 of 1933 against the Roys, Pal Choudhurys and Dutt. This suit was decreed and in execution of that decree the dar-putni of the Roys, Pal Choudburys and Dutt was sold on 8th July 1936, and purchased by the Midnapore Zemindary Company. Thereafter in 1935, a suit for rent being Rent Suit No. 46 of 1935 was instituted by the Midnapore Zemindary Company against the said Roys, Pal Choudhurys and Dutt for the Jaistha kist of 1340 B. S. to 1342 B. S. This suit was decreed on 23rd December 1935. The present execution case, which is Rent Execution Case No. 91 of 1946, was instituted by Maya Debi claiming to be the representative of the Midnapore Zemindary Company which had obtained the decree for arrears of rent as already stated. Notice of the execution of this decree under O. 21, R. 16, Civil P. C., was served on the Midnapore Zemindary Company, as also on the judgment-debtors. The Midnapore Zemindary Company did not object to the execution proceeding at the instance of Maya Debi. One set of objection was raised on behalf of Probodh Kumar Roy and Pabitra Kumar Roy sons of Satish Chandra Roy, since deceased, giving rise to Miscellaneous Case No. 13 of 1947. The principal objections to the execution were firstly that Maya Debi had no right to execute the decree and secondly that the prayer for the appointment of a receiver which was made by Maya Debi in respect of a tenancy of Bs. 400 was not tenable, inasmuch as by a deed of gift, dated 7th February 1933, Satish Chandra Roy, Kshitish Chandra Roy and Sib Chandra Roy had made a gift of the tenancy in favour of Probodh Kumar Roy and Pabitra Kumar Roy and they are the owners of the said jama and no receiver can be appointed in respect thereof in execution of a decree obtained not against them but against their father Satish Chandra Roy and their uncles Kshitish Chandra Roy and Sib Chandra Roy.

[27] The learned Subordinate Judge rejected these objections and allowed execution to proceed by his order which is now under appeal. Against this order, First Miscellaneous Appeal No. 22 of 1948 has been filed by Probodh Kumar Roy and Pabitra Kumar Roy.

[28] Another set of objections was taken by Kshitish Chandra Roy and Sib Chandra Roy, giving rise to Miscellaneous Case No. 72 of 1947 where the objection was raised to Maya Debi having the right to execute the decree as representative of the decree-holder the Midnapore Zemindary Company. This objection was over-ruled by the learned Subordinate Judge by his order dated 13th August 1947, and against that order Kehitish Chandra Roy and Sib Chandra Roy have preferred First Miscellaneous Appeal No. 145 of 1947.

[29] We shall now take up F. M. A. No. 22 of 1948. Mr. Sen, appearing for the appellants, has contested the view of the Subordinate Judge that Maya Debi cannot be regarded as a representative of the decree-holder Midnapore Zemindary Company. For reasons already given in our judgment in F. M. A. No. 83 of 1945, this contention must be overruled.

[30] Mr. Sen further contended that the lower Court was wrong in making an order for the appointment of a Receiver in regard to the tenancy of Rs. 400 on a finding that Probodh Kumar Roy and Pabitra Kumar Roy were the benamdars of the donors namely, their father Satish Chandra Roy and their uncles Kshitish Chandra Roy and Sib Chandra Roy.

[31] The learned Subordinate Judge finds against the appellants principally on the ground that the donors were heavily in debts and that some of them had transferred their homesteads in favour of their wives. He also commented on the fact that no evidence was led on behalf of the donees that the rents were paid by the donees themselves and the payment was not made in their names on behalf of the donors. In our opinion, the learned Subordinate Judge has approached this question from an entirely wrong standpoint. The question of proving that a transaction is benami rests on the person who argues against the tenor of the deed. It is also well established that no conclusion regards the benami character of a transaction can be founded on suspicion. In this case, the evidence indicates, and the Sabordinate Judge also accepts this evidence as genuine, that the names of the donces were mutated in the landlord's sheristha, and that rents were paid by the donees to Midnapore Zemindary Company and Maya Debi. Prima facie, it must be assumed that the payment was made by the donees on their own behalf unless it was established that the persons whose names appear as payers in the rent receipts produced, are really agents acting on behalf of the donors. No attempt was made by Maya Debi to show that the persons who are said to have made the payments, did make the payments as agents of the donors. In the second place, the learned Subordinate Judge overlooks the statement in a plaint Ex. 5 filed by the Midnapore Zemindary Company claiming cent for the period Ashar 1844 to Pous 1846 B. S.

against the donees alone, namely, Probodh Kumar Roy and Pabitra Kumar Roy. In para. 2 of the plaint, it is expressly recited that the donees are in ownership and possession of the property in question, which is the property in respect of which the present application for appointment of receiver has been made. The suit for rent was decreed ex parte in favour of the Midnapore Zemindary Company on the 13th August 1940. The decree is Ex. 6. It also appears from Ex. 2 series that for a very long time rent was received by the Midnapore Zamindary Company from Probodh Kumar Roy and Pabitra Kumar Roy, the donees. The period covered by these receipts spread over the years 1343 to 1350. Exhibit 2z (7) dated 14th Chaitra 1352 B. S. shows that Maya Debi herself realised rent from Probodh Kumar Roy and Pabitra Kumar Roy the donees. The persons making the payment are stated to be Khudiram Dutt and Shyam Madhab Roy and they purport to make the payments on behalf of the donees. There is no evidence that these persons acted on behalf of the donors. Mr. Sen has also referred to an application before a Dabt Settlement Board by Satish Chandra Roy filed on 28th September 1910. In this application for settlement of debt, Ex. 3, the Midnapore Zemindary Company was stated to be one of the oreditors. In the schedule of properties annexed to the application, the property covered by the deed of gift was not mentioned. Neither the Midnapore Zemindary Company, nor the other creditors who were parties to the Debt Settlement proceedings objected to the non-inclusion of the property which was donated by Satish Chandra Roy and his brother Kshitish Chandra Roy and Sib Chandra Roy. The debts were settled on the basis of amicable settlements as would appear from the order sheet. It would further appear that the Midnapore Zemindary Company itself filed an application for settlement of debt. In that application also, the Midnapore Zemindary Company did not mention the disputed property to be a property belonging to Satish Chandra Roy. In this state of the evidence, the conclusion follows that the deed of gift executed by Satish Chandra Roy, Kshitish Chandra Roy and Sib Chandra Roy in favour of the appellants Probodh Kumar Roy and Pabitra Kumar Roy is not a benami transaction. The fact that the donors had debts at the time of the gift is not conclusive to show that the gift was a benami transaction. It was accepted as a valid gift by the Midnapore Zemindary Company, as also by the respondent Maya Debi herself.

[82] In these circumstances, the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be sustained and it must be held that no receiver can be appointed in respect of the property covered by the deed of g ft. We have already dealt with the contention raised by Mr. Mukherjee that Probodh Kumar Roy and Pabitra Kumar Roy were under a pious obligation to pay their father's debt and as such an equitable execution can be levied against their personal property. For reasons given in F. M. A. 83 of 1945, this contention cannot be given effect to. F. M. A. 22 of 1948 must, therefore, be allowed. The order of the Subordinate Judge is set aside so far as the appellants are concerned and the execution case dismissed as against them. The result of our order is that the receiver automatically stands discharged. He will now pass his accounts before the Subordinate Judge.

[33] In the circumstances of this case, we direct that in this appeal the parties will bear their own costs in this Court and the Court below.

[34] It remains for us to deal with F. M. A. 145 of 1947 in which the appellants are Kshitish Chandra Roy and Sib Chandra Roy. For reasons already given in the other two appeals which we have disposed of, the only prayer which the decree-holder is entitled to make against them is the prayer for the arrest of the persons of these judgment-debtors. For the reasons given in F. M. A. No. 83 of 1945, the order made by the Subordinate Judge in this case must be varied and this case remitted to the Subordinate Judge for an adjudication whether in the facts and circumstances of this case the prayer for arrest of the persons of the judgment debtors should be entertained or not. In this case also, we direct the Subordinate Judge to take such additional evidence as the parties may choose to adduce and thereafter dispose of the objection raised by Kshitish Chandra Roy and Sib Chandra Roy.

[35] In this appeal also, we direct the parties to bear their own costs.

Lahiri J.—I agree.

Naresh Chandra Bose - Judgment-debtor -Appellant v. Sachindra Nath Deb and others _ Decree-holders _ Respondents.

A. F. O. O. No. 111 of 1947, Decided on 24th January 1949, against order of Sub-Judge, 1st Court, Alipore, D/- 24th May 1947.

(a) High Court (Bengal) Order (1947), S. 13 (3) -Court of origin - Decree in suit for arrears of rent obtained in Court at J - Decree transferred to Court at A for execution - Application for execution - Objection to same disallowed - Appeal to Calcutta High Court in July 1947 - Passing of Indian Independence Act - Court at J included within jurisdiction of Dacca High Court - Court of origin held was Court at A and Calcutta High Court could hear appeal.

The language used in sub-s. (3) of S. 13 clearly indicates that the Court of origin is to be determined with reference to the "proceedings" then pending in the High Court, that is, the particular proceedings out of which the matter arises which are pending in the High Court. [Para 12]

For the realisation of arrear patni rent the landlords obtained a decree in the Court of Subordinate Judge, Jessore. The decree was transferred to the Alipore Court for execution at the instance of the decree-holders. The decree holders filed an application for execution in the Alipore Court. The Court allowed execution as prayed after disallowing certain objections of the judgmentdebtor. Against this order the judgment-debtor preferred an appeal to the High Court of Calcutta on 3rd July 1947. On the passing of the Indian Independence Act the district of Jessore came to be included within East Bengal within the jurisdiction of the newly constituted Dacca High Court:

Held that the proceedings in the High Court originated either on the filing of the application for execution by the decree holder in the Alipore Court or more strictly speaking, on the filing of the objection by the judgment debior. The appeal arose directly out of the miscellaneous case started on the filing of the objection; the proximate connection is with that objection and the said miscellaneous case. The more distant connection was with the filing of the execution in the Alipore Court. Passing of the decree by the Jessore Court or the filing of the application for transferring the decree to Alipore Court could not be considered to be the starting point of the "proceedings" pending in the High Court. Therefore the "Court of origin" in respect of the appeal was the Alipore Court and not the Jessore Court. As a result of the passing of the Indian Independence Act and the orders issued by the Governor General thereunder the appeal did not stand transferred to the Dacca Court and the Calcutta High Court had therefore jurisdiction to hear the appeal.

(b) Execution - Lex fori - No special provision - Lex fori exclusively governs execution proceedings.

In the absence of any special provision lex fori exclusively governs execution proceedings. Judgment and execution of judgment are considered to be integral parts of the process which the plaintiff has elected to adopt and are necessarily subject to the lex fori. De La Vega v. Viana, 1 B. & Ad. 284 and Brettilot v. Sandos, 4 Scot. 201, Ref.

(c) Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII [8] of 1885), S. 168-A-Property other than defaulting tenure -Appointment of receiver in respect thereof not barred.

Section 168-A does not debar the execution Court to direct appointment of a receiver in respect of property other than the defaulting tenure irrespective of the fact whether the tenure continues to exist or not.

(d) Civil P. C. (1908), S. 11 - Res judicala in execution proceedings - Decree for arrear patni rent - Execution - Property other than defaulting tenure attached - Subsequently S. 168-A, Bengal Tenancy Act introduced -Objection to attachment - Court holding that attachment must be withdrawn - It also holding that patni was still in existence - Application to appoint receiver -Application held was not barred by res judicata -Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII [8] of 1885), S. 168-A.

[Para 19]

In execution of a decree for arrear pathi rent property other than the defaulting tenure had been attached before S. 168-A, Bengal Tenancy Act, had been introduced. After the introduction of this section, upon the objection of the judgment debtor, the Court held that the attachment order must be withdrawn. It was also held that some only of the rent co sharers decree-holders had auction purchased the defaulting pathi in execution of subsequent rent decree and accordingly the pathi was still in existence and it had simply changed hands. It was contended that this decision at a previous stage of the execution proceedings raised a bar of res judicata and the decree-holder was not entitled to apply for levying execution of the same by the appointment of a receiver:

Held that in the previous proceedings the Court had no occasion to consider whether a receiver could be appointed in respect of the property previously attached, being property other than the defaulting tenure. It could not be held that the question in issue had actually or could have at all been raised or decided in the previous proceedings. The only point for which a bar of res judicata might be raised was on the question that the patni had not ceased to exist. The existence of the patni, however, did not disentitle the decree-holder under S. 168 A, Bengal Tenancy Act, to apply for the appointment of a receiver in aid of execution.

R. P. Mookerjee J. — This is an appeal on behalf of the judgment-debtor against a decision by the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Alipore disallowing certain objections raised under S. 47, Civil P. C., read with S. 1684, Bengal Tenancy Act.

[2] The judgment-debtor, Naresh Chandra Bose, held a patni under the predecessor-in-interest of the decree-holders opposite parties. For the realisation of arrear patni rent, the landlords obtained three decrees in succession in rent suit No. 2 of 1936 on 21st December 1936, rent suit No. 12 of 1937 on 9th April 1938 and rent suit No. 16 of 1939 on 17th February 1940. In execution of the last of the three decrees, the defaulting patni was sold on 15th January 1942 and purchased by two of the three decree-holders. The decree-holders auction purchasers sold the patni on 4th April 1944 to one Provash Mallik. All the rent suits had been brought in the Court of Subordinate Judge, Jessore and the decreeholders applied for the transfer of the decree obtained in rent suit No. 12 of 1937, to the Alipore Court within the district of 24 Parganas. After a certificate had been sent to the Alipore Court on 7th July 1938 the decree-holders levied successive executions.

(8) After the decree had been transferred to the Alipore Court and in course of execution case No. 86 of 1988 of the First Court of the Subordinate Judge, Alipore, the decree-holders attached certain properties other than the defaulting tenure, situate in Calcutta and belonging to the judgment-debtors. Subsequently there was an adjustment between the parties on 20th August 1938. It was agreed inter alia that the attachment as effected aforesaid in execution case No. 86 of 1938 would subsist till the entire decretal dues were paid off in instalments. After the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Amendment Act, incorporating S. 168A, Bengal Tenancy Act, an objection was raised on behalf of the judgmentdebtor about the legality of the continuance of the attachment above referred to. The learned Subordinate Judge at Alipore by his order dated 16th April 1913, came to the conclusion that in spite of the sale of the patni in favour of the two out of the three decree holders there had been no merger and the patni was still in existence and had not either terminated or ceased to exist. Notwithstanding the adjustment, the judgmentdeltor was held to be entitled to question the continuance of the attachment. It was further held that the premises attached were not liable to attachment and sale in execution of the rent decree already referred to. The attachment was accordingly withdrawn.

[4] Subsequently on 1st March 1947 the decreeholders again filed an application in the Alipore Court for execution of the decree in rent suit No. 12 of 1937 passed by the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Jessore. The prayer was in the alternative for attachment of the properties previously released and for the appointment of a Receiver under S. 51 (d), Civil P. C. Objections were raised by the judgment-debtor to the effect that under S. 168A, Bengal Tenancy Act, there could be neither any attachment nor could any receiver be appointed in execution. The learned Subordinate Judge overruled the objection and held (1) that S. 168a, Bengal Tenancy Act, did not preclude the decree-holder from levying execution by the appointment of a receiver and (2) the earlier order dated 16th April 1943 withdrawing the attachment then in force could not bar the present application for execution by the appointment of a receiver. The present appeal is directed against this order dated 24th May 1947.

[6] A preliminary point has been raised on behalf of the appellant questioning the jurisdiction of this Court to hear this appeal. Although on 3rd July 1947 when this appeal was presented to this Court, this High Court had no doubt jurisdiction to entertain it but on the passing of the Indian Independence Act the district of Jessore came to be included within East Bengal and since then has been under the jurisdiction of the newly constituted Dacca High Court. It is contended that in terms of Art. 13, High Court (Bengal) Order, this appeal pending there just before 15th August 1947, must be deemed to have been transferred to the Dacca High Court and this Court has now no jurisdiction to hear this appeal.

[6] Under the High Court (Calcutta) Order 1947 made by the Governor General under S. 9, Indian Independence Act, 1947, from after the appointed date, viz. 15th August 1947, the High Court in Calcutta is to continue to exist,

"save as expressly provided by S. 13, High Court (Bengal) Order 1947, for all such original, appellate and other jurisdiction as it had immediately before that date."

The relevant portion of S. 13, High Court (Bengal)

Order is in the following terms:

"(1) Subject as hereinafter provided, the High Court in Calcutta shall have no jurisdiction in respect of the territories for the time being included in the Province of East Bengal.

(3) Subject to the preceding provisions of this Article, all proceedings pending on the appellate side of the High Court in Calcutta immediately before the appointed day shall, where the Court of origin is, as from that day situated in the Province of East Bengal, stand transferred by virtue of this order to the High Court of East Bengal."

[7] Reference has also to be made to S. 4, Indian Independence Legal Proceedings Order

1947, which runs as follows:

"Notwithstanding the creation of certain new Provinces and the transfer of certain territories from the province of Assam to the Province of East Bengal by the Indian Independence Act, 1947, (1) all proceedings pending immediately before the appointed day in any Civil or Criminal Court (other than a High Court in the Province of Bengal, the Punjab or Assam) shall be continued in that Court as if the said Act had not been passed, and that Court shall continue to have for the purposes of the said proceedings all the jurisdiction and powers which it had immediately before the appointed day;

(2) any appeal or application for revision in respect of any proceedings so pending in any such Court shall lie in the Court which would have appellate, or as the case may be revisional, jurisdiction over the Court if the proceedings were instituted in that Court after the appointed day; and (3) effect shall be given within the territories of either of the two Dominions to any judgment, decree, order or sentence of any such Court in the said proceedings, as if it had been passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction within that Dominion."

[8] The present appeal was pending in the High Court on the appointed day and therefore under S. 3, High Court (Calcutta) Order, unless the exceptions as contained in the High Court (Bengal) Order, are attracted the jurisdiction of this Court has not been ousted. Under S. 13 (1), High Court (Bengal) Order, the High Court in Calcutta shall have no jurisdiction in respect of the territories for the time being included in the province of East Bengal. The properties in respect of which the decree had been obtained, which is now being executed and has given rise to the present appeal before this Court, are now admittedly within East Bengal, i. e. within Pakistan, a different State. But the properties in respect of which execution has been levied by appointing a Receiver are under the jurisdiction of the Alipore Court.

[9] In the absence of any special provision lex fori exclusively governs execution proceedings. Judgment and execution of judgment are considered to be integral parts of the process which the plaintiff has elected to adopt and are necessarily subject to the lex fori. See in this connection De la Vega v. Viana, (1830) 1 B & Ad. 281: (8 L. J. K. B. 388); Brettilot v. Sandos, (4 Scott. 201).

(Bengal) Order, the present proceedings which were pending in this High Court on the Appellate Side immediately before 15th August 1947, shall if, "the Court of origin is, as from that day situated in the province of East Bengal, stand transferred by virtue of this order to the High Court of East Bengal".

[11] It is for consideration whether "the Court of origin" of the present proceedings is the Alipore or the Jessore Court. If the relevant proceedings be deemed to have originated with the filing of either the application for execution which was filed in the Alipore Court on 1st March 1947, or with the filing of the objection under 8. 47, Civil P. C., on 3rd April 1947 in the same Court by the judgment-debtor Naresh Chandra Bose, the Court of origin will be the Alipore Court. If, on the other hand, the origin of the present proceedings be taken to be either the passing of the decree by the Jessore Court on 1st April 1938 or the application for transfer of the decree for execution filed by the decreeholder in the Jessore Court, the Jessore Court must be taken to be the Court of origin and in that event this appeal stood transferred to the High Court of East Bengal.

[12] The language used in sub-s. (3) of S. 13 clearly indicates that the Court of origin is to be determined with reference to the "proceedings" then pending in the High Court, that is, the particular proceedings out of which the matter arises which are pending in the High Court. The proceedings in the High Court originated either on the filing of the application for execution by the decree holder in the Alipore Court or, more strictly speaking, on the filing of the objection under 8. 47, Civil P. C., by the judgment-debtor. The present appeal arises directly out of the miscellaneous case started on the filing of the objection under S. 47, Civil P. C., the proximate connection is with that objection and the said miscellaneous case. The more distant connection is with the filing of the execution in the Alipore Court. Passing of the decree by the Jessore Court or the filing of the application for transferring the decree to Alipore Court cannot be considered to be the starting point of the "proceedings" now pending in the High Court. In this view the Court of origin of the present proceedings now pending before this Court is the Alipore Court. To test the conclusion so reached reference may be made to certain circumstances.

(13) If this appeal be now deemed to have been transferred to the High Court of East Bengal this appeal will be either dismissed or allowed in full; or, there may be an order for remand by the Dacca High Court for consideration of some points requiring further determina. tion. To which Court will the order of the High Court of East Bengal be communicated? The execution proceedings out of which the present appeal arises are now pending in the Alipore Court and the Dacca High Court can have no jurisdiction to issue any direction on the Alipore Court which is under the jurisdiction of this High Court. The question whether the Alipore Court can or cannot proceed to levy execution by appointing a Receiver over properties situate within the jurisdiction of the Alipore Court cannot be effectively decided by the Dacca High Court. From the practical point of view it is this High Court alone which can pass an effective order on the Alipore Court.

[14] It must not also be overlooked that there is no provision in the High Court (Bengal) Order which has the effect of withdrawing the jurisdiction of the Alipore Court in continuing to deal with the execution case which was pending in that Court from before the appointed date. On the other hand S. 4, Indian Independence Legal Proceedings Order, 1947, provides for the continu. ance of the pending proceedings in the Alipore Court and the enforceability in both the Dominions Orders passed by that Court. Interpreting the expression the 'Court of origin' to mean the Jessore Court, in the present case, will lead to such anomalies and absurdities that, even if there be any doubt as to the clear meaning of this term, under the accepted rules of interpretation such an anomalous interpretation should be avoided. Only such interpretation should be adopted as will be more reasonable and be free from anomalies.

Court is held to be the competent Court for dealing with the pending appeal from the Alipore Court and the latter Court is to have seisin over the execution proceedings; there may be difficulties as the certificate of satisfaction under 8. 41, Civil P. C., cannot be sent by the Alipore Court to the Jessore Court, the latter being now in a different State. It is not necessary for our present purpose to decide whether the Alipore Court can send a certificate to the Jessore Court to the Jessore Court to the Jessore Court is not necessary for our present purpose to decide whether the Alipore Court can send a certificate to the Jessore Court can send a certificate court can send sore Court. Even if it be held that the Alipore Court has no jurisdiction to send the certificate of satisfaction to Jessore Court that will not give rise to any practical difficulty. After a decree is transmitted by the Court which passed it to another Court the former does not lose entire seisin of the decree. Gobindanath Saha Choudhury v. Durga Narain Saha, I. L. R. (1939) 2 Cal. 173: (A. I. R. (27) 1940 Cal. 171). It can among other things sanction an agreement for payment of the decree in instalments. (Gandha. rap Singh v. Sheodarshan Singh, 12 ALL. 571 : (1890 A. W. N. 197), Paramananda Das v. Mahabeer Bossji, 20 Mad. 378 : (7 M. L. J. 89). It is further competent for the transferor Court under certain circumstances to make an order for simultaneous execution by another Court: Dwarkadas Gobindram v. Salikram Rekhraj, 17 Pat. 617 :(A. I. R. (26) 1939 Pat. 144). It must not also be overlooked that simultaneous execution, in the Court in which the decree had been passed and in other transferee Courts, is possible, but is always subject to certain safeguards. Care should be taken that no hardship is caused to the judgment-debtor. The transferor Court must also, while sending the decree to another Court for simultaneous execution, take into consideration whether any, and if so, what further order should be made as regards the limitation to be put upon the execution by the transferee Court: (Gurudas Adhya v. Jnanendra Narain Bagchi, 39 C W.N. 165 :(A.I.R. (22) 1935 Cal. 268), The relevant provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure as adapted after the Indian Independence Act, for the two Dominions are the same.

[16] The pendency of execution proceedings in the Alipore Court cannot debar the decree-holder from putting the decree into execution in the Jessore Court. It will further be possible for the judgment debtor to bring to the notice of the judgment of the pendency of the proceedings in the Alipore Court but also about the result of the execution case here. There is practically little chance or risk of the decree-holder being allowed to realise the decretal amount twice over as the judgment-debtor will have full opportunity to take necessary steps to safeguard his own interest.

[17] In my view, therefore, the "Court of origin" in respect of the present appeal is the Alipore Court and not the Jessore Court. As a result of the passing of the Indian Independence Act and the Orders issued by the Governor-General thereunder this appeal which was pending in this High Court on the appointed day did not stand transferred to the Dacca Court and this appeal must be held to be pending in this Court.

[18] We are, therefore, required to consider the merits of the appeal.

[19] As regards the interpretation of S. 168A, Bengal Tenancy Act, the point in issue has been settled in a long series of decisions of this Court. Reference need be made only to Sudhir Krishna Ghose v. Satish Chindra Hui, 48 C. W. N. 835; (A. I. R. (31) 1944 Cal. 418 F. B.). Section 168A does not debar the executing Court to direct appointment of a Receiver in respect of property other than the defaulting tenure, irrespective of the fact whether the tenure continues to exist or not.

[20] A further contention on behalf of the judgment-debtor appellant is that properties other than the defaulting tenure had previously been attached before S. 168A had been introduced by the amending Act XVIII [18] of 1940; after the introduction of this new section, the judgment debtor had raised an objection about the legality of the continuance of the attachment order. The learned Subordinate Judge 1st Court Alipore held that the attachment order previous. ly made must be withdrawn. It was also held that some only of the co-sharers had auctionpurchased the defaulting patni in execution of a subsequent rent decree and accordingly the patni was still in existence and it had simply changed bands:

"The puntoi exists and continues so far as the other landlords are concerned. Apparently there has been no merger. The putoi is liable for rent and not the exputoidar. I find that the putoi exists and continues and it has not terminated or ceased to exist."

[21] It is urged by Mr. Sanyal appearing on behalf of the judgment-debtor that this decision by the Subordinate Judge at a previous stage of the execution proceedings raised a bar of res judicata and the decree-holder was not entitled to apply for levying execution of the same by the appointment of receiver. But the previous decision was that the putni continued to exist and the premises in respect of which an attachment was subsisting must be released from attachment. The Court had no occasion to consider whether a receiver can be appointed in respect of those premises being a property other than the defaulting tenure. It cannot be held that the question now in issue was actually or could have at all been raised or decided in the previous proceedings. The only point for which a bar of res judicata may be raised is on the question that the putni has not ceased to exist. The existence of the patni, however, does not disentitle the decree-holder under the provisions of S. 1684, Bengal Tenancy Act to apply for the appointment of a receiver in aid of execution. This objection also must therefore be overruled.

[22] The appeal is accordingly dismissed. In the circumstances of this case there will be no order for costs in this Court. [23] Certificate under S. 205, Government of India Act is granted.

Dominion of India - Petitioner v. Hiralal Bothra - Decree holder - Opposite Party.

Civil Rule No. 1501 of 1948, Decided on 12th May 1949, from order of Small Cause Court Judge, Calcutta, D/- 10th August 1948.

Civil P. C. (1908), Ss. 13, 38, 39, 44 and 44A — Decree passed by Jamalpur Court on 15th May 1947 — Court of Small Causes Calcutta not to entertain application for execution of such decree after 15th August 1947—India (Adaptation of Existing Indian Laws) Order, 1947.

From after 15th August 1947 the Jamalpur Court has become, in relation to the Court of Small Causes, Calcutta, a foreign Court and the judgment on the basis of which a decree had been passed on 15th May 1947 by that Court is a foreign judgment. Accordingly provisions of S. 13 read with S. 44A will be attracted. Pakistan is not a reciprocating territory and hence the Court of Small Causes cannot entertain an application for starting proceedings in execution of such decree after 15th August 1947. Section 37 (b) cannot be relied upon in such a case. [Paras 20 and 21]

Annotation: ('44-Com.) Civil P. C., S. 44, N. 4.

Bhabesh Narayan Bose — for Petitioner.

Sushil Chandra Dutta — for Opposite Party.

R. P. Mookerjee J .- The decree holder opposite party obtained a decree on 15th May 1947, from the Court of Munsif, Jamalpur, within the district of Mymensingh, against "The Governor-General of India in Council, New Delhi and B. A. Railway, having its Head Office at 3 Koilaghat Street, Calcutta." The nature of particulars of the claim on which the decree was passed cannot be ascertained from the records. On 8th December 1947, the decree-holder applied to the Court of Munsif, Jamalpur, under O. 21 R. 6, Civil P. C., for a certificate of non-satisfaction. A certificate was issued accordingly and a copy of the order was, as applied for by the decreeholder, directed by the Munsif at Jamalpur to be sent to the Registrar, Court of Small Causes, Calcutta with a copy of the decree. This order was passed in Money Execution Case No. 86 of 1947. On 13th March 1948, the decree-holder. opposite party filed in the Court of Small Causes, Calcutta, an application for execution of the decree so transferred. Execution was prayed for against the parties as described in the decree and stated already. Objection was raised on behalf of the Dominion of India as to the maintainability of the execution proceedings in the Court of Small Causes, Calcutta and as against this Dominion. The learned Judge having overruled the said objections, the Dominion of India has moved this Court in revision.

[2] Under the Indian Independence Act, 1947, 15th August 1947 was the appointed day and as from that date two new independent Dominions, known respectively as India and Pakistan were set up. No proceedings were pending on that day either in the Jamalpur Court or in the Court of Small Causes, Calcutta. Accordingly, the only question, so far as affecting the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes, is whether after the appointed day it is competent for the Calcutta Court to entertain an application for starting proceedings in execution of a decree which had been passed by the Jamalpur Court before the appointed day. Had there been proceedings pending either in the High Court or in the Court of Small Causes, Calcutta on 15th August 1947, the legal position would have been altogether different: See Naresh Chandra Bose v. Sachindra Nath Deb, Appeal from Original Decree No. 111 of 1947 decided on 24th January 1949 : (A. J. R. (87) 1950 Cal. 8).

[3] Whether the decree in question can be executed in the Court of Small Causes, depends principally on an adjudication as to whether from after the appointed day that decree is to be considered as one passed by a domestic Court or by a foreign one. Before we refer to the relevant provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, it is necessary to point out that before 15th August 1947, both the Jamalpore Court and the Court of Small Causes, Calcutta, were Courts in British India. As such a decree passed by one of them could not then be considered by the other to be a foreign judgment. The Indian Independence Act, 1947, having brought into existence two separate and independent dominions, the Court of Jamalpore is now situate in Pakistan within the Province of East Bengal, and the Court of Small Causes, Calcutta, within the Indian Dominion.

[4] Section 18 (8), Indian Independence Act provides:

"Save as otherwise expressly provided in this Act, the law of British India and of the several parts thereof existing immediately before the appointed day shall, so far as applicable and with the necessary adaptations, continue as the law of each of the new Dominions and the several parts thereof until other provision is made by laws of the Legislature of the Dominion in question or by any other Legislature or other authority having power in that behalf."

[5] Sub-sections (1) & (2), S. 2, Indian Independence Act describe the respective territories of the two new Dominions. Sub-section (1) of S. 9 further authorises the Governor General to issue orders for bringing the provisions of the Indian Independence Act into effective operation and for removing difficulties arising in connexion with the transition to the provisions of the said Act. Under powers so reserved, two Adaptation Orders were issued—the India (Adaptation of Existing Indian Laws) Order, 1947, and the Pakistan (Adaptation of Existing Pakistan Laws) Order, 1947. The two Adaptation Orders indicate the changes which are to be introduced in all existing laws which were in force on 15th August 1947 one adapting the laws so far as the Dominion of India was concerned and the other for Pakistan.

[6] Section 18 (3), Indian Independence Act, read with the particular Adaptation Order, applicable in India and Pakistan as the case may be, determines what changes are necessary in the "existing Indian Law" and "existing Pakistan Law." The existing laws for the particular Dominion with the adaptations indicated in the two Orders above mentioned are in force from after 15th August 1947, not as they were in force throughout British India before 15th August 1947.

[7] The Code of Civil Procedure which was in force in British India upto the appointed day became enforceable thereafter in the two Dominions with the respective modifications and adaptations. For all practical purposes, there are two different Codes in existence, as from after the appointed day, applicable to the two separate and new Dominions.

(8) The learned Judge of the Court of Small Causes, Calcutta was not, therefore, correct in stating that under the provisions of India (Adaptation of Existing Indian Laws) Order laws which were in force in British India became applicable to both the Dominions or that the old Civil Procedure Code as such is still in force in both the Dominions. It was probably overlooked by the lower Court that there was a separate Pakistan Adaptation Order as there was for the Indian Dominion an Adaptation Order of existing laws. The adaptations made for the two Dominions unmistakably indicate the changes and adaptations are not in terms exactly the same for the two Dominions.

[9] I may indicate in passing that after 15th August 1947, the Code of Civil Procedure had been further amended either by the relevant Legislature or by any other competent authority, such amendments being applicable to and within the respective Dominion. One of such further adaptations in Pakistan was by the Adaptation of Central Acts & Ordinances Order 1949, published in the Gazette of Pakistan on 28th March 1949. The Indian Legislature also has amended the Code of Civil Procedure after the appointed day (as in Act VI [6] of 1948) to have effect in this Dominion.

[10] To illustrate the divergent effects by the two Adaptation Orders of 1917, as made by the Governor-General under sub-s. (3) of S. 18, Indian Independence Act, we may refer to two only of the various provisions contained in the Code of Civil Procedure, those sections being relevant for the present purpose.

[11] Section 1 (3), Civil P. C., determines the extent of the application of the Code. The Code of Civil Procedure, as adapted for the Indian Dominion, now extends under S. 1 (3) "to all the provinces of India" on the other hand the Code as adapted in 1947 for Pakistan extends "to all the provinces of Pakistan."

[12] Clause 4 (1), Pakistan (Adaptation of Existing Pakistan Laws) Order, 1947, further provides:

"Where an existing Pakistan law contains a provision defining the territories to which the law extends, or a provision referring to the territories which are within the scope of that provision, that provision shall be so adapted as to exclude any territories which on the appointed date are not to form part of the territories of Pakistan."

[13] By Cl. 4, Adaptation of Central Acts and Ordinances Order, 1949, it is further provided that in all Central Acts and Ordinances, whether specified in the schedule to that order or not, to the expression "all the provinces" when it refers to all the provinces of Pakistan, shall be added the words "and the Capital of the Federation." The provisions of this subsequent order are to have effect notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in Pakistan (Adaptation of Existing Pakistan Laws) Order, 1947 or in any other Order made under the powers conferred by sub.s. (1) of s. 9, Indian Independence Act, 1947, before the coming into force of this subsequent Order.

[14] Under sub.cl. (2) of cl. 3 of the 1949 Order "the whole of British India" occurring in any Central act, is to be substituted by the expression "all the provinces", presumably because after 15th August 1947, any reference by the Legislative Authority in Pakistan to provinces can only refer to the provinces of Pakistan. Section 1 (3), Civil P. C., as adapted by the two Orders, makes that Code, as adapted for Pakistan, extend "to all the provinces and the capital of the Federation" of Pakistan.

[15] If we now turn to S. 2 (5), Civil P. C., which defines a "foreign Court" as adapted for India this definition reads as follows:

"'Foreign Court' means a Court situate beyond the limits of all the provinces of India which has no authority in all the provinces of India and is not established or continued by the Governor-General."

[16] The same definition as adapted by the Pakistan Orders reads as follows:

"'Foreign Court' means a Court situate beyond the limits of all the provinces and the Capital of the Federation which has no authority in all the provinces and the Capital of the Federation and is not established or continued by the Governor General."

[17] The definition of "Foreign Court" as adapted for the two Dominions clearly indicates that from and after the appointed date, Courts, which were not foreign Courts before the said date, will be foreign Courts because of the two different sets of provisions as contained in the relevant clause in sub.s. (2), Civil P. C. British India, within which both the Courts in the present case were previously situated has now ceased to exist and the test for determining, at the present stage, whether a particular Court is or is not a foreign Court in relation to another it is to be ascertained and determined with reference to the law now in force and as under the altered constitutional position.

[18] In the absence of special provisions made in the constitution, as were made about certain matters when Burma was separated from the then British India and constituted as a separate State, or as coming under any one of the Orders passed by the Governor General under the Indian Independence Act, the law in one State cannot be held to be applicable or attracted in another and separate State. In accordance with the accepted principles of International law the separate Sovereign and Foreign States.

[19] Section 1 (3), Civil P. C., as adapted and made applicable to the respective Dominion, makes it clear that the provisions of this Code, as applicable to the Dominion of India, are not the same as the Code applicable to the Dominion of Pakistan. [20] To determine the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes at Calcutta to entertain or proceed with the execution of a decree passed by the Jamalpore Court we have to examine the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure as are in force in the Dominion of India. Under this Code, there is no escape from the conclusion that, the Jamalpur Court is a Court situate beyond the limits of the Dominion of India and the said Court has neither any authority in this Dominion nor is being continued by the Governor-General here. From after 15th August 1947, the Jamalpur Court has become, in relation to the Court of Small Causes, Calcutta, a "foreign Court" and the judgment, on the basis of which the decree now under execution was passed, is a "foreign judgment." Accordingly the provisions of S. 13 read with S. 44-A, Civil P. C., will be attracted. A person who intends to enforce the judgment of a foreign Court will have to satisfy the requirements as under S. 13, unless the judgment is by a Court situate within the territories of a reciprocating country as under S. 44-A of the Code. Our attention has not been drawn to any notification in the Official Gazette declaring Pakistan to be a reciprocating territory for this, section. It must accordingly be held that the Court of Small Causes, Calcutta, has no jurisdic. of a decree passed by the Jamalpur Court.

Dominions of India and Pakistan are now two

[21] A faint attempt had been made by the learned advocate appearing for the opposite party to rely on the provisions contained in S. 37, cl. (b), Civil P. C. but that is an impossible position. The Court which passed the decree has neither ceased to exist nor has ceased to have jurisdiction to execute the same.

[22] In view of the conclusion to which we have arrived that the Court of Small Causes, Calcutta, has no jurisdiction to entertain the present application for execution, it is not necessary for us to go into the next part of the defence as put forward on behalf of the Dominion of India in the written statement that the claim is not enforceable against this Dominion. If we were required to go into it, it would have been necessary for us to consider the provisions of the Indian Independence (Rights, Properties and Liabilities) Order 1947 and particularly to Art. 10 (1) of that Order. We have no materials in the records from which we may ascertain under which of the three clauses of the Article this particular claim falls. In the absence of the relevant and necessary facts, it cannot be determined whether the liability under the decree in the present case is one payable by the Dominion of India or by the Dominion of Pakistan or by the two jointly.

[23] This Rule is accordingly made absolute and the application for execution filed in the Court of Small Causes is dismissed.

[24] In view of the circumstances of this case each party will bear his own costs in this Court.

Judgment. debtor __ Respondent.

A. F. O. O. No. 138 of 1945 and A. F. A. O. Nos. 1 and 2 of 1946, Decided on 12th May 1949, against order of Sub-Judge, Murshidabad, D/- 17th March 1945 and against orders of District Judge, Murshidabad, D/- 24th July 1945.

(a) Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII [8] of 1885), S. 168A (1)(b) — "Purchaser" includes decreeholder purchaser — Equities between landlord decree-holder-purchaser and judgment-debtortenant, how determined, stated.

A purchaser in S. 168A (1) (b) includes a decreeholder purchaser and he has to deposit the amount mentioned in the sub-clause, that is, the amount by which the bid offered may fall short of the decretal amount, as also the costs of execution and the arrears of rent which have accrued due between the institution of the suit and the confirmation of the sale. The procedure of the decree-holder paying to himself money by deposit in Court was in force even before the amendment in S. 168A. The payment is to be by deposit of money in Court in one capacity, i. e., as purchaser and subsequent drawing out of the same would be in another capacity as decree-holder landlord. In any case the decree-holder landlord even when S. 168A had not been enacted got these amounts though he had to have recourse to another execution for the costs of execution etc., and another suit for the arrears of rent. The change that has been made by S. 168A has been that this extra amount has to be paid by the purchaser so that the judgment-debtor-tenant would be absolved from further liability for the same : A. I. R. (31) 1944 Cal. 199, Foll.; A. I. R. (31) 1944 Cal. 203 and A. I. R. (34) 1917 Cal. 330, Rel. on; Observation in A. I. R. (32) 1945 Cal. 425 and A. I. R. (36) 1949 Cal. 93, Dissent. [Paras 8 and 9]

In determining the equities between the parties when the landlord decree-bolder is the purchaser, the Court cannot overlook the time factor. If an order confirming the sale is passed by the Court and is allowed to remain unaffected for a long time, various persons may become interested in the said property on the basis of the order for confirmation being a valid and binding order. If such an order is to be set aside after the lapse of a long period various complications are bound to arise. When the decree-holder himself is the auction purchaser the payment of the subsequent arrears which had accrued due is to be made to himself and the said decree-holder is entitled to an order confirming sale by either paying himself or on declaring that the amount due is wiped out. When a decree-holder auction purchaser applies for the confirmation of the sale without either depositing the amount of subsequent arrears or discharging the said dues formally he must be taken to have given up his right to claim such arrears at any subsequent stage. He must be deemed to have done what he was required to do before he could get an order confirming the sale. No doubt it is a duty of the Court as well to see that the obligations which are required to be discharged by the decree-holder are duly performed. This, however, does not take the case out of the general and equitable principle that equity will consider that as done what should have been done and that a person cannot be allowed to take advantage of his own wrong. Under the circumstances when the attention of the executing Court is drawn subsequently to the fact that the sale had already been confirmed without the decree-holder auction purchaser fulfilling the conditions laid down under S. 168A, all that the executing Court need do is to record an order that the total amount of rent, cess and interest which had accrued due up to the date of confirmation is deemed to be satisfied by the decree-holder auction purobaser having applied for such confirmation and the confirmation having been made. [Paras 13, 14 and 15]

(b) Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII [8] of 1885), S. 168A

suit.

The definition of 'rent' in S. 3 (13) would clearly show that the costs decreed in the rent suit are not included in rent. Under S. 168A, the purchaser is to deposit the rent, cess and interest decreed in the suit but he is not to deposit the costs awarded by the Court and the same has to be paid by the judgment-debtor tenant and for it execution may be taken out: A. In two of them, there was an appeal to the District Judge who modified the order in execution of the Subordinate Judge and there are two second appeals against the District Judge's decision. The third is the First Miscellaneous Appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge. The Raja Bahadur of Nashipur is the owner of a Touzi No. 1152/1. There is a patni under it of which the appellant Naresh Chandra Basu has a ten annas interest while the remaining six annas belong to the Maitras. Under the patni, the Raja Bahadur has another jote. The jote fell into arrears of rent. Rent Suit No. 7 of 1933 was filed for arrears of rents from 1336 to 1339 B. S. This was decreed and an appeal was taken up to the High Court which upheld the decree on 28th May 1940. In the meantime Rent Execution Case No. 42 of 1939 had been filed and the jote in arrears was sold and purchased by the decreeholder on 21st November 1941.

[2] For the rent which fell due from 1340 to 1343 B. S. a rent suit bad been filed in 1937 being Rent Suit No. 9 of 1937 and was decreed on 23rd December 1940 for the rent in arrears as also costs amounting to Rs. 453-3-0. Rent Execution Case No. 41 of 1943 was filed on 3rd July 1943. The prayers were for attachment and sale of other properties of the judgment debtor or in the alternative for arrest of the judgment-debtor. The judgment-debtor filed Miscellaneous Case No. 64 of 1943 alleging that as Naresh Chandra Basu, the appellant was only a part owner of the patni there has been no merger and therefore the jote being still in existence there could be no attachmeent and sale of other properties. This miscellaneous case was decided in favour of the Raja Bahadur. The decree holder then prayed for the alternative mode of execution of arrest of judgment-debtor. The defence taken by the judgment debtor was that under S. 168A, Ben. Ten. Act, the rents subsequent to the period in suit in Rent Suit No. 7 of 1933, that is, rents for the year 1340 B. S. and subsequent years were no longer due, the decree-holder himself being the purchaser was to pay the same and could not realise it from the judgment debtor. This defence was taken in Miscellaneous Case No. 91, of 1944. The Subordinate Judge decided that the decree could not be executed not only for the rent but also the costs etc., as in his view costs etc., were also included within rent. He therefore dismissed the entire execution petition. This has given rise to the First Miscellaneous Appeal No. 138 of 1945. In the meantime for the rent accrued due for 1344 to 1347 B. S., Rent Suit No. 8 of 1941 had been brought. It was decreed not only for the arrears of rent but also for costs amounting to Rs. 476-6-3. Rent Execution Case No. 31 of 1944 had been filed praying for attach. ment of a debt due to the judgment debtor and arrest. The judgment debtor had objected in Miscellaneous Case No. 131 of 1944 and the Sub. ordinate Judge had dismissed the execution application by the same judgment as in the previous miscellaneous case referred to on 17th March 1945. An appeal was taken against this to the Court of the District Judge being Miscellaneous Appeal No. 35 of 1945 of the Court of the District Judge and the District Judge modified the order of the Subordinate Judge. This is the subject-matter of Second Miscellaneous Appeal No. 1 of 1946. There had been another decree for the amount of Rs. 175 8 0 for rent and Rs. 20 4 0 for costs in Rent Suit No. 8 of 1941 previously mentioned which had given rise to Rent Execution Case No. 37 of 1944 leading to Miscellaneous Case No. 132 of 1944 which was also disposed of by the same judgment by the Subordinate Judge and the prayer for execution was also dismissed on 17th March 1945. An appeal filed to the Court of the District Judge being Miscellancous Appeal No. 36 of 1945 modified the order of the Subordinate Judge and has given rise to Second Miscellaneous Appeal No. 2 of 1946. The appellant in all these three appeals before us is the decreeholder Naresh Chandra Basu and the contesting respondent is the judgment-debtor the Raja Bahadur of Nashipur now represented by the Court of Wards.

[3] In all the three appeals the main question for decision is whether 'purchaser' mentioned in 8. 168A (1) (b), Ben. Ten. Act, means also the decree holder purchaser or, in other words, has the decree holder purchaser to deposit the amount mentioned in that sub-clause? If this is so, then it is clear that the decision of the District Judge in both the miscellaneous appeals was right and in all the three appeals before us the appellant will not be entitled to succeed as far as his claim for execution of the decrees for the arrears of rent are concerned and the two second miscellaneous appeals must be dismissed in toto there being no cross appeal the decrees of the District Judge will be upheld.

[4] The second point is if the purchaser includes also the decree holder purchaser, then as the deposit was not made and the sale had been confirmed so long ago how are the equities to be adjusted? The third point in the first miscellaneous appeal is even if the decree holder is not entitled to execute the decree obtained by him for arrears of rent, can he execute the same for the costs awarded to him? In this connection the question has also been raised whether arrears of rent will include interest or damages awarded by the Court, or this will be excluded. The view of the learned Subordinate Judge was that interest or damages as well as costs could not be realised by execution. It is not disputed by the respondent that the decree may be executed for the costs. The third question relates to the question of interest. As regards the modes of execution for the balance in the first miscellaneous appeal and also in the two second miscellaneous appeals under the order of the District Judge the decree can be executed in the way pointed out in the Special Bench decision in the case of Sudhir Krishna Ghose & another v. Satish Chandra Hui & others, 48 0. W. N. 835 : (A. I. B. (31) 1944 Cal. 418). There is no dispute on this point.

(5) We shall now take up the question whether purchaser in S. 168 (1) (b), Bengal Tenancy Act includes also the decree-holder purchaser. In the case of Phani Bhusan Muhherjee v. Rai Bahadur Purna Chandra Bagchi & others. 48 C. W. N. 210 :(A. I. R. (31) 1944 Cal. 199), a Divisional Bench of this Court decided that purchaser included a decree-holder purchaser. That decision was followed by another Divisional Bench which merely cited it and accepted it as correct in the case of Sm. Swarnamanjuri Dassi v. Fakir Chandra Karar & others, reported in 48 C.W.N. 220 : (A. I. R. (31) 1944 Cal. 203). In the case of Rai Jogendra Chandra Ghose Bahadur v. Bhawani Charan Law & others. 49 C. W. N. 552: (A. I. R. (32) 1945 Cal. 425), R. C. Mitter J. cast a doubt upon the soundness of the decision of B. K. Mukherjea J. in the case of Phani Bhusan Mukherjee v. Rai Bahadur Purna Chandra Bagchi & others, 48 C.W.N. 210 :(A. I. R. (31) 1944 Gal. 199). He pointed out some considerations for which he thought that the decision could be challenged and considered that the question should be examined again in the light of his observations. It did not become necessary for him actually to decide the point finally as the case could be decided on another ground namely whether S. 168A had retrospective operation and interfered with a vested right of a decree-holder purchaser who had sold the property and purchased it himself before the amendment came into force and had the right at the time to have the sale confirmed without making the deposit. It was decided by R. C. Mitter J. that as he had acquired a vested right which was not taken away by the amendment he was not to make a deposit and on this view the case was decided and no final decision actually given as to whether decree-holder was included in the word "purchaser." In the case of Amano Barmanya v. Uma Charan Das, 50 C. W. N. 808: (A. I. R. (84) 1947 Cal. 830), this very question again came up for decision before a Divisional Bench and B. K. 1950 C/8 & 4

Mukherjea J. again re-affirmed his previous decision that the decree-holder was included in the word "purchaser". It may be mentioned that in some single Judge decisions also the decision in the case of Phani Bhusan Mukherjee v. Rai Bahadur Purna Chandra Bagchi & others, reported in 48 C.W.N. 210 :(A.I.R. (31) 1944 Cal. 199), had been accepted as correct. It can be considered that B. K. Mukherjea J. in his later decision in the case of Amano Barmanya v. Uma Charan Das and others, 50 C. W. N. 803: (A. I. R. (34) 1947 Cal. 330), had reiterated his previous decision after fully considering the doubts that had been cast upon the soundness of his previous decision by R. C. Mitter J. though he had not dilated upon the same. Again, after this decision of the Divisional Bench, Chakravartti J. in a decision in the case of Abdul Mannan v. Madhabi Ranjan Chakravarty, reported in 52 C. W. N. 627 :(A. I. R. (36) 1949 Cal. 93), doubted the soundness of the decision of B. K. Mukherjea J., but here again the case was decided upon another view of the matter and no final decision was given by Chakravartti J. In this state of authorities it is beyond question, that the decision in the case of Phani Bhusan Mukher. jes v. Rai Bahadur Purna Chandra Bagchi & others, reported in 48 C.W.N. 210 :(A. I. R. (31) 1944 Cal. 199) and accepted several times though doubted in two decisions is still a decision binding on us as a Divisional Bench. Mr. Sen has urged before us that we should refer the matter to a Full Bench for final decision.

[6] We have fully considered all the reasons given in the two doubting judgments as also the reasons given by B. K. Mukherjea J. and by R. B. Pal J. in their judgments in the case of Phani Bhusan Mukherjee v. Rai Bahadur Purna Chandra Bagchi and others, 48 C. W. N. 210: (A. I. B. (31) 1944 Cal. 199).

[7] It is clear that S. 168A, Bengal Tenancy Act, is laying down a uniform mode instead of the diverse modes of execution according as the decree for arrears of rent had the effect of a rent decree or a money decree or was under the certificate procedure. In connection with this and in order to give the tenant a protection against the landlord decree-holder himself the right of the landlord to bring to sale by attachment any other property, moveable or immovable, of the tenant judgment-debtor so long as the tenure or holding in arrears was in existence was taken away. It is immaterial that there are lacuna in the Act by which even when the tenancy has not been terminated execution may be had in other ways namely by appointment of receiver etc., as pointed out in the Special Bench decision in the case of Sudhir Krishna Ghosh and another v. Satish Chandra Hui and others, 48 C. W. N. 835 : (A. I. R. (31) 1944 Cal. 418). It is, therefore, clear that as between the judgmentdebtor tenant and the decree-holder landlord the section itself has favoured the tenant judgment-debtor. Clause (1) (a) can leave no room for doubt about this. The section as a whole whether it may or may not have indirectly benefited the decree holder landlord also, has begun with restricting the rights of the landlord decree-holder and not enlarging the same in cl. (1) (a). In view of the clear provision of cl. (1) (a) this cannot be doubted and this has been pointed out in an unreported single Judge decision of this Court of Henderson J. in Kulhame v. Kalyani Prasad, in Second Misc. Appeal No. 119 of 1941 decided on 12th March 1942.

[8] Under cl. (1) (b), it is clear that the purchaser is to deposit the amount by which the bid offered may fall short of the decretal amount as also he has to deposit the costs of execution and he has further to deposit the arrears of rent which have accrued due between the institution of the suit and the confirmation of the sale. It is clear that a benefit to the judgment-debtor tenant is intended. No doubt in the case of a stranger auction purchaser the decree-holder landlord will also be benefited. But the question is, does this show any intention as between the decree-holder landlord and the judgment-debtor tenant to show perference to the decree-holder landlord over the judgment debtor tenant? It is immaterial whether the decree-holder is also benefited in case of a stranger auction purchaser as benefit goes to both the decree-holder and the judgment debtor. Have we anything in this clause for which it may be considered that the preference shown for the judgment-debtor tenant by the Legislature by the restriction of the rights of the decree holder landlord in cl. (1) (a) had suddenly been changed and preference given to the decree holder landlord over the judgmentdebtor tenant? The words 'paid to the decreeholder' can lead to no inference that the person who is to make the payment must be some one else. The payment is not to be made directly or out of Court but the payment is to be made by deposit of the amount in Court and S. 169, Bengal Tenancy Act, regulates how the money deposited as purchase price is to be distributed. Even before the enactment of S. 168A the decreeholder was entitled to purchase the property. Under the Bengal Tenancy Act he even had not to take the permission of the Court as he had to do under the Civil Procedure Code as also the Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act. It is therefore clear that purchase by the decree-holder was within the purview of the Legislature as the decree-holder had been given a right to bid at the sale without the permission of the Court under the Bengal Tenancy Act and with such permission in the other two cases. It is further clear that under the Bengal Tenancy Act al. though the obliger and the obligee were the same when the decree holder became the auction purchaser, he had no absolute right to set off but he had to deposit the money in Court and then draw it out under S. 169, Bengal Tenancy Act. In some cases the Courts ex gratia appear to have allowed a set off. Therefore the procedure of the decree holder paying to himself money by deposit in Court was in force even before the amendment in S. 168A, Bengal Tenancy Act. It is therefore idle to contend that the decree holder could not have been contemplated as paying himself. The payment to be by deposit of money in Court in one capacity, i. e., as purchaser and subsequent drawing out of the same would be in another capacity as decree-holder landlord. Such procedure was already in vogue even in the case of a decree-holder purchaser under the Bengal Tenancy Act previous to S. 168A. If the amount of purchase price was sufficient, then the decree-holder was also entitled not only to his decretal amount but to the costs of execution and the arrears of rent which had fallen due since the institution of the suit up to the date of confirmation of the sale. He already had this advantage if the money was sufficient. Therefore no new advantage was being directly conferred upon him by the provision in S. 168A by providing for payment by the purchaser of the balance of the decretal amount, the costs of execution and the arrears of rent subsequent to the institution of the suit. All that the amendment did was to make it sure that the purchase price would not fall below an amount which would be sufficient to cover all these extra payments. So long as the amount was not sufficient the judgment-debtor tenant had to pay the same later on to the decree-holder landlord. In any case the decree-holder landlord, even when S. 168A had not been enacted, got these amounts though he had to have recourse to another execution for the costs of execution etc., and another suit for the arrears of rent. The change that has been made by S: 168A has been that this extra amount has to be paid by the purchaser so that the judgment debtor tenant would be absolved from further liability for the same. This amendment therefore benefits the tenant more than it does the decree-holder landlord. Therefore there is no reason to consider even from the point of view of the intention of the legislature that it is solely or mainly to benefit of the landlord decree holder and therefore the word "purchaser" should not include the decree-holder purchaser. Throughout the Bengal Tenancy Act as also the Code of Civil Procedure and the Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act no difference has been made between a stranger auction purchaser and a decree-holder auction purchaser and it will be very curious if in this solitary instance such a distinction was intended. The distinction if made would place the decree-holder purchaser in a doubly favourable position as compared to a stranger purchaser. In case of a decree-holder he will not only have not to pay the money due for the arrears of rent for the subsequent period but he will in addition be in a position to realise it later on from the tenant judgment-debtor himself. The result of it will be that the tenant judgment-debtors will be at the mercy of decree. holder landlord as other purchasers being at a disadvantage would be deterred from purchasing and this is likely to open the door to various kinds of abuses which we cannot for a moment, considerito have been contemplated by the legislature as at all desirable. In ordinary language "purchaser" means one who purchases and will include decree-holder if he is such a person. The ordinary clear meaning of a word certainly may be restricted or enlarged if the context or anything in the law by implication even requires such modification of ordinary meaning. In the present section we have not been able to see anything for which the word "purchaser" should not have its ordinary meaning. Neither have we been able to see anything in the whole of S. 168A to justify a conclusion that the meaning of the word "purchaser" should be a restricted one when the word includes both decree holder and stranger purchaser in all other parts of not only the Bengal Tenancy Act but of the Civil P. C. and Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act. Sales for arrears of rent covered by all the three Acts are being made uniform in this section. In none of these three Acts in any other section has the word "purchaser" been restricted merely to a stranger purchaser.

[9] After giving our fullest consideration to the doubts that were raised, which we have considered in our judgment, we are clearly of opinion that the decision in the case of Phani Bhusan Mukherjee v. Rai Bahadur Purna Chandra Bagchi and others, 48 C.W.N. 210: (A.I.R. (31) 1944 Cal. 199) is a correct decision and there is absolutely no need for reference to a Full Bench. We agree with and accept the same and hold that a purchaser in S. 168A (1) (b), Bengal Tenancy Act, includes a decree-holder purchaser.

[10] The two second miscellaneous appeals have raised only this question and as this is found against the appellant the two second miscellaneous appeals are dismissed.

[11] Coming now to the special question in the first miscellaneous appeal as to what is meant by rent, that is, whether costs decreed in the suit are to be included or excluded we are of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge overlooked the definition of 'rent' in S. 3 (13). That definition would clearly show that the costs decreed in the rent suit are not included in rent. This amount is not payable by the purchaser and for this amount there may be an execution taken out. In the decision in Amano Barmanya v. Uma Charan Das & others, 50 C. W. N. 803 : (A.I.R. (84) 1947 Cal. 330), a Divisional Bench has already decided that the auction purchaser is liable only for the actual amount of the rent and not for the entire decretal amount. It has been decided already by two Divisional Benches in the case of Sri Sri Iswar Joy Chandi Thakurani & ors. v. Manmatha Nath Das, 49 C. W. N. 756 : (A. I. R. (83) 1946 Cal. 88) and in the case of Bankim Chandra Chatterjee & others v. Gour Mohan Mullick, 50 C. W. N. 261, that rent includes cess. Under S. 161 (c), Bengal Tenancy Act, the words 'arrears' and 'arrears of rent' shall be deemed to include interest decreed under S. 67 or damage awarded in lieu of interest under sub-s. (1) of s. 68. This is the special meaning given for the purposes of Chap. XIV and S. 168A as also S. 169 appear in Chap. XIV. Bengal Tenancy Act. The deposit made under S. 168A (1) (b) is distributed under S. 169 and it has already been decided in connection with S. 169 (1) (c) that "any rent which may have fallen due in respect of the tenure or holding between the institution of a suit and the date of the confirmation of the sale 'includes interest on such rent'."

There was first an obiter about this in the case of Moharajadhiraj Bejoy Chand Mohatab Bahadur v. S. C. Mukherjee, 11 0. W.N. 1106, which was dissented from in 12 C. W. N. exliv (Notes portion) and finally it was so decided in the case of Prafulla Nath Tagore & ors. v. Matabaddin Mandal & ors., 22 C. W. N. 323 : (A. I. R. (5) 1918 Cal. 965). This view was again confirmed in the case of Ram Lal Das v. Bandiram Mukhopadhya, 26 C. W. N. 511: (58 I. C. 993). It is, therefore, clear that the purchaser, is to deposit the rent, cess and interest decreed in the suit but he is not to deposit the costs awarded by the Court and the same has to be paid by the judgment-debtor tenant and for it execution may be taken out.

[12] We have now to consider the last remaining question as to how the equities in the present case are to be worked out. In the various decisions already referred to the procedure adopted had not always been uniform. It is not necessary for our present purpose to consider the position when a person other than the decree-holder becomes the auction purchaser.

parties we cannot overlook the time factor. If an order confirming the sale is passed by the Court and is allowed to remain unaffected for a long time, various persons may become interested in the said property on the basis of the order for confirmation being a valid and binding order. If such an order is to be set aside after the lapse of a long period various complications are bound to arise. Reference in this connection may be made to Ss. 159 (2), 167 and 174A (1), Bengal Tenancy Act. In working out the equities we must not forget the complications which will ensue if the order for confirmation be set aside now.

(14) The objection raised to the order for confirmation is dependent on certain laches on the part of the decree holder himself. Illegality in question is that the decree-holder did not do what he was required to do under the provisions of the Act. No doubt it has been observed in some of the decisions that it is a duty of the Court as well to see that the obligations which are required to be discharged by the decree-holder are duly performed. This, however, does not take the case out of the general and equitable principle that equity will consider that as done what should have been done and that a person cannot be allowed to take advantage of his own wrong.

[15] When the decree-holder himself is the auction purchaser the payment of the subsequent arrears which had accrued due is to be made to himself and the said decree-holder is entitled to an order confirming sale by either paying himself or on declaring that the amount due is wiped out. When a decree-holder auction purchaser applies for the confirmation of the sale without either depositing the amount of subsequent arrears or discharging the said dues formally he must be taken to have given up his right to claim such arrears at any subsequent stage. He must be deemed to have done what he was required to do before he could get an order confirming the sale. Under the circumstances when the attention of the executing Court is drawn subsequently to the fact that the sale had already been confirmed without the decree holder auction purchaser fulfilling the conditions laid down under S. 168A, Bengal Tenancy Act, all that the executing Court need do is to record an order that the total amount of rent, cess and interest which had accrued due up to the date of confirmation is deemed to be satisfied by the decree holder auction purchaser having applied for such confirmation and the confirmation having been made. Unless the decree-holder auction purchaser files an application entering satisfaction of the dues which had so accrued the Court is, in our opinion, competent to declare the said dues as having been satisfied by implication. The learned Subordinate Judge was therefore right in holding that the subsequent arrears up to the confirmation of sale and for which decrees might have been obtained should be taken as having been fully satisfied.

[16] Although our decision is that the amount of arrear of rent, cess and interest had been satisfied on the confirmation of the sale it is to be noticed that the decrees for the subsequent period had been obtained by the landlord before the sale of the tenure in execution of the decree in Rent Suit No. 7 of 1943. The cost which had been decreed in favour of the landlord in the subsequent rent suits were not wiped away by the order confirming the sale and so the same may be now realised by execution. We do not express any opinion on the question as to what the legal position will be when the auction purchaser is some one other than the decree holder.

[17] The order of the Subordinate Judge in the first miscellaneous appeal will, therefore, be modified and the execution case dismissed by him will be restored and the decree holder will be entitled to apply for execution of the decree only for the amount due for costs awarded in the suit, the rest of his claim being taken as satisfied by set off and the two second miscellaneous appeals will be dismissed.

[18] The respondent will get his costs in all the three appeals from the appellant as he has substantially won in all appeals but there will be one set of hearing fee.

Abdul Sammad — Plaintiff—Appellant v. Jitoo Chowdhury—Defendant—Respondent.

A. F. A. D. No. 982 of 1940, Decided on 12th May 1949, against decree of Addl. Dist. Judge, Zillah 24 Parganas, D/- 6th March 1940.

(a) T. P. Act (1882), S. 106—Plaintiff taking some land on non-agricultural lease from uncles and sub-leasing some to defendant for residential purposes — Upon death of uncles plaintiff inheriting their interest and amalgamating them with some non-agricultural holding inherited by him from father—Defendant held did not become under-raiyat, within the meaning of S. 4 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, sub-lease being non-agricultural at inception—Notice under S. 106 held valid—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII [8] of 1885), S. 4 (3).

Plaintiff took a non-agricultural lease of 9 cottas of land under a patta from his two uncles and out of this area of 9 cottas the plaintiff granted a sub lease to the defendant for three cottas for residential purposes. On the death of the plaintiff's lessors who were his uncles the plaintiff inherited their interest. That interest was that of a raigat. The plaintiff served a notice on the defendant to quit under S. 106, T. P. Act. The defendant denied the validity and sufficiency of the notice and alleged that the tenancy was governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act and that on plaintiff's inheriting his uncles' interest, the plaintiff became a raigat and the leasehold interest held by him was merged in the higher right with the result that the defendant became an under raigat under the plaintiff no matter whether the sub-lease at its inception was for agricultural or non-agricultural purposes. It was found that the uncles had the interest of a non-sgricultural bastu tenant in their holding of 9 cottas. It was also found that the non-agricultural holding of 9 cottas belonging to the uncles of the plaintiff which was inherited by the plaintiff was amalgamated with certain other agricultural holdings inherited by him from his father and all the holdings were converted into one holding and recorded as raiyat! mokurari in the record of rights:

Held that the sub-lease in favour of the defendant was non-agricultural at its inception and it retained that character throughout and that the notice under T. P. Act was valid: 8 C. W. N. 454, Disting.

[Para 7]

Held also that the defendent had not become an under-raiyat. A person would be under-raiyat within the meaning of S. 4 (3), Bengal Tenancy Act, only if he held under a raiyat at the inception of his lease: 8 C. W. N. 454, Expl.; A. I. R. (28) 1941 Cal. 606, Rel. on.

Hemendra Chandra Sen and Panchanan Pal

- for Appellant.

A. D. Mukherjee _for Respondent.

Lahiri J .- The suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted by the plaintiff for ejectment of the defendant from cadastral survey plot No. 633 of Khatian 587 Mouza Garulia on termination of the defendant's tenancy by a notice to quit under S. 106, T. P. Act. The Court of appeal below dismissed the suit and hence this appeal is by the plaintiff.

[2] The plaintiff's case is that he took a lease of 9 cottas of land under a patta dated 19th Pous 1808 (3rd January 1902) from his two uncles Sk. Osman and Sk. Meajan and out of this area of 9 cottas the plaintiff granted a sublease to the defendant for three cottas for residential purposes; in the record of rights finally published in 1931 the defendant was recorded as an under raiyat with a right of occupancy. This entry was challenged by the plaintiff as wrong. The plaintiff further alleged that he served a notice to quit under S. 106, T. P. Act, on 21st Jaistha 1342, by registered post and the defendant accepted the same with the result that the tenancy was determined with effect from 1st Sravan 1342.

[3] The defendant denied the validity and sufficiency of the notice and alleged that the tenancy was governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act and that he took the lease for agricultural purposes. The Court of first instance decreed the suit and then after passing through various stages the suit was finally dismissed by the Additional District Judge, 24-Parganas, by a judgment dated 6th March 1940, upon the finding that on the death of the plaintiff's lessors who were his uncles the plaintiff inherited their interest and as that interest was that of a raiyat the plaintiff became a raiyat and the leasehold interest held by him was merged in the higher right with the result that the defendant became an under-raigat under the plaintiff. As the plaintiff himself became a raiyat the sub-lease granted by him to the defendant made the defendant an under-raiyat, no matter whether the sub-lease was for agricultural or non-agricultural purposes. For this proposition of law the Additional District Judge relied upon the case of Batu Ram Roy v. Mahendra Nath Samanta, decided by Mitra J., and affirmed on Letters Patent Appeal by Maclean C. J. and Pargiter J.: vide 8 C. W. N. 454.

[4] Against this decision the plaintiff has filed this second appeal, the hearing of which under O. 41, R. 11, Civil P. C., was stayed by an ex parte order dated 7th April 1940, under S. 3, Bengal Non-agricultural Tenancy (Temporary Provisions) Act. On 2nd December 1947, that ex parte order of stay was vacated and the appeal was admitted under O. 41, R. 11. On 20th July 1948, the appeal was taken up for final hearing by B. K. Mukherjea J. before whom it was argued by the appellant that if the tenancy created by the potta dated 19th Pous 1808 was a non-agricultural tenancy at its inception, the subsequent event by which the rights acquired under the potta merged in the superior rights of the lessor, could not affect the status of the subordinate tenant. Though this was an important question in the case it was not raised in the Court below and Mukerjea J. accordingly acting under O. 41, R. 25, Civil P. C., remitted the following issue to the lower appellate Court : "What was the status of Osman at the time when the potta of 1808 was granted." The lower appellate Court was directed to take fresh evidence and record a finding on the point.

[5] In pursuance of the direction given by Mukherjea J. the lower appellate Court has recorded the following findings:

(a) "On a comparative estimate of the evidence adduced by the two parties, I am of opinion that the appellant's contention that the holding of Osman and Meajan measured only 9 cottas and that the entire holding was a non-agricultural bastu holding is true.

(b) I hold from the evidence on record that Osman and Meajan had the ir terest of a non agricultural bastu tenant in their holding of 9 cottas to which the disputed land appertains and their interest was not that of a raiyat."

[6] The lower appellate Court has further found that this non agricultural holding of 9 cottas belonging to Osman and Meajan was inherited by the appellant Abdul Samad and amalgamated with certain other agricultural holdings inherited by him from his father and all the holdings were converted into one holding bearing a consolidated rent of Rs. 6 and recorded as raiyati mokurari in the record of rights.

[7] Mr. Sen appearing for the appellant has argued that in view of the finding arrived at by the Court of Appeal below after the order of remand made by Mukherjea J., it must be held that the tenancy of the defendant is governed by the Transfer of Property Act. The effect of the judgment of Mukherjea J. is that the principle of the decision of Batu Ram Roy's case, 8 C. W. N. 454, will apply only if the tenancy of Osman and Meajan be found to be an agricultural tenancy on the date of the potta dated 19th Pous 1308. The finding, however, is that the tenancy of Osman and Meajah was not agricultural tenancy on the date of the potta, but that it became an agricultural tenancy on a subsequent date. Upon this finding it seems to us that Babu Ram Roy's case, 8 C. W. N. 454, has no application. The sub-lease in favour of the defendant was non-agricultural at its inception and it retained that character throughout.

[8] Mr. Mukberjee appearing for the respondent has strenuously challenged the findings arrived at after remand on the ground that they were beyond the scope of the order of remand. The argument is that it had been found by the lower appellate Court before the remand that the amalgamation took place not with the paternal jama of the plaintiff but with other jamas inherited from the plaintiff's uncles Meajan and Osman, and it was not, therefore, open to the plaintiff after the remand to show that a part of the jama recorded in C. S. Plot No. 583 belonged to the plaintiff's father and another part belonged to his uncles. We are not impressed by this argument because we think that the scope of the order of remand was wide enough to cover an enquiry into the question as to who were the persons from whom the plaintiff inherited the different jamas. The finding as to the mode of amalgamation is only incidental to the main issue that was remitted for investigation, viz, what was the status of Osman and Meajan on the date of the potta, and after having arrived at the necessary finding on that issue, the learned Subordinate Judge went into the question of amalgamation only for the purpose of explaining the entry in the record of rights. The dakhila, Ex. 8 (c) shows that the amalgamation did not take place even on 20th Chaitra 1319. If that be so, the defendant must be held to have taken a sub-lease from a non-agricultural lessor for non-agricultural purposes and his rights will accordingly be governed by the Transfer of Property Act.

[9] Mr. Mukberjee has argued in the second place that according to the definition of an under-raiyat as given in S. 4 (3), Ben. Ten. Act. the defendant is an under-raivat inasmuch as he held immediately under the plaintiff who is at present a raiyat though the plaintiff was not a raiyat at the time when he (plaintiff) took lease from Osman and Meajan in 1908, or at the time when he granted the sub-lease to the defendant. This argument is open to a two-fold objection: in the first place it makes the order of remand made by B. K. Mukberjea J. altogether nugatory as that order was made on the footing that the present status of the plaintiff was immaterial and the defendant's status would be determined by the status of the plaintiff on the date of the potta of 1808. After having submitted to that order and having unsuccessfully adduced evidence on that point, it is hardly open to the defendant to say now that the rights of the defendant should be determined by the present status of the plaintiff. But there is a more serious objecttion to this argument and that is this: In the case of Arun Kumar Sinha v. Durga Charan Basu, 45 C. W. N. 805 : (A. I. R. (28) 1941 Cal. 606), Mukherjea and Roxburgh JJ. pointed out that the rule of law laid down in the case of Babu Ram Roy v. Mahendra Nath Samanta, 8 C. W. N. 454, that a person holding under a raiyat will be an under-raiyat even if he holds it for non-agricultural purposes is open to serious exceptions. But their Lordships did not refer the matter to a Full Bench simply because it had remained unchallenged for a considerable time. This criticism of Babu Ram Roy's case, (8 C. W. N. 454) inclines us to put a narrow construction upon the words of S. 4 (3), Ben. Ten. Act, and to hold that a person will be an underraiyat only if he holds under a raiyat at the inception of his lease. The interpretation sought to be put upon S. 4 (3), Ben. Ten. Act, by Mr. Mukherjee would have the effect of extending the principles of the decision in Babu Ram Roy's case, (8 C. W. N. 454) which we are not prepared to do in view of the criticism by Mukherjea J. in the case of Arun Kumar Singha v. Durga Charan Basu, 45 C. W. N. 805: (A. I. R. (28) 1941 Cal. 606).

[10] It remains for us to consider the question whether the present appeal is liable to be stayed under the provisions of S. 3, Bengal Nonagricultural Tenancy Act of 1940. It is conceded that the defendant is a non-agricultural tenant within the meaning of the Act. But Mr. Sen has argued that the appeal by the landlord is neither a suit nor a proceeding within the meaning of S. 3 and is not liable to be stayed. Mr. Mukherjee on the other hand has contended that the appeal is a continuation of the suit and in any case it is a proceeding. The decisions on the point are not uniform. In the case of Jahur Mia v. Abdul Gaffur, 45 C. W. N. 603: (A. I. R. (28) 1941 Cal. 452), Biswas J. held that the words "suit or proceeding" in S. 3 did not include an appeal, but Mukherjea J. who agreed with the order made by Biswas J. on a different ground, was not prepared to go so far as to say that the word "proceeding" did not include an appeal. In the case of Prankrishna Mukherjee v. Jnanada Roy, 45 C. W. N. 967: (A.I.R. (29) 1942 Cal. 47), Edgley and Biswas JJ. approved of the view taken by Biswas J. in Jahur Mia's case, 45 C. W. N. 603 : (A. I. R. (28) 1941 Cal. 452). Prankrishna Mukherjee's case, 45 C. W. N. 967 : (A. I. R. (29) 1942 Cal. 47) was followed by Edgley and Biswas JJ. in the case of Howrah Jute Mills v. Bakshi Sk. Napit, civil Rules 1529 to 1629 of 1940 (unreported) decided on 5th January 1942. In Ram Charit Bhakat v. Tetari Kumari Kuor, A. I. R. (29) 1942 Cal. 136: (201 I. C. 516), Henderson J. sitting singly agreed with the view of Biswas J. that the expression "suit or proceeding" in S. 3 does not include an appeal. Lastly, in Rukmini Mahesri v. Prahlad Chandra Agarwalla, 47 O W. N. 702: (A.I.R. (82) 1945 Cal. 50), Biswas J. sitting singly reviewed all the authorities and reaffirmed his view that the expression "suit or proceeding" does not include an appeal. In this state of the authorities, particularly in view of the two decisions of Division Bench in the cases of Prankrishna Mukherjee v. Jnanada Roy. 45 C. W. N. 967 : (A. I. R. (29) 1942 Cal. 47), and Howrah Jute Mills v. Bakshi Sk. Napit, (Civil Rules 1529 to 1629 of 1940) we are constrained to hold that the present appeal is not liable to be stayed under S. 3, Bengal Non-agricultural Tenancy Act of 1940.

[11] We have already stated that the hearing of the appeal under 0. 41, R. 11 was stayed under that Act by an ex parts order dated 7th April 1941 which was vacated by another exparts order dated 2nd December 1947. It is remarkable that when eventually the appeal was taken up for final hearing by B. K. Mukherjea J. on 20th July 1948, the respondent did not take any objection to the hearing under S. 3, Bengal Non-agricultural Tenancy Act, and submitted to the order of remand. But in view of the fact that the question now raised before us by Mr. Mukherjee is a question affecting the jurisdiction of the Court, we have allowed him to argue it and decided to give our decision on the merits of his argument.

[12] The result of our decision is that this appeal must be allowed, the judgment and decree of the Court of appeal below are set aside and that of the Munsif restored and affirmed.

[13] In the circumstances of the case we direct that the parties should bear their own costs throughout.

Ram Protap Kayan — Defendant—Appellant v. The National Petroleum Co. Ltd. — Plaintiff — Respondent.

A. F. O. D. No. 335 of 1944, Decided on 30th June 1949, against decree of Sub-Judge, 4th Court, Zillah 24 Parganas, D/- 26th June 1944.

(a) T. P. Act (1882), S. 53A — Rights of transferor — Section 53-A sanctions enforcement by transferor of his contractual rights against transferee—Exercise of his rights is not dependent upon fulfilment of conditions mentioned in S. 53-A — Unregistered lease of premises for 5 years — Contract partly performed — Lessee bound to vacate possession on expiry of period.

So far as the transferee is concerned, S. 53-A confers a right on him to the extent that it imposes a bar on the transferor. But this is only a right to protect his possession against any challenge to it by the latter contrary to the tenor of the contract or the instrument of transfer.

So far as the transferor is concerned, when the section says that the transferor shall be debarred from enforcing any right against the property other than a right expressly provided by the terms of the contract, by plain implication it sanctions the enforcement by the transferor of a right which has been so provided. And there is obvious justice in this, for if the transferor is to be held to his bargain with the transferee in respect of the property, it is only just that he should be given liberty to enforce his contractual rights against the latter in respect of it. It may be said that this is not the conferment of a right but the saving of an existing right. But whether it is the one or the other, it secures the result of enabling the transferor to enforce his contractual rights against the transferee in respect of the property.

This right of the transferor is not dependent upon fulfilment of all the conditions mentioned in the section. The terms of the section clearly indicate that they cannot be conditions precedent to the enforcement of the transferor's right; they are only conditions precedent to the imposition of the bar against the transferor and consequently conditions precedent to the accrual of the transferee's right to protect his possession. No doubt, if the transferor wants to enforce against the transferee any right in respect of the property which has been expressly provided by the contract, he must previously have put the transferee in possession in part performance of the contract. And ex hypothesi there is a written contract containing reasonably clear terms as to the transfer, because what the transferor seeks to enforce is a right provided by such a contract : A. I. R. (28) 1941 Bom. 346, Dissent. [Para 15]

If this were not so, the transferor's rights would become quite illusory and in fact would cease to be rights at all because they could always be defeated by the transferee by the simple device of refusing to perform his part of the contract. [Para 15]

Where under an unregistered lease for 5 years in respect of certain premises, the lessee takes possession of the premises in performance of the contract and remains in possession for the full period of the agreement, he is bound to vacate the premises on the expiry of the period and his possession becomes wrongful thereafter. The right of the lessor to have the premises returned to him is not dependent upon the willingness of the leasee to restore it. [Para 18]

(b) Registration Act (1908), Ss. 2 (7), 17 (d) and 49 — Agreement to lease for 5 years shed and godown which would be provided — Agreement does not operate as present demise and is not lease — Even if deed is lease, it is admissible as proof that acts were done in part performance of it - Deed if available as evidence of contract for S. 53-A, T. P. Act (Quære).

An agreement for lease for 5 years in respect of a shed and godown, which merely says that a suitable shed and a godown would be provided on certain lands and does not specify any particular shed or godown, does not operate as a present demise and therefore is not a lease, and, therefore, does not require registration: A. I. R. (6) 1919 P. C. 79, Foll. [Paras 19 & 20]

Even if it can be interpreted as creating a present and immediate interest in the premises and therefore requiring registration, where the agreement is sought to be used not only as evidence of the contract for the purposes of S. 53A but also as proof that acts were done in part performance of it, the agreement is admissible under the proviso to S. 49. [Paras 20 & 21]

Quære: Does the proviso to S. 49 permit the document being used as evidence of the contract for the purposes of S. 53 A, T. P. Act, apart from any question of any acts having been done in part performance of it? Or, does it mean that the document can be used as evidence of the contract only when there have been acts done in part performance of it, the proof of the contract being merely an ingredient in the proof that the acts done were part performance of the contract? (c) T. P. Act (1882), Ss. 106 and 107 - Scope of - There is no conflict or contradiction between them. (Obiter).

Obiter : Section 107 deals with the creation of a tenancy from year to year by act of parties. Section 106 provides for the case where the lease is for manufacturing purposes but the contract between the parties is silent as to its duration. In such a case the law supplies the omission and enacts that the lease shall be deemed to be a lease from year to year. The attachment of this incident to the lease by operation of law is a very different thing from the creation of a lease from year to year by act of parties. The two sections deal with entirely different matters and there is noconflict or contradiction between the two.

(Obiter).

Obiter: If the effect of the instrument is to give the holder an exclusive right of occupation of the land, though subject to certain reservations or to a restriction of the purposes for which it may be used, it is in law a demise of the land itself. If the contract was merely for the use of the property in a certain way on certain terms while it remained in the possession and under the control of the owner, it is a licence.

Exclusive possession would be taken to have been given if the nature of the acts to be done by the grantee was such as required a right of exclusive occu-

An agreement in respect of a shed and godown provided that the grantee was to maintain the shed and godown duly and was to return them on the expiry of the term in the same condition in which they were handed over to him and that he could even make alternations in them subject to the consent of the grantor. Costly machineries were to be installed therein by the grantee at his own cost and a regular factory for the manufacture of containers was to be started :

Held that the provisions and the object of the grant pointed to the fact that exclusive possession was to be given to the grantee. The grant, therefore, operated as a lease.

Chandra Sekhar Sen, Smriti Kumar Roy Choudhury and Rannjit Kumar Bose-for Appellant. Paresh Nath Mukherjee and Siti Kantha Lahiri - for Respondent.

P. N. Mitra J. — The suit out of which this appeal arises was commenced by the respondent, the National Petroleum Co. Ltd. against the appellant Ram Protap Kayan for ejectment of the latter from a corrugated sheet shed and godown forming part of premises No. P.2 Paharpur Siding Road of the Port Commissioners of Calcutta in King George's Dock. There was also a claim for damages for wrongful occupation which was provisionally laid at Rs. 9400, The respondent's case was that its predecessorin-interest the National Petroleum Company (hereinafter referred to as the company) entered into business relationship with the appellant, the terms whereof were set out in an instrument of agreement executed by both the parties on sist March 1934, that one of the terms of the said agreement was that the company would provide for the appellant a suitable shed and godown at a monthly rent of Rs. 50 in which the appellant would fit up his tin manufacturing machines and of which he would remain in occupation for a period of five years and would return vacant possession at the end of it, that in pursuance of the agreement the company let out the shed and godown in suit to the appellant from 1st April 1934 that the period of five years expired on the expiry of the 1st April 1939 and that as the appellant then refused to vacate the premises, he was in wrongful occupation as a trespasser since then.

(2) In his written statement the appellant admitted the letting to him from 1st April 1934. The defence taken by him that is now material was that the agreement, which was unregistered, did not and could not create a lease for a term of five years, and that as the letting to him was for manufacturing purposes, he had in law a tenancy from year to year terminable by six months' notice to quit ending with the year of the tenancy. As no such notice had been served, he continued to be a tenant and could not be regarded as a trespasser.

[3] While the suit was pending in the Court below the premises were requisitioned and taken over by the Government in October 1942. The prayer for ejectment, therefore, became unnecessary, but the prayer for damages remained and called for determination of the principal question which emerged for consideration in the case, viz., whether the appellant was bound to vacate the premises at the end of the term of five years under the agreement of 31st March 1934 or whether he was, in the circumstances of the case, a tenant from year to year whose tenancy was only determinable by six months' notice to quit ending with the year of the tenancy.

[4] The agreement of 31st March 1934 which has been marked as Ex. 2 in the case, was stated to be entered into between the National Petroleum Company and Messrs Gajanand Ram Protap and Company (under which name and style the appellant was carrying on business) for a period of five years. There are fifteen paragraphs in this agreement, but those that deal with the letting to the appellant are paras. 1 and 3 and are in these terms:

"1. The Second Party agrees to pay in foll and (return) the documents of all Tin Manufacturing machines purchased by the First Party from Messrs E. W. Bliss and Company, America, as per their Invoice No. 193 dated 15th January 1934, and pay the Custom duty, and Port Charges etc. Having met all payments concerning these machines, the second party will become the absolute owner of the said machinery.

The Second Party will fit up the machinery at their cost in a suitable shed to be provided by the First Party on a monthly rental of Rs. 50 (Rupees fifty only) inclusive of all outgoings and taxes; such shed is to be erected and built before the arrival of the machinery by the First Party on the lands leased out to the First Party by the Port Commissioners at King George's Dock."

"3. The shed and godown rented out on a monthly basis for a term of five years, will be duly maintained by the Second Party and returned back on the expiry of the period in the same condition as handed over to the Second Party by the First Party. Any changes that the Second Party may choose to make in the said shed and godown will be subject to the written consent of the first party, Port Commissioners Factory Inspector and Municipal Corporation but such consent shall not be unreasonably withheld."

[5] The second paragraph provided for the purchase by the appellant of a soldering machine which had been ordered by the company from a London firm, and the remaining paragraphs embody the terms of the contract between the parties relating to the manufacture of petrol containers by the appellant and their supply by him to the company. The provisions of some of these paragraphs may briefly be referred to. Thus, para. 5 provided that all empty tins required by the company in its entire business during the continuance of the agree. ment would be supplied by the appellant from his factory in the shed provided by the company, and, if the demand exceeded the capacity of the factory, from his factory in the town or otherwise as convenient to him. The sixth paragraph dealt with the contingency of dislocation of work in the factory and also provided for the supply of tin plates of suitable size and quality (obviously by the company) from each of which a specified number of tins were to be manufactured by the appellant. Paragraph 8 gave. liberty to the appellant to do outside work if the company was not able to place orders to the full extent of the capacity of the factory. By para. 9 the appellant undertook not to do any work for the competitors of the company and not to sell the branded goods to the agents of the company without its express sanction. By para, 10 the appellant undertook to use a soldering composition of 50% lead and 50% Block Tin and to take particular care that the tins manufactured by it might not be leaky and so reflect on the reputation of the company. By para. 14 the manufacturing cost allowance to the appellant was agreed to be ./1/1 (one anna one pie) per four gallon tin delivered to the company at its installation at King George's dock. It is unnecessary to go further into the provisions of the agreement.

[6] The learned Subordinate Judge held that as no particular premises was mentioned in the document and it was simply stipulated that premises suitable for the purpose of manufacture of tin canisters close to the company's own business concern would be provided, "the agreement could not be considered to be a lease properly so called." "Nevertheless", he said, "it was an agreement by which the parties were bound. In pursuance of this agreement the premises described in Sch. A (of the plaint) were made over to the defendant." He went on to say that "if the plaintiff had served six months' notice calling upon the defendant to vacate within the period of five years fixed by Ex. 2 (the Agreement) the plaintiff could not have ejected the defendant as the defendant would have taken shelter under S. 53A, T. P. Act, and also under the terms of Ex 2. In view of the Agreement the plaintiff could not have ejected the defendant within the period of five years fixed by Ex. 2. In view of the existence of the document the defendant could occupy the premises for a period of five years only. The defendant solemnly undertook to vacate the premises after the expiry of a period of five years. The effect of this agreement has not been nullified by the absence of a formal document creating a lease in favour of the defendant. In my opinion the defendant was bound to vacate the premises in terms of the agreement in Ex. 2."

The learned Judge, therefore, held that the respondent was entitled to recover damages and he gave the respondent a decree for Rs. 8393-5-4 at the rate of Rs. 200 per month from 2nd April 1939 to the end of September 1942.

[7] Before us the appellant has repeated the contention that his tenancy must be deemed to have been a tenancy from year to year, and as it was never terminated by the requisite notice, he continued to be a tenant up to the time the Government took possession of the premises and he was not therefore liable for any damages. He has further contended that even if his possession be held to have been wrongful after 1st April 1939, the measure of the damages should be the rent which was payable by him and not the sum of Rs. 200 per month which has been awarded by the learned Judge. Alternatively, he has contended that the damages should not exceed Rs. 120 per month on the basis of certain data which will be noticed later on in this judgment.

[8] The argument of the appellant with regard to the nature of the tenancy was put in this way. The agreement, Ex. 2 being unregistered, no lease for a term of five years was created, as under S. 107, T. P. Act, a lease for a term exceeding one year can be created only by a registered instrument. But there was a letting to the appellant followed up by payment and acceptance of rent, and the letting was for a manufacturing purpose. Therefore, under S. 106 of that Act the lease must be deemed to be a lease from year to year terminable by six months notice to quit ending with the year of the tenancy, there being no contract to the contrary. The only modification that was made by the operation of

S. 53A of the Act in the legal relationship of the parties was that during the continuance of the term of five years the respondent could not eject the appellant from the demised premises by service of six months' notice to quit. But this was really an additional protection afforded to the appellant, which did not fundamentally alter the character of the tenancy as a tenancy from year to year. With the withdrawal of the protection on the expiry of the term of five years the tenancy again became terminable by service of six months' notice to quit.

[9] We are unable to assent to this view of the operation of S. 53A, upon the rights of the parties in the present case. That section which was characterised by Lord Mac Millan in Mian Pir Bux v. Mahomed Tahar, 61 I. A. 388: 39 C. W. N. 34: (A. I. R. (21) 1934 P. C. 235) as a partial importation into India of the English equitable doctrine of part performance, is in these terms:

"Where any person contracts to transfer for consideration any immovable property by writing signed by him or on his behalf from which the terms necessary to constitute the transfer can be ascertained with reasonable certainty, and the transferee has, in part performance of the contract, taken possession of the property or any part thereof, or the transferee, being already in possession continues in possession in part performance of the contract and has done some act in furtherance of the contract, and the transferee has performed or is willing to perform his part of the contract, then, notwithstanding that the contract, though required to be registered, has not been registered, or, where there is an instrument of transfer, that the transfer has not been completed in the manner prescribed therefor by the law for the time being in force, the transferor or any person claiming under him shall be debarred from enforcing against the transferee and persons claiming under him any right in respect of the property of which the transferee has taken or continued in possession, other than a right expressly provided by the terms of the contract:

Provided that nothing in this section shall affect the rights of a transferee for consideration who has no notice of the contract or of the part performance thereof."

transferor when the conditions mentioned in the section have been fulfilled—it debars him from enforcing against the transferee any right in respect of the property other than a right expressly provided by the terms of the contract. He is not allowed to take advantage of the fact that the contract, though required to be registered, has not been registered, or where there is an instrument of transfer, that the transfer has not been completed in manner prescribed by law. And in order to obviate any difficulty about proof of the contract or of the instrument of transfer for want of registration, supplementary legislation was enacted amending S. 49, Registration Act.

[11] So far as the transferee is concerned, the section confers a right on him to the extent that it imposes a bar on the transferor. But this is only a right to protect his possession against any challenge to it by the latter contrary to the tenor of the contract or the instrument of transfer; Probodh Kumar Das v. Dantmara Tea Co., Ltd., 66 I. A. 293: (A. I. R. (27) 1940 P. C. 1). As Lord Atkin observed in S. N. Banerjee v. Cuchwar Lime and Stone Co., Ltd., 46 C. W. N. 374: (A. I. R. (28) 1941 P. C. 128):

"...the words of the section make it quite plain that the section does not operate to create a form of transfer of property which is exempt from registration. It creates no real right; it merely creates rights of estoppel between the proposed transferee and transferor, which have no operation against third persons not claiming under those persons."

[12] Has the transferor any right under the section? It was contended on behalf of the appellant that the question must be answered in the negative in view of the observations made by their Lordships in Probodh Kumar Das's case: (66 I. A. 293: A. I. R. (27) 1940 P. C. 1). In that case the facts, shortly stated, were that an agreement to sell the Kaiyachera Tea Estate was executed in favour of the plaintiffs' predecessors on 10th October 1931, who thereupon paid a part of the price and went into possession. The defendant the Dantmara Tea Co. Ltd., however, subsequently had a regular conveyance executed and registered in their favour by the owners and thus acquired the legal title to the property. In those circumstances the plaintiffs brought the suit to have it declared that the Dantmara Tea Co. Ltd. had no right or title to the estate, including the right to sell tea under the export quota allotted to it under the Indian Tea Control Act or to transfer the quota rights to any person. They also sought an injunction. The contention of the plaintiffs was that, notwithstanding that they had not chosen to sue for specific performance of the contract of 10th October 1931, and notwithstanding that they had taken no steps to complete their title, they were nevertheless entitled under S. 59A actively to assert the rights of a proprietor in virtue of the contract of 10th October 1981, and their possession. In repelling this contention Lord MacMillan observed:

"In their Lordships' opinion the amendment of the law effected by the enactment of S. 53A conferred no right of action on a transferee in possession under an unregistered contract of sale. Their Lordships agree with the view expressed by Mitter J. in the High Court that 'the right conferred by S. 53A' is a right available only to the defendant to protect his possession'.....The section is so framed as to impose a statutory bar on the transferor; it confers no active title on the transferee. Indeed any other reading of it would make a serious inroad on the whole scheme of the Transfer of Property

[13] It has been contended that the passage quoted by their Lordships with approval from the judgment of Mitter J. lays down that the section has conferred a right only on the transferee. The context in which the passage occurs in the judgment of Mitter J. (Dantmara Tea Co., Ltd. v. Probodh Kumar Das, 41 C. W. N 54 at p. 63) and the observations in their Lordships' judgment which precede and follow the quotation make it clear enough however that what the passage lays down and what their Lordships take it to lay down is that the only right conferred on the transferee is the right to protect his possession and not that the section confers a right only on the transferee. Their Lordships were concerned with repelling the assertion of an active title by the transferee. The question of the transferor's right was not a matter which engaged their Lordships' attention at all.

[14] When the section says that the transferor shall be debarred from enforcing any right against the property other than a right expressly provided by the terms of the contract, by plain implication it sanctions the enforcement of a right which has been so provided. And there is obvious justice in this, for if the transferor is to be held to his bargain with the transferee in respect of the property, it is only just that he should be given liberty to enforce his contractual rights against the latter in respect of it. It may be said that this is not the conferment of a right but the saving of an existing right. But whether it is the one or the other, it secures the result of enabling the transferor to enforce his contractual rights against the transferee in respect of the property.

[15] The question that next arises is this: Is this right of the transferor dependent upon fulfilment of all the conditions mentioned in the section? The terms of the section, in our opinion, clearly indicate that they cannot be conditions precedent to the enforcement of the transferor's right; they are only conditions precedent to the imposition of the bar against the transferor and consequently conditions precedent to the accrual of the transferee's right to protect his possession. No doubt, if the transferor wants to enforce against the transferee any right in respect of the property which has been expressly provided by the contract, he must previously have put the transferee in possession in part performance of the contract. And ex hypothesi there is a written contract containing reasonably clear terms as to the transfer, because what the transferor seeks to enforce is a right provided by such a contract. But we cannot agree with the view expressed by Broomfield J. in Bechardas Damodar v. Borough! Municipality of Ahmedabad, I. L. R. (1941) Bom. 529: A. J. R. (28) 1941 Bom. 346, that the transferor can "derive no rights from the section which are inconsistent with the conditions subject to which the section comes into operation", the condition insisted on by the learned Judge in the case before him being that the transferee should have performed or be willing to perform his part of the contract. In this view, the transferor's right would become quite illusory and in fact would cease to be rights at all because they could always be defeated by the transferee by the simple device of refusing to perform his part of the contract.

[16] In Suleman Haji Ahmed Umar v. P. N. Patell, 35 Bom. L. R. 722: (A. I. R. (20) 1933 Bom. 381), Wadia J. attempted to reconcile the needs of justice with what he thought to be the requirement of the section by holding that it would be sufficient if the transferee had partially performed his part of the contract. Wadia J. might have put his decision upon the surer ground that the transferor's right was not dependent upon any such condition at all.

[17] We are not concerned with the question of correctness of the actual decision of Broomfield J. in Bechardas's case, (A. I. R. (28) 1941 Bom. 346: I. L. R. (1941) Bom. 529) but to the learned Judge's observation that a suit for damages for breach of a contract can never be founded upon this section, it may be rejoined, without disrespect, that a suit for damages simpliciter for breach of contract does not require to be rested upon the section at all. [18] In the present case the right of the respondent to have the premises returned to it by the appellant on the expiry of the period of five years has been expressly provided by para. 3 of the contract. The appellant was given possession and took possession of the premises in part performance of the contract, and he remained in possession for the full period of the agreement. It would be meaningless to say that the right of the respondent to have the premises returned to it on the expiry of the period is dependent upon the willingness of the appellant to restore it. We agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that the appellant was bound to vacate the premises on the expiry of the period of five years and his possession became wrongful

[19] A point was raised that the agreement Ex. 2 was not admissible in evidence for want of registration. As the agreement did not specify any particular shed and godown but merely said that a suitable shed would be provided by the company on the lands leased out to it by the Port Commissioners at King George's Dock. We are of opinion that the instrument did not operate as a present demise. No doubt, under the Indian Registration Act a 'lease' includes an agreement to lease, but as was observed by Lord Buckmaster in Rani Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Midnapore Zemindary Co. Ltd., 46 I. A. 240: (A. I. R. (6) 1919 P. C. 79).

'an 'agreement to lease', which a lease is by the statute declared to include, must, in their Lordships' opinion bea document which effects an actual demise and operates as a lease. They think that Jenkis C. J. in the case of Panchanan Basu v. Chandi Charan Misra, 37 Cal. 808 : (6 I. C. 443), correctly stated the interpretation of S. 17 in this respect. The present agreement is an agreement that, upon the happening of a contingent event. at a date which was indeterminate and, having regard to the slow progress of Indian litigation, might be far distant, a lease would be granted. Until the happening of that evant it was impossible to determine whether there would be any lease or not. Such an agreement does not, in their Lordships' opinion, satisfy the meaning of the phrase 'agreement to lease' which, in the context where it occurs and in the statute in which it is found; must in their opinion relate to some document that creates a present and immediate interest in the land." In the case before their Lordships the question arose with regard to a solenama by which the plaintiff in the suit in which the solenama was filed agreed that if she succeeded in another suit which she had brought to recover certain land other than the land in the compromised suit, she would grant to the defendants a lease of that land upon specified terms.

opinion, did not require registration. Even if it can be interpreted as creating a present and immediate interest in the premises and therefore has to be regarded as requiring registration under the Registration Act and under the Transfer of Property Act, we think its admissibility in evidence is saved by the proviso to S. 49, Registration Act, which was added by Act XXI [21] of 1929. That proviso runs as follows:

"Provided that an unregistered document affecting immovable property and required by this Act or the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, to be registered may be received as evidence of a contract in a suit for specific performance under Chap. II, Specific Relief Act 1877, or as evidence of part performance of a contract for the purposes of S. 53A, Transter of Property Act, 1882, or as evidence of any collateral transaction not required to be effected by registered Instrument."

[21] The expression "as evidence of part performance of a contract for the purposes of S. 53A" is not a very happy one. Sir Dinshaw Mulla in his commentary on the Transfer of Property Act has observed that it "is an elliptical expression which means that the deed is available not only as a contract but as evidence that the acts done are part performance of the contract." Does the proviso permit the document being used as evidence of the contract for the purposes of S. 53A apart from any question of any acts having been done in part performance of it? Or, does it mean that the document can be used as levidence of the contract only when there have been acts done in part performance of it, the proof of the contract being merely an ingredient in the proof that the acts done were part performance of the contract? It is unnecessary for us to decide this question in the present case, because we consider that the respondent seeks to use the agreement not only as evidence of the contract for the purposes of S. 53A but aslo as proof that acts were done by him in part performance of it for the same purposes. The respondent wants to use the document as evidence that the right which it seeks to enforce is a right which is expressly provided by the contract and is therefore a right which is saved or sanctioned by S. 53A. The respondent also wants to adduce the document in evidence for showing that it let the appellant into possession and let him remain in possession for the full period of the agreement in part performance of the contract. Exhibit 2, therefore, is admissible in evidence.

[22] Two arguments may here be noticed which were advanced by the respondent with a view to repel the appellant's contention that he was a tenant from year to year. In the first place it was argued that s. 106, T. P. Act, must be read as subject to S. 107 of the Act which provides in absolute and unqualified terms that a lease from year to year can be created only by a registered instrument, and so when the former section enacts that in the absence of a contract to the contrary a lease for manufacturing purposes shall be deemed to be a lease from year to year terminable by six months' notice to quit ending with the year of the tenancy, it must be interpreted as referring to a lease for manufacturing purposes which has been created by a registered instrument but which is silent as to its own duration. Section 106 could not have intended, it was argued, to make that a lease from year to year which could not become such a lease by the terms of S. 107; it is not permissible to engraft an exception upon the absolute and unqualified enactment in S. 107 that a lease from year to year can be created only by a registered instrument. The appellant, it was contended, cannot therefore be regarded as a tenant from year to year.

[23] In the view we have taken of the case it is not necessary for us to decide this question. But if it had been, we would not have felt inclined to accede to this contention. Section 107, in our view, deals with the creation of a tenancy from year to year by act of parties. Section 106 provides for the case where the lease is for manufacturing purposes but the contract between the parties is silent as to its duration. In such a case the law supplies the omission and enacts that the lease shall be deemed to be a lease from year to year. The attachment of this incident to the lease by operation of law is a very different thing from the creation of a lease from year to year by act of parties. The two sections deal with entirely different matters and there is no conflict or contradiction between the two which requires that they should be harmonised in the manner suggested by the respondent.

[24] The other argument of the respondent was that the agreement Ex. 2 was not providing for the creation of a lease at all, but was merely granting a licence to the appellant to occupy the premises for the purpose of manufacturing tin canisters required for the respondent's business in petroleum products. The agreement, it was argued, was really a contract for the supply of petrol containers by the appellant to the company and embodied the terms on which the containers were to be supplied, and the appellant's occupation of the premises was really required for the performance of the contract and he was, therefore, not a tenant. In support of this contention reliance was placed on the decision of R. C. Mitter J. sitting with Lodge J. in Corporation of Calcutta v. Province of Bengal, 44 O. W. N. 1128: (A. I. R. (28) 1941 Cal. 60), which was affirmed by the Privy Council in Corporation of Calcutta v. Province of Bengal 48 C. W. N. 410: (A. I. R. (81) 1944 P. C. 42). In that case the question was whether the premises No. 4 Theatre Road, which had been acquired for use as the official residence of the Commissioner of the Presidency Division and for which the Commissioner had to pay a certain percentage of his salary as rent, was occupied by the Commissioner as a tenant or as a servant of the Crown, the premises being assessable under cl. (a) of S. 127, Calcutta Municipal Act, in the former case and under cl. (b) of the section in the latter case. His Lordship laid down the principle that if the servant's occupation of the house be ancillary to the performance of his duties, the occupation is qua servant, but if it is unconnected with the employment, it is qua tenant, and his Lordship set out certain tests by which the question was to be determined.

[25] It may be pointed out that this case that the appellant is a licensee has been made before us for the first time. The respondents' definite case in para. 5 of the plaint was that the appellant was in occupation of the premises as its tenant, and the latter Ex. A (9) dated 19th April 1939, which was written by the respondent to the appellant after the expiry of the term also made the same case. Apart from this circumstance, we do not think that the principles which govern the determination of the question whether the occupation of the premises by a person who is a servant is occupation by a tenant or simply as a servant and which have their origin in the special relationship between the parties can be extended to a case like the present where the occupier is an independent contractor who has entered into a business contract with the owner as much in his own interest as in that of the latter. Indeed, the fact that his occupation of the premises would facilitate or make for easier performance of the contract might well be a reason for the appellant to want to have a lease of the premises rather than a licence.

[26] The tests for determining whether a particular instrument has effected a demise or operates merely as a licence, were authoritatively formulated in Glenwood Lumber Co. v. Phillips, (1904) A. C. 405: (73 L. J. P. C. 62) and Wells v. The Mayor etc. of Kingstonupon Hull Corporation (1875) L. R. 10 C. P. 402: (44 L. J. C. P. 257). In the former case Lord Davey, delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, observed:

"If the effect of the instrument is to give the holder an exclusive right of occupation of the land, though subject to certain reservations or to a restriction of the purposes for which it may be used, it is in law a demise of the land itself."

In the latter case Lord Coleridge C. J. held that if the contract was merely for the use of the property in a certain way on certain terms while it remained in the possession and under the control of the owner, it was a licence. These principles were adopted and applied in our Court in Secretary of State v. Karuna Kanta, 35 Cal. 82: (6 C. L. J. 342 F. B.), Secretary of State v. Bhupal Chandra, 57 Oal. 655: (A. I. R. (17) 1930 Cal. 739) and O. C. Ganguly V. Kamalpat Singh, 51 C. W. N. 208: (A. I. R. (34) 1947 Cal. 236). In the case before us the provisions of para, 3 of the agreement to the effect that the appellant was to maintain the shed and godown duly and was to return them on the expiry of the term in the same condition in / which they were handed over to him and that suit-Under O. 32 R. 15 proof of absolute insanity he could even make alterations in them subject to | sufficient - Plea of bona fide purchaser being the consent of the company point unmistakably to the fact that exclusive possession was to be given and there is no indication anywhere else in the document that the grantor was retaining any possession in or control over the premises. It may be mentioned that the shed and godown covered an area of 11470 sq., feet or over 16 cottahs, and costly machineries were to be installed therein by the appellant at his own cost and a regular factory was to be started there by him for the manufacture of petrol containers. These objects could not be accomplished without exclusive possession of the premises being taken by the appellant. As was held by

Blackburn J., in Roads v. Overseers of Trum. pington (1871) 6 Q. B. 56: (40 L. J. M. C. 35), exclusive possesison would be taken to have been given if the nature of the acts to be done by the grantee was such as required a right of exclusive occupation. We are, therefore, unable to accept the contention that Ex. 2 was providing for a licence and not a lease. (His Lordship then discussed the question of quantum of damages and after discussing the evidence, concluded that the sum of Rs. 8393-5-4 awarded by the Subordinate Judge as damages to the respondent, was not unfair or excessive in the circumstances of the case.)

[27] The result, therefore, is that the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

A. F. O. D. No. 326 of 1944, Decided on 21st June 1949, against decree of Sub-Judge, 4th Court, 24-Parga-nas at Alipore, D/- 19th May 1944.

Civil P. C. (1908), O. 32, R. 15 - Mortgage by L. in favour of K - Ex parte decree in suit on mortgage-Property purchased by A in auction-sale -During pendency of mortgage suit L's son R making application for appointment of guardian ad litem but Court proceeding with trial without such appointment on account of R's absence on date of hearing of application - Suit by L's son R for declaration that ex parte decree and auction-sale were not binding on him on account of L's insanity and want of appointment of guardian ad litem in suit - Ex parte decree held was void for want of representation of L - Upon such pleading prayer for setting aside of decree not necessary-Question of payment of ad valorem court-fee, and bar of S. 42, Specific Relief Act (1877), did not arise-No estoppel on account of plaintiff's application in mortgage stranger to decree not open to A - Court-fees Act (1870), S. 7 (iv) (c) - Specific Relief Act (1877), S. 42-Evidence Act (1872), S. 115.

One Lexecuted a mortgage in favour of K. K brought a suit on the mortgage. The suit was decreed ex parte and in execution of the decree the property was brought to sale and purchased by one A. Subsequently R, son of L, brought a suit for a declaration that the ex parts decree passed in the mortgage suit and the execution proceedings and the auction-sale were not binding upon him and his title had not been affected by the said decree and sale. The allegations were that after the institution of the suit on the mortgage L left his house in a fit of insanity and met his death on the footpath of Calcutta, that though K was aware of the disordered condition of L's brain he took no steps to have a guardian ad litem appointed in the suit. During the pendency of the mortgage suit R had filed an application alleging that his father became insane and therefore it was necessary to have a guardian ad litem appointed but as R was found absent on the date of hearing of the application, the Court proceeded with the trial without the appointment of guardian ad litem:

Held that (1) the ex parts decree against L in the mortgage suit was void for want of representation of L. Hence upon that pleading it was not necessary in the present suit for plaintiff R to make the prayer for setting aside of the decree and it was enough to ask for a declaration that the said decree did not affect plaintiff's title. Questions of payment of ad valorem court-fee and the bar of S. 42, Specific Relief Act, did not arise at all; [Para 5]

(2) question of estoppel on account of plaintiff's application in the mortgage suit also did not arise as plaintiff was under no legal obligation to file any application alleging the insanity of his father, far less to prove it;

(3) to bring his case under O. 32 R. 15, Civil P. C., it was not necessary for the plaintiff to prove that L was absolutely insane. It was sufficient if the plaintiff proved that L was suffering from such mental infirmity as rendered him unfit to protect his own interest; [Paras 8 and 9]

(4) a decree obtained without representation in a case where representation was necessary must be regarded as a decree against a person not a party to the suit and was therefore without jurisdiction and void. The ex parte decree obtained against L was therefore null and void: 31 All. 372 (P. C.); A. I. R. (2) 1915 Cal. 19 and A. I. R. (24) 1937 All. 29, Rel. on; [Para 11]

(5) as the ex parte decree was void ab initio all the subsequent proceedings in execution including the auction-sale were also void and hence the plea that a bina fide purchaser who is a stranger to the decree does not lose his title to the property on account of the subsequent reversal or modification of the decree was not available to A: Case law relied on. Hiralal Chakravarti and Shyamdas Bhattacharjes

Diptendra Mohan Ghose and Uma Shankar Sarkar (for No. 2) and Apurbadhan Mukherjee and Bireswar Chattapadhyay (for No. 3)—tor Respondents.

Lahiri J. - The appellant Amulya Ratan Mukherjee instituted the suit out of which this appeal arises for a declaration that the ex parte decree passed in Title Suit No. 52 of 1940 of the Court of the fourth Subordinate Judge, 24-Parganas and the execution proceedings arising out of it and the auction sale held therein are not binding upon the plaintiff appellant and that the title of the plaintiff has not been affected by the said decree and sale. The subject matter of the dispute is the pucca ancestral dwelling house of the plaintiff standing on 12 cottah and 18 chattacks of land in mouza Kantalpara police station Naihati. The case of the plaintiff is that his father Lakshmi Narayan Mukherjee borrowed a total sum of Rs. 2400 on the basis of three mortgage bonds on various dates between 1984 and 1937 from defendant 2, Kanak Nalini Ghose. On 9th August 1939, defendant 2 instituted Title suit No. 52 of 1940 for sale of the mortgage premises for the realisation of her dues from Lakshmi Narayan Mukherjee. In the month of August 1939 Lakshmi Narayan left his house in a fit of insanity and never returned and he metwith his death on the footpath of Hari Ghose Street in Calcutta, on 6th February 1942. On account of the disordered condition of the brain of Lakshmi Narayan, the mortgage suit could not be properly defended and although the mortgages Kanak Nalini was aware of the defect of Lakshmi Narayan, she took no steps to have a guardian ad litem appointed, obtained an ex parte decree and in execution thereof brought the mortgaged property to auction sale at which it was purchased by defendant 1, Akhil Chandra Ghose, on 10th January 1942 for a sum of Rs. 5500. This suit was instituted by the plaintiff on 4th March 1942 and it appears that defendant 3, Gour Mohan Kundu, purchased the house from defendant 1 for the same amount by a registered conveyance dated 22nd September 1942 and he was thereafter added as a party to the suit by an order dated 8th January 1943.

[2] The suit was contested by the auction purchaser defendant 1 and also by the purchaser pendente lite defendant 3 principally on the ground that the plea of Lakshmi Narayan's insanity was a mere cloak to give an air of plausibility to the false claim of the plaintiff; that the story of Lakshmi Narayan's death was false, that Lakshmi Narayan was still alive and that Lakshmi Narayan left his house not in a fit of insanity as alleged by the plaintiff but on account of the maltreatment at the hands of the plaintiff and began to live with a concubine. Defendant 1 also raised some pleas in bar, namely that the court-fee paid by the plaintiff was not sufficient in law, that the suit was barred by estoppel and that the suit was barred under S. 42, Specific Relief Act.

[8] All the preliminary issues raised by the defendant were decided by the learned Subordinate Judge against the plaintiff. On the question of court-fees, it was held that the plaintiff having succeeded to the rights and liabilities of his father, should have prayed for setting aside of the ex parte decree and should have paid ad valorem court-fees on the value of the decree. As to the bar under S. 42, Specific Relief Act, it was held that it was incumbent on the plaintiff to ask for further relief for setting aside of the ex parte decree and as that was not done, the suit was not maintainable under that section. To appreciate the case of estoppel, it is necessary to recite certain facts. It appears that during the pendency of the mortgage suit the plaintiff, Amulya Ratan, filed an application on 9th December 1940 alleging that his father

Lakshmi Narayan Mukherjee became completely insane in or about the first week of July 1939 and had not been heard of since then and in these circumstances it was necessary to have a guardian ad litem appointed. This application is Ex. E. On 15th March 1941 when this application was taken up for hearing, the plaintiff Amulya Ratan was found absent on call and the Court proceeded with the trial without making any appointment of guardian ad litem upon the view that Lakshmi Narayan was not insane. It is said that the failure of the plaintiff to prosecute the application filed on 9th December 1940 brings into operation the principle of estoppel and the plaintiff is precluded by law from challenging the decree that was passed against his father.

[4] On the merits of the case, the learned Subordinate Judge has held that though Lakshmi Narayan died on the streets of Calcutta on or about the date alleged by the plaintiff the evidence adduced by the plaintiff was too meagre and insufficient for a clear finding of insanity and upon that evidence one could not come to a clear conclusion that Lakshmi Narayan became insane in July or August 1939.

[5] We have no hesitation in holding that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on all the preliminary issues is vitiated by a total misconception as to the nature of the plaintiff's case. Upon the case made in the plaint, the ex parte decree against the plaintiff's father was void for want of representation of Lakshmi Narayan who was alleged to be of unsound mind. Upon that pleading it was not necessary for the plaintiff to make the prayer for setting aside of the decree and it was enough to ask for a declaration that the said decree did not affect the plaintiff's title. So the questions of payment of ad valorem court fee and the bar of S. 42, Specific Relief Act, did not arise at all. On the question of estoppel, we desire to point out that the plaintiff was under no legal obligation to file any application alleging the insanity of his father, far less to prove it. He was merely an intervener and if the mortgagee chose to proceed with the hearing of the suit without taking steps for the representation of Lakshmi Narayan, she did so at her risk. We cannot see how any question of estoppel arose in these circumstances. There was no change in the position of the mortgagee on account of the representation made by Amulya. The order was also not binding on Amulya inasmuch as he alleged that it was void even against his father, Lakshmi Narayan.

[6] Turning to the merits of the case, we have first of all to consider the circumstantial evidence to determine the value of the oral evidence adduced by the parties. The circumstances which have been proved beyond all doubt are these: (1) Lakshmi Narayan, a resident of Naihati, was a railway servant serving in the Loco Shed of the Eastern Bengal Railway at Cossipore. (2) His wife died in 1920. (3) His youngest son died in 1921 or 1922. (4) Two other sons died in 1925 and 1926 and one of these sons committed suicide. (5) Lakshmi Narayan had a serious attack of typhoid in 1929 which slightly affected his brain. He was on sick leave from 1929 to 1932 and retired prematurely in 1932. (6) Lakshmi Narayan disappeared from his house in August 1939 and was not heard of till he was picked up by the Calcutta Police on the foot path of Hari Ghose Street on 5th February 1942, in an unconscious condition. He was sent to the hospital where he died without regaining consciousness. Certain letters were found in his person which established his identity. Relying on these letters the police informed the Chitpore Loco Shed which in its turn informed Naihati Loco Shed. P. W. 4, Shiba Prosanna Bhattacharjee, an employee of the Naihati Loco Shed, on receipt of the information wrote the letter, Ex. 1 dated 8th February 1942, to Amulya Ratan Mukherjee, the plaintiff, who immediately came to Calcutta, identified the dead body of his father and cremated it on 9th February 1942.

[7] On these facts, Mr. Chakravartti, appearing on behalf of the plaintiff, has argued that the mental agony resulting from a number of bereavements in quick succession adversely affected the mental constitution of Lakshmi Narayan and when that was followed by a severe attack of typhoid in 1929, Lakshmi Narayan became slightly deranged. The derangement gradually developed till in August 1939 Lakshmi Narayan left his house for good to seek shelter in the streets of Calcutta. This, according to Mr. Chakravartti, is sufficient to bring the case within O. 32, R. 15, Civil P. C., which does not require proof of absolute insanity but only proof of mental infirmity which rendered Lakshmi Narayan incapable of protecting his own interests. Mr. Mukherjee appearing for defendant 3 has argued that the abandonment of the protection of home by Lakshmi Narayan in August 1939 was not the result of insanity but the result of the ill-treatment of his son, the plaintiff and he has placed strong reliance upon the admission made by the plaintiff in his cross-examination to the effect that after the disappearance of his father, the plaintiff did not care to inform the police or to advertise in the newspapers. Mr. Mukherjee has also strenuously argued that the plaintiff adduced no evidence about the mental condition of his father during the period of two years and six months which elapsed between Lakshmi Narayan's disappearance and his death and as such the plaintiff is not entitled to succeed. The story of ill-treatment by the son was alleged by defendant 1 in his written statement in para. 13 and was adopted by defendant 3. It runs as follows:

"For some time past Lakehmi Narayan Mukherjee being disgusted with the maltreatment at the hands of the plaintiff began to live separately from the plaintiff with his concubine at different places and the plaintiff as also the acquaintances of Lakehmi Narayan Mukherjee had all along been in the know of his whereabouts".

Defendant I has examined himself as D. W. 2 and in his evidence in Court he does not venture to prove any of the scandalous allegations made in the written statement. On the other hand, D. W. 2 has stated in his evidence that after his retirement Lakshmi Narayan started a cloth shop at Naihati which again is not alleged in the written statement. The only witness who comes forward to prove the story of quarrel between the father and the son, is D. W. 3, Kunjalal Ghose who is brother of defendant 1's tenant and who filed an application for insolvency for his business dealings and who became a zemindar in 1942 after his father's death. We are not at all impressed by the uncorroborated testimony of this witness. We are now left with the omission of the plaintiff to inform the police and advertise in the papers. There may be various motives for not informing the police and not advertising in the press, for example a natural shyness standing in the way of ventilating one's private troubles in the press or before the police. We are not prepared to hold upon these materials that the plaintiff was guilty of ill-treatment of his father to such an extent that his father was compelled to leave the house. Moreover, the story of ill-treatment was not suggested to the plaintiff in his cross-examination.

[8] That Lakshmi Narayan did not completely recover from the effect of typhoid, will appear from the fact that he was on sick leave for about three years from 1929 and that he retired from service in 1932, at least two years before his retirement was due. From the order sheet of Title Suit No. 52 of 1940 which is Ex. 6 in the case, we find that on 14th November 1940 the mortgagee who was a resident of Naihati and as such expected to know everything about Lakshmi Narayan filed an application praying for substituted service of summons upon him, on the allegation that Lakshmi Narayan was trying to avoid summons and this application was granted. On 9th December 1940, as soon as the substituted service of summons had been effected at the last known residence of Lakshmi Nara. yan, Amulya Ratan filed his application Bx. A alleging that his father had disappeared from home on 5th August 1939 in a fit of insanity and praying for being appointed the guardian ad litem of his father. On that date, there was absolutely no motive for making that application on false allegation as it was not necessary for Amulya to make any application whatsoever. There is a ring of truth in this application which we cannot overlook. The absence of evidence about the mental condition of Lakshmi Narayan from August 1939 to February 1942 is quite natural in the circumstances of this case and we are entitled to infer that the same mental infirmity which prompted Laksbmi Narayan to leave his house in 1939 continued till he met with his death in February 1942. Mr. Mukherjee has further invited attention to Exs. 3 and 3 (a) which are two letters written by Lakshmi Narayan to the Chairman, Naihati Municipality. They undoubtedly show that Lakshmi Narayan was in full possession of his senses but they are dated 8th June 1939. In the case of a man who is suffering from insanity or mental infirmity, it is well known that he sometimes has lucid intervals during which he behaves like ordinary individuals. We are disposed to think that those letters were written during those lucid intervals. On a comparative estimate of the circumstantial evidence we are inclined to accept the plaintiff's argument that Lakshmi Narayan's disappearance in August 1939 was the result of a mental infirmity which rendered him incapable of protecting his own interest and as such required protection under O. 32, R. 15, Civil P. C. The learned subordinate Judge misdirected himself in proceeding upon the view that in order to succe ed in this suit, it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove that Lakshmi Narayan was absolutely insane. He lost sight of the second alternative provision in B. 15 which is sufficiently wide to cover a case of this description.

[9] In the background of these circumstances, we have to consider the oral evidence adduced by the parties. The plaintiff has examined as many as six witnesses besides himself to prove various details which go to indicate that Lakshmi Narayan was suffering from mental infirmity. Here again, it is necessary to bear in mind that, the plaintiff is not required to prove that Lakshmi Narayan was absolutely insane but only that Lakshmi Narayan was suffering from such mental infirmity as rendered him unfit to protect his own interest. The witnesses on this point are P. Ws. 3, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 besides the plaintiff who is P. W. 1. There can be no doubt that these witnesses are competent to speak about the mental condition of Lakshmi Narayan being either his friends or neighbours. With regard to P. W. 3 the learned subordinate Judge says that he does not prove anything; we find that he says that Lakshmi Narayan did not answer questions, used to remain silent and if any one asked any questions he became violent and rude to him and that he used abusive language without any apparent reason - this may not be evidence of absolute insanity, but it is certainly good evidence of mental infirmity. The same remark applies to the evidence of P. Ws. 6, 8 and 9; but the most important of witnesses on this point are P. W. 7. Asbutosh Bhattacharjyee and P. W. 10, Kabiraj Nagendra Bhusan Roy. The former is a close neighbour of Lakshmi Narayan and besides being a graduate in law he belongs to a highly respectable family. This witness was disbelieved by the learned Subordinate Judge on the ground that the plaintiff was his family physician. We are unable to take this view. It is impossible for us to hold that a man of the education and social standing of P. W. 7 could perjure himself for his family physician. P. W. 7 proves that if Amulya's patients came to call him, Lakshmi Narayan went to assault them and if the witness asked Lakshmi Narayan about his son, the reply was that Amulya was playing on the verandah. Similarly Kabiraj Nagendra Bhusan Roy proves that Lakshmi Narayan used to talk incoherently and when he was asked about his diet he gave an incoherent answer. We do not see why we should discard this evidence. The trial Court says that the evidence of this witness does not show that Lakshmi was at any time treated for insanity, but that is no ground for rejecting his testimony on the facts proved by bim. As against this evidence of the plaintiff, the only witnesses examined by the defendants are D. W. 1 who is the husband of the mortgagee, D. W. 2 who is the auction-purchaser and D. W. 3 who is the brother of the auction purchaser's tenant. Needless to say that we are not disposed to place any reliance upon the evidence of these interested witnesses. It is to be noticed that the mortgagee, the auction-purchaser and all the witnesses examined by the defendants in this case are residents of Naibati and Lakshmi Narayan appears to have been known to them for a pretty long time. In these circumstances the failure of the defendants to produce any independent witness in support of their case also indirectly supports the plaintiff's version.

[10] A dispassionate consideration of the details proved by the witnesses for the plaintiff leads us to the conclusion that the oral evidence on the side of the plaintiff fits in with the circumstances and probabilities of the case and proves beyond reasonable doubt that Lakshmi was certainly suffering from mental infirmity which rendered him incapable of protecting his own interest, and when on top of all this, we find that Lakshmi Narayan left home for good to meet with his death three years later in the streets of Calcutta, we have hardly any doubt that his mental infirmity developed into something bordering on insanity. Instead of taking each item of evidence separately and trying to explain it away on some untenable bypothesis, the learned Subordinate Judge should have tried to ascertain the cumulative effect of the circumstantial details proved by the plaintiff. We are further of the opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge's estimate of the oral evidence was vitiated by a wrong view of the requirements of O. 32, R. 15, Civil P. C. Our conclusion, therefore, is that though Lakshmi Narayan's representation was necessary under O. 32 R. 15, Civil P. C., in Title Suit No. 52 of 1940, he was not, in fact, represented by a guardian ad litem.

[11] The next question is what is the result of this non-representation. Mr. Chakravartti cited before us the case of Mt. Rashid un-nisa v. Muhammad Ismail Khan, 86 I. A. 168: (31 ALL. 372 P. C.) where the Privy Council pointed out that an objection as to non-representation is not one falling under S. 47, Civil P. C., and cannot be raised in any execution proceeding inasmuch as the party not represented cannot be deemed to be a party to the suit. It follows from this decision that a decree obtained without representation in a case where representation is necessary must be regarded as a decree against a person not a party to the suit and is therefore without jurisdiction and void. This, however, is a case of non-representation of a minor. The same principle was applied to the case of a lunatic in the case of Hakimulla v. Nobin Chandra Barua, 20 C. L. J. 291: (A. I. R. (2) 1915 Cal. 19) and by a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Bondu Mal v. Thomas Skinner, A. I. B. (24) 1937 ALL 29: (166 I. C. 903). Our conclusion, therefore, is that the ex parte decree obtained by Kanak Nalini against Lakshmi Narayan in Title Suit No. 52 of 1940 was null and void. [12] The last point raised by Mr. Mukherjee is that defendant 1 is a bona fide stranger purchaser at the auction sale held in execution of the decree in Title Suit No. 52 of 1940 and defendant 3 is a purchaser from defendant 1. In these circumstances, the auction sale cannot, according to Mr. Mukherjee, be set aside even if the decree be found to be void. For this proposition Mr. Mukberjee has relied upon the case of Chunder Kant v. Bissesur Surmah, 7 W. R. 312, Rewa Mahton v. Ram Kishen Singh, 13 I. A. 106: (14 Cal. 18 P. C.), Nawab Zain-Ul Abdin Khan v. Muhammad Asgar Ali Khan, 15 I. A. 12 : (10 ALL. 166 P. O.), Khiarajmal v. Diam, 32 I. A. 23: (32 cal 296 P. C.). The principle that a bona fide purchaser who is a stranger to the decree does not lose his title to the property on account of the subsequent reversal or modification of the decree is firmly established and cannot be questioned. In the case of Zain-Ul-Abdin, Sir Barnes Peacok in delivering the judgment of the Board observed as follows:

"It appears to their I ordships that there is a great distinction between the decree-holders who came in and purchased under their own decree, which was aftewards reversed on appeal, and the bona fide purchasers who came in and bought at the sale in execution of the decree to which they were no parties, and at a time when that decree was a valid decree, and when the order for the sale was a valid order."

The last portion of this passage makes it clear that in order to bring a case within this principle one of the conditions that must be fulfilled is that the purchase must be at a time when the decree was a valid decree and the order for sale was a valid order. The case of Chunder Kant v Bissesur Surmah, 7 W. R. 312, also illustrates the same principle in the following passage:

"It a sale takes place in execution of a decree in force and valid at the time of sale, the property in the thing sold passes to the purchaser."

In Rewa Mahton v. Ram Kishen Singh, 13 I.

A. 106: (14 Cal. 18 P. C.), the property was sold to a bona fide purchaser at an auction sale held in execution of a decree at a time when the judgment debtor held another decree for a higher amount against the person who brought the property to sale. The question arose whether an execution levied under these circumstances was a nullity in view of the provision of S. 246 of the Code of 1882 (corresponding to O. 21, R. 18 of the present Code). Sir Barnes Peacock held that the execution was not a nullity and the auction purchaser was protected and observed as follows:

"If the Court has jurisdiction a purchaser is no more bound to inquire into the correctness of an order for execution than he is as to the correctness of the judgment upon which execution issues."

In another passage, it is said that a purchaser under a sale in execution is not bound to inquire whether the judgment debtor had a cross judgment for a higher amount any more than he would be bound in an ordinary case, to inquire whether a judgment upon which execution issues has been satisfied or not. In Khiarajmal v. Diam, 32 I. A. 23: (82 Cal. 296 P. C.) Lord Davey made the following observation at p. 83.

"The Court had no jurisdiction to sell the property of persons who were not parties to the proceedings or properly represented on the record. As against such persons, the decree and sales purporting to be made would be a nullity and might be disregarded without any proceeding to set them aside."

Mr. Mukherjee strongly argued that in Khiarajmal's case, (82 I. A. 28: 82 Cal. 296 P. C.), their Lordships of the Judicial Committee took care to point out that they were dealing with a case where the real purchaser was the judgmentcreditor and drew our pointed attention to the following sentence:

"Their Lordships are quite sensible of the importance of upholding the title of persons who buy under a judicial sale; but in the present case the real purchaser was the judgment-creditor, who must be held to have had notice of all the facts."

In our judgment, this passage does not in any way limit or modify the general principle enunciated in the earlier part of the judgment to the effect that if a person is not represented in law or in fact in a suit, the sale of his property is without jurisdiction and is null and void. The difference in the rights of an auction purchaser in a case where the execution is merely irregular and a case where the execution is altogether void is illustrated by the two cases of Malkarjun v. Narhari, 27 I. A. 216 : (25 Bom. 837 P. C.) and Khiarajmal v. Diam, 32 I.A. 23 :(32 Cal. 296 P. c.). In the former case the order for sale was held to be merely irregular and the purchaser was protected. In the latter case, the execution and also the sale were held to be void. As in the case before us we have come to the conclusion that the ex parte decree obtained against Lak. shmi Narayan was void ab initio on account of the absence of representation of Lakshmi Narayan we hold that all the subsequent proceedings in execution including the auction sale were also void and the plea of bona fide purchase is not available to defendant 1 or to defendant 3.

[13] The result is that this appeal is allowed. The judgment and the decree of the Court below are set aside and the plaintiff's suit is decreed with costs.

[14] The plaintiff will recover his costs of the trial Court from all the defendants and the costs of this Court from defendants 2 and 3 who appeared to contest the appeal. The plaintiff will get a declaration that the decree passed in Title suit No. 52 of 1940 and the execution proceeding and sale in connection therewith are not binding against him and that the title of the plaintiff has not in any way been affected by the said decree and sale and the said mortgage suit stands revived.

Criminal Revn. No. 871 of 1949, Decided on 22nd

Penal Code (1860), S. 405 — Tailor refusing to deliver clothes unless payment of tailoring is made —It is not case of criminal breach of trust unless it is shown that clothes were not made out of material supplied and that he had disposed of material —It would be criminal breach of trust if upon payment being tendered, delivery of clothes is refused.

Where a tailor to whom cloth was given by the complainant for preparing shirts out of it, refuses to deliver either the shirts or the cloth to the complainant and claims a lien upon it for the price, he cannot be convicted for criminal breach of trust, unless the complainant establishes that the accused had never worked on the material and had disposed of it in some other way. The defence here might well be true and the shirts withheld for the payment and the accused may have had lien on the shirts. The lien arises even before the tender of delivery of goods. [Paras 5 & 6]

Obiter. — If the shirts are not delivered even after the tender is made of the amount due for making them, then the case of criminal breach of trust might arise.

[Para 8] Annotation: ('46-Man.) Penal Code, S. 405 N. 5,7,9,17. Moni Mukher ji — for Petitioner.

M. Hug and B. L. Ghose-for Opposite Party.

Harries C. J.—This is a petition for revision of an order of a learned Presidency Magistrate convicting the petitioner under S. 406, Penal Code and sentencing him to rigorous imprisonment for two months and to pay a fine of Rs. 200. In default of payment of the fine, the accused was sentenced to undergo a further period of 15 days' rigorous imprisonment.

- to the prosecution the complainant entered into a contract with the petitioner whereby he was to provide the petitioner with 300 yards of khaki drill which the petitioner was to use for making shirts for which the petitioner was to obtain a sum of annas ten per shirt. Delivery was to be made within one week. The complainant alleged that though he had delivered the material, the petitioner had refused either to return the material or the shirts if they had been made out of the material.
- [3] The defence of the petitioner was that he had done work previously for the complainant for which he had not been paid; further, that he had not been paid for the work of making shirts out of this material. The actual cost of the work of making shirts out of the material supplied which is the subject-matter of this charge is said to be Rs. 57-8.0. According to the petitioner there was a further sum of Rs. 150 due in respect of earlier work.
- [4] The learned Presidency Magistrate held that it had not been established that anything was due from the complainant to the petitioner in respect of the earlier work and that finding has not been challenged. It was however, urged that the petitioner could not be guilty of criminal breach of trust in respect of the material which had been handed over to him to be made into shirts, because he had a lien upon that material for his charges. Admittedly, the complainant did not pay the cost of making these shirts, neither did he at any time tender the amount.

[5] The learned Magistrate seems to have thought that until the goods were delivered or at least until the tender of delivery was made no question of a lien arose. If the complainant could have established that the petitioner had never worked on this material and had disposed of it in some other way a clear case of criminal breach of trust would have been established. But on the facts I am far from satisfied that such was the case.

[6] The defence here might well be true and that these shirts were being withheld because payment was not being tendered. Upon the materials before the Court the petitioner might well have a lien on these goods and if he had a lien quite obviously he could not be held to be dishonestly retaining these goods or be held to have dishonestly converted them to his own use. There is to my mind a very real doubt in this case and that being so the conviction cannot be maintained.

[7] In the result therefore this petition is allowed; the conviction and sentences are set aside and the petitioner is acquitted. He need not surrender to his bail and his bail bond is discharged.

[8] I might mention that if tender is made of the amount due for making these shirts and they are not delivered then a case of criminal breach of trust might well arise.

R. P. MOOKERJEE AND DAS GUPTA JJ.

Abdoola Haroon & Co. — Petitioners v. Cor. poration of Calcutta—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 679 of 1948, Decided on 18th May 1949.

(a) Calcutta Municipal Act (III [3] of 1923), S. 421 (2) — Order passed by Magistrate under section—Order is judicial — High Court has jurisdiction to revise order under S. 435, Criminal P. C. (Per Mcokerjes J.; Das Gupta J. contra) — Criminal

P. C. (1898), S. 435. Per Mookerjee J. - It will be improper to interpret S. 421 on an analogy of S. 420 upon the mere fact that as the persons named in the latter section are authorised to destroy the articles on the spot it must be presumed that orders passed under S. 421 must be of a similar nature. The emergency which exists and the extreme expedition with which action has to be taken in the case of perishable articles in a case under S. 420 are not present when the article is not of a perishable nature. The Legislature takes due note of the difference and provisions, fundamentally different, are promulgated If the article is not destroyed under S. 420 the seizing officer is enjoined to take the articles to a Magistrate immediately after such seizure. All that can be said is that the enquiry to be made by the Magistrate is of a summary nature and a detailed and long drawn out trial is not envisaged; but that is not by itself sufficient to make the order passed merely an executive one. Even if it be held that the procedure laid down and the orders to be passed under S. 420 were ministerial or executive in character that will be no ground for holding that the procedure before the Magistrate under S. 421 was of a similar nature. Further, under S. 421 (2) the Magistrate has to pass the final order only after using his descretion, which cannot but be a judicial discretion. From this point of view also, the order passed by the Magistrate under 8. 421 (2) must be considered to be a judicial order.

[Paras 18 & 34] Also, the expression "if it appears to the Magistrate" as the opening words of S. 421 (2) cannot be taken to vest such Magistrate with unlimited powers with a discretion not to hold a proper enquiry or to make the order passed an administrative or ministerial order only. Even though there is no direct provision that a formal notice is to be given to the party before any action is taken either under sub-s. (2) or sub-s. (3) of S. 421 the Magistrate is bound to give notice before he arrives at a decision. [Paras 33 & 44]

Therefore, on a reading of the provisions contained in S. 421, and interpreting the section as a whole and the context in which it appears, there is no escape from the conclusion that the order passed by a Magistrate under S. 421 (2) is a judicial order and the High Court has jurisdiction to exercise revisionary powers under S. 435, Criminal P. C. in respect of such order: 33 Cal. 287; A. I. R. (12) 1925 Cal. 1251; A. I. R. (14) 1927 Cal. 509; (1899) 2 Q. B. 286 and (1893) 1 Q. B. 679, Disting.; 42 C. W. N. 731 and A. I. R. (27) 1940 Cal, 218, Ref.

[Paras 44, 65] Per Das Gupta J. (contra) - The mere fact that a Magistrate acts under S. 421 of the Act, does not make his order amenable to the jurisdiction of the High Court. A Magistrate may have executive as well as judicial function to perform, and whatever functions a Magistrate has to perform under a statute are not necessarily judicial. The Magistrate acting under S. 421 (2) is just an alternative to the several Corporation officers or a Councillor or an elderman acting under S. 420, and the law does not require the Magistrate to issue any notice, take any evidence, or hear any party before passing any order under S. 421 (2). Therefore the Magistrate acting under S. 421 (2) is an executive officer and not a Court, and his order for destruction is an administrative, and not a judicial order. The High Court has, therefore, no judisdiction to revise the order passed by a Magistrate under S. 421: (1899) 2 Q. B. 286 and (1893) 1 Q. B. 679, Rel. on; A. I. R (27) 1940 Cal. 213; 42 C. W. Per Mookerjee J .- The conditions precedent for attracting S. 420 are, (1) that article, whether perishable or not, is allowed or consented to by the owner to be immediately destroyed; or (2) if the article be of a perishable nature the person named and authorized by the section may destroy the article even without the consent of the owner; (3) in either case the person taking action must be of opinion that immediate destruction is necessary in the interest of public health. [Para 16]

(e) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 6- Judicial act-No provision for issue of notice to party affected or for being heard — This is not sufficient to convert judicial act into executive one- Party must be deemed entitled to get opportunity of being heard-Ex parte order may be revoked at instance of party prejudiced thereby - Test to determine it act is judicial or not is exercise of judicial discretion --

(Per Mookerjes J.)

Per Mookerjee J.- If an act is otherwise found to bea judicial act, the absence of specific provisions either for the issue of notice to the party affected or for being heard in recognition of the fundamental right will not be sufficient to convert the judicial act into an executive one. On the other hand, the party must always be deemed to be entitled to get an opportunity of being heard even if the statute does not specifically provide for the same. The only exception will be when there is a clear direction that no notice need be given or that the ex parts order is made revisable at the instance of the party affected. Similarly, if an order is otherwise found to be an executive one, the mere fact that there is a provision for allowing a hearing to the party concerned will not by itself make it a judicial one. Even where there are specific provisions permitting ex parte orders of a judicial nature, it is also another fundamental principle of natural justice that such orders may be revoked at the instance of any party prejudiced thereby and the Court has inherent power to give such directions as the justice of the case may require. It is further incontrovertible that even the absence of specific provisions in the statute does not authorise the Magistrate to proceed ex parte and without offering an opportunity to the party concerned to be heard in his defence. Such an absence of provisions cannot also be taken by itself to be sufficient to make the order a ministerial one. On the other hand, one of the infallible tests applied by Courts to determine whether an act is merely ministerial or judicial is to ascertain whether the public officer or body had to exercise a judicial discretion: Case law discussed. [Paras 20, 24 to 26]

Annotation : ('49 Com.) Cr. P. C., S. 6, N. 2. (i) Calcutta Municipal Act (III [3] of 1923), S. 421 (2) _"If it appears" _Meaning of _ Expression is used in its wider sense as signifying that which is made clear by evidence or is clear to comprehension - (Per Mookerjee J.).

Per Mookerjee J. - In one sense the word "appear" may refer to that which is seen by the eye, but it is also used in its broader sense as signifying that which is made clear by evidence or is clear to the comprehension when applied to matters of reasoning or opinion Not only the section itself as a whole but the setting in which it appears in the particular statute, will determine the particular interpretation to be put on this phrase. What the intention of the Legislature is has to be ascertained from the case taken as a whole and also with an eye to reasonableness. As the expression 'if it appears' is used in the wider sense in other parts of the Act and is also used as an alternative to 'in the opinion' there is no escape from the conclusion that in S. 421 it has also been used in that wider sense. The more so, as there is no doubt so far as S. 421 (8) is concerned: (1899) 1 Q. B. 751, Disting.; (1898) 8 Ch. 483, Ref. [Paras 30 to 32]

(g) Calcutta Municipal Act (III [3] of 1923), S. 421 (2)—Order for destruction of article seized— Order is penal one _(Per Mookerjee J.).

Per Mookerjee J .- A preventive step may, in its very nature, be a penal one. To prevent the owner of the article from exposing it for sale and thus to protect public health, the article may be seized or destroyed. Seizing it, rending further decision as to its disposal, is merely preventive but a direction for destruction, by whichever authority it may be, is penal. The order for destruction is a penal one and is in the nature of confiscation of the goods and it is actually so.

(h) Interpretation of Statutes - Court cannot depart from intention of Legislature -Two constructions possible - Court may adopt more reasonable one_(Per Mookerjee J.).

Per Mookerjee J .- No Court is entitled to depart from the intention of the Legislature as may be ascertained from the language of the Act only because it is thought either unreasonable or inconvenient. But where two constructions are open the Court may adopt the more reasonable of the two: (1882) 7 A. C. 694; (1901) A. C. 102 and (1882) 9 Q. B D. 648, Rel. on.

[Para 42] (i) Calcutta Municipal Act (III [3] of 1923), S. 363 — Offence is committed when structure is raised without sanction or in deviation of order passed by Corporation—(Obiter)—(Per Mookergee J.) -Calcutta Municipal Act (III [3] of 1923), S 364.

(Obiter) Per Mookerjee J. - Under the Calcutta Municipal Act, it is not always the case that an offence is not committed until there is a disobedience of an order of demolition passed by the Magistrate. The offence, on the other hand, may have been committed when the structure was raised without the necessary sanction or in deviation of an order passed by the Corporation. The jurisdiction of the Municipal Magistrate is invoked when an offence has in the opinion of the Corporation already been committed. What the Magistrate is required to consider is whether the offence has been so committed: A. I. R. (12) 1925 Cal. 1251, Foll.; A. I. R (14) 1927 Cal. 509, Dissent.

(j) Calcutta Municipal Act (III [3] of 1923), S. 421 (2)—Whether particular foodstuff is injurious to public health - Question is one of fact - (Per Mookerjee J.).

Per Mookerjee J .- The question whether the partioular tinned foodstuff is or is not injurious to public health is a question of fact which must be determined on the evidence adduced in the case.

(k) Calcutta Municipal Act (III [3] of 1923), S. 421 (2) - Magistrate need not examine each of tins seized - How many tins should be examined depends upon facts of each case.

It cannot be urged that the Magistrate must examine each and every particle of the foodstuffs or each and every one of the tins seized in order to condemn the whole lot. How many tins have to be examined in any particular case must depend upon the facts in each ease: A. I. B. (27) 1940 Cal. 213, Ref.

N. K. Basu and Pasupati Ghose-for Petitioners. Sir S. M. Bose, Advocate-General and J. M. Banerjee -for the Crown.

Debabrata Mukerjee and Sunil Kumar Basufor Corporation of Calcutta.

R. P. Mookerjee J.—This is an application in revision against an order under S. 421, Calcutta Municipal Act passed by the Municipal Magistrate directing the destruction of certain tinned jam, marmalade etc., belonging to the petitioners defendants and at their cost, on the finding that the seized stock was unfit for human consumption.

[2] Proceedings out of which the present rule arises were initiated on a complaint, under 8. 421, Calcutta Municipal Act, hereafter referred to as the Act, filed by a Food Inspector of the Calcutta Corporation. The allegation was that the entire lot of jam, marmalade etc., packed in tins, which were stored at 30 Park Lane. Calcutta, had been found on examination to be unwholesome, unsound and unfit for human consumption. Some of the tins had been seized by the Corporation Officer while the remaining quantity of the stock was kept under seal. As required under said S. 421 the seized articles were produced before the Magistrate for inspection, enquiry and necessary orders.

[3] After the filing of the complaint notice was given to the petitioners defendants. The defence as set out was that the defendant company had purchased the stock in question from the Government of India, as being the surplus stock of tinned food which had been brought out by the U. S. A. Military Authorities. The stock as purchased consisted of 8 lbs. tins and the defendants subsequently found out that such tins were too big for ordinary customers. Steps were accordingly taken to have the jam repacked in smaller 20 oz. tins. The contents were reprocessed before being recanned. Such recanning and subsequent sale in the open market continued from February to November 1947. At the request of the Department of Agriculture and the Central Government, the Director of Public Health, West Bengal, had some of the same tins examined in the Public Health Laboratory for ascertaining whether the contents were fit for human consumption. Before the submission of the final report of analysis the Health Officer of the Corporation visited the godown at 30, Park Lane and had the stock seized and sealed as stated already. The seizure report was sent to the Municipal Magistrate by the Food Inspector who had accompanied the Health Officer. The final report submitted by the Director of Public Health Laboratory bears the date 6th December 1947-a 4 days after the filing of the complaint before the Municipal Magistrate. The report indicated that there were no signs of deterioration of the contents and that after culture no organisms of three named varieties could be isolated.

[4] In course of the hearing before the Municipal Magistrate the Health Officer of the Calcutta Corporation as also some of the officers including the Food Inspector and a representative of the Corporation Laboratory were examined on behalf of the prosecution. The defence examined a number of witnesses. On the conclusion of the enquiry the stock seized was declared by the Magistrate under S. 421 (2) of the Act to be unfit for human consumption and was directed to be destroyed at the cost of the petitioners defendants. This rule has been obtained by the petitioner against the orders for destruction passed by the Magistrate.

[5] A preliminary objection has been raised before us by the Advocate-General on behalf of the Government of West Bengal. It is urged that orders passed by a Magistrate under S. 421 (2) of the Act are in an executive capacity being merely ministerial and administrative directions and in any view the Magistrate did not act as a Court subordinate to the High Court. Accordingly, this Court has no jurisdiction to exercise revisionary powers under S. 435, Criminal P. C.

[6] The order complained of has been passed by a Municipal Magistrate appointed under 8. 531 of the Act and the relevant portion of that section is in the following terms:

"The Local Government may appoint one or more Magistrates for the trial of offence against (a) this Act, and (b) the Rules or Bye-laws made thereunder."

[7] A Magistrate appointed under the provisions of this section is a criminal Court within the meaning of S. 6, Criminal P. C.: Ram Gopal v. Corporation of Calcutta, 52 Cal. 962 at p. 969: (A. I. R. (12) 1925 Cal. 1251). It should also be stated that the Magistrate who passed the order in this particular case was acting not only as a Municipal Magistrate but as the Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, and he has signed the order as such.

by a criminal Court, does not finally determine the question whether an order passed by that Court is revisable by the High Court. It is well known that a Magistrate has to discharge duties which are at times judicial and at other ministerial or administrative. On certain occasions and under special statutory provisions, a Magistrate or a Judge may be vested with jurisdiction not as Court but as persona designata. It is, therefore, necessary to determine whether the order passed by the Magistrate under S. 421 of the Act is one in a judicial capacity and as a Court subordinate to the High Court.

Magistrate, Calcutta, if he is acting in a judicial capacity, is a Court subordinate to the High Court. The only question is whether the order complained of is a judicial order or merely a ministerial or administrative one. This question has to be decided principally on reference to the provisions of S. 421 of the Act. Reliance, however, has been placed, on behalf of the Government, not only on other provisions of the Calcutta Municipal Act but on different other Acts as well, of India and England. It may be stated at once that decisions on the interpretation of other statutes generally give very little help to the Court. In the words of Lord Esher M. R. in R. v. Commissioner of Income-tax, (1838) 22 Q B. D. 296 at p. 307 "we cannot use the interpretation of one statute in construing another not made with the same intent." Decisions as to whether the High Court has jurisdiction to interfere with the order by a Magistrate under particular statutes, dependent as they must be on the special provisions of those statutes in question, will generally be of little assistance unless it is possible to deduce that any principle had been laid down by them. Neither the particular provisions in those other statutes nor the context in which they appear are exactly in the same terms as the one now before us. [10] This is why that in Municipality of Ahmedabad v. Jumna Punja, 17 Bom. 791 or in Abdul Samad v. Corporation of Calcutta, 33 Cal. 287: (3 Or. L. J. 211) or in Chunilal Dutt V. Corporation of Calcutta, 34 Cal. 341: (4 Cr. L. J. 408) or in re Dalsukhram Hurgovindas, 9 Bom. L. R. 1347: (6 Cr. L. J. 425) or in Rajani Khemtawalli v. Pramatha Nath, 37 Cal. 287: (11 Cr. L. J. 112) or in re Dinbai Jijibhai Khambata, 43 Bom. 864: (A. I. R. (6) 1919 Bom. 93: 20 Cr. L. J. 702), it was either held specifically that the Magistrates were under the respective statutes acting as Courts subordinate to the High Court or that the Court might insist that where in the exercise of the authority vested in the Magis. discretion is to be used that distrate cretion must be judicial discretion. in the matter of Rahaman Sarkar, 10 Beng. L. R. App. 4: (18 W. R. Cr. 67), or Corporation of Calcutta v. Keshab Chandra Sen, 8 0. W. N. 142 or Sarat Chandra v. Corporation of Calcutta, 37 Oal. 884: (11 Or. L. J. 183) or Vijiaraghavalu Pillai v. Theagaroya Chetti, 38 Mad. 581 : (A. I. R. (2) 1915 Mad. 860: 15 Or. L. J. 593) and Husan Als v. Emperor, 47 Cal. 843 : (A. I. R. (7) 1920 Cal. 635), the Courts held that the Magistrates were not acting judicially as a Court but in an administrative capacity. In Osman Munshi v. Kader Pramansk, 33 C. W. N. 836: (A.I.R. (16) 1929 Cal. 768: 81 Cr.L.J. 441), Subrawardy J. held that an order passed by a Sub-Divisional Magistrate under the Bengal Alluvian Act (B. C. V. 1920) directing certain buts erected on a disputed char to be sold and for crediting the amount received was an executive and not a judicial order. Graham J. on the other hand held that the order being one passed by the Collector in his capacity as such the High Court had no jurisdiction to deal with it in the exercise of its criminal jurisdiction. In Masoon Ali Khan v.

Ali Ahmed Khan, 55 ALL. 1008; A.I.R. (20) 1933

ALL. 764) and Jagmohan Surajmul v. Venkatesh

Gopal, 85 Bom. L. R. 89: (A.I.R. (20) 1933 Bom. 105), the Magistrate was held to be acting as persona designata.

[11] It is no use multiplying instances. Reference to the decisions above mentioned and many others show that the decisions had varied according to the particular provisions contained in the statutes in question.

[12] There is no direct decision on S. 421. Calcutta Municipal Act. For determining whether the Magistrate in passing an order under this sec. tion acts in a judicial capacity or merely as an executive officer we shall, in the first instance, proceed to consider the provisions of this section and the setting in which this section is placed.

[13] In Part 5, Calcutta Municipal Act, dealing with Public Health, Safety and Convenience, occurs Chap. 28 which deals with "Food and Drugs" and there are four sub. divisions in this Chapter. Sections 405 to 416 are under the sub-head "Sale of Food and Drugs," Ss. 417 to 421 appear under the sub-head "Inspection, Seizure and Destruction of Food and Drugs," Ss. 422 to 425 are under the sub-head "Analysis of Food and Drugs." The last S. 426 is under another sub-head dealing with the vesting of condemned food or drug in the Corporation.

[14] The sections which have been particularly referred to in course of the arguments before us are Ss. 420, 421 and 426. They are in the following terms:

S. 420. "(1) When any animal, food, drug, utensil or vessel is seized under S. 419, it may, with the consent of the owner or the person, in whose possession it was found, be forthwith destroyed; or if such consent be not obtained, then, if any food or drug so seized is of a perishable nature and is, in the opinion of the Executive Officer, the Health Officer or any Councillor or Alderman, unsound, unwholesome or unfit for human food or medicine, it may likewise be destroyed.

(2) The expenses incurred in taking any action under sub-s (1), shall be paid by the person in whose posssesion such animal, food, drug, utensil or vessel was at the time of its seigure."

S. 421. (1) Any animal, food, drug, utensil, or vessel seized under S. 419, which is not destroyed in pursuance of S. 420 shall, subject to the provisions of S. 419, sub-s. (3) be taken before a Magistrate as soon as may be after such seizure.

(2) If it appears to the Magistrate that any such animal is diseased, or that any such food or drug is unsound, unwholesome, or unfit for human food, or for medicine, as the case may be or is adulterated, or that any such utensil or vessel is of such kind or in such state as is mentioned in S. 419, sub-s. (2) or is used for preparing manufacturing or containing such food or drug he shall cause the same to be destroyed, at the expense of the person in whose possession it was at the time of its seizure or to be otherwise disposed of by the Corporation so as not to be capable of being used as human food or medicine.

(3) If it appears to the Magistrate that any such animal is not diseased or that any such food or drug is not unsound, unwholesome or unfit for human food, or for medicine, as the case may be, or is not adulterated. or that any such utensil or vessel is not used for preparing, manufacturing, or containing the same, the person from whose shop, or place the animal, food. drug, utensil or vessel was taken shall be entitled to have it restored to him, and it shall be in the discretion of the Magistrate to award him such compensation not exceeding the actual loss —which he has sustained, as the Magistrate may think proper."

"S. 426. When any authority directs, in exercise of any powers conferred by this chapter, the destruction of any food or any drug or the disposal of the same so as to prevent its being used as food or medicine, the same shall thereupon be deemed to be the property of the Corporation."

[15] We must be careful to remember that the orders in the present case have been passed under S. 421 and not under S. 420 as the articles in question were not of a perishable nature. Reference to sections other than S. 421, is relevant primarily for the purpose of appreciating the difference, if any, between the provisions contained in S. 421 and the other sections, particularly between those of Ss. 420 and 421 of the Act.

[16] Section 420 authorises immediate destruction of animal, food or drug if the same is in the opinion of certain officers of the Corporation or of any Councillor or Alderman, to be unwholesome or unfit for human consumption. If the persons named be of opinion that the article is unfit for human consumption and only if that article be of a perishable nature, destruction may be directed by the Officer immediately. There is no provision giving the owner of the article any right or opportunity to stop such destruction by those persons. The conditions precedent for attracting S. 420 are (1) that the article, whether perishable or not, is allowed or consented to by the owner to be immediately destroyed, or, (2) if the article be of a perishable. nature the person named and authorized by the section may destroy the article even without the consent of the owner; (3) in either case the person taking action must be of opinion that immediate destruction is necessary in the interest of public health.

[17] If the destruction of the article be not consented to by the owner and if the article benot of a perishable nature the persons named in S. 420, have no jurisdiction to destroy it in the exercise of the plenary powers given under that section. In that event the condemned article has to be taken to a Magistrate presumably because there is no such pressing necessity for an immediate order for destruction. The powers of the Magistrate are detailed in sub-ss. (2) and (3) of S. 421. If the Magistrate is of opinion that the article is unfit for human consumption he shall cause the same to be destroyed.

[18] Great reliance is placed upon the provisions of S. 420 of the Act and it is argued by way of analogy that if an order for destruction passed under S. 420, so far as perishable articles are concerned, is shown to be an administrative or executive order by the different persons mentioned in that section, orders passed under S. 421, in respect of non-perishable articles also, must be of a similar nature. But at the very outset it is to be noticed that there is a fundamental difference between the provisions of the two sections, as regards extreme urgency in one and its absence in the other, the person authorised to direct destruction, the procedure to be followed, the nature of property affected, and the provision for release order, if any, after seizure. It is not necessary for our present purpose to examine in detail the question whether orders passed under S. 420 and the steps taken thereunder are merely administrative or executive in character. Under S. 420, if the destruction is with the consent of the party concerned, no question as to the character of the orders passed or action taken arises. If the article is of a perishable nature, authority is given to the persons named to destroy the same provided in their opinion it is unfit for human consumption, and whether after such destruction the party has any cause of action or not, is also not necessary for us to determine now. If, on the other hand, the article is not of a perishable nature, the persons named have only the authority to seize it and send it to the Magistrate for a decision whether it is deleterious and unfit for human consumption; and if so, to direct its destruction but if not, to direct its return and to assess the amount of compensation. It is thus patent that the Legislature makes a clear distinction between perishable and non-perishable articles. It will be improper to interpret S. 421 on an analogy of 8. 420 upon the mere fact that as the persons named in the latter section are authorised to destroy the articles on the spot it must be presumed that orders passed under S. 421 must be of a similar nature. The emergency which exists and the extreme expedition with which action has to be taken in the case of perishable articles in a case under 8. 420 are not present when the article is not of a perishable nature. The Legislature takes due note of the difference and provisions, fundamentally different, are promulgated. If the article is not destroyed under 8. 420 the seizing officer is enjoined to take the articles to a Magistrate immediately after such seizure. All that can be said is that the enquiry to be made by the Magistrate is of a summary nature and a detailed and long drawn-out trial is not envisaged; but that is not by itself sufficient to make the order passed merely an executive one. Even if we held that the procedure laid down and the orders to be passed under S. 420 were ministerial or executive in character that will be no ground for holding that the procedure before the Magistrate under S. 421 was of a similar nature.

[19] It is next argued that one of the sure tests for determining whether a particular order is a judicial order or not, is to enquire whether the statute provides for the issue of a notice to the party affected or for giving him a hearing before such an order is passed. If there is no such clear provision in the statute, as in the case now before us, we are asked to conclude simpliciter, that the Magistrate could have passed the order without even affording the party aggrieved an opportunity to be heard and, therefore, this order must be deemed to be a ministerial or administrative order. Reference is in this connection made by way of comparison to some of the other provisions in the Calcutta Municipal Act, as appearing in other chapters, particularly to the provisions affecting construction and demolition of buildings within the Municipal limits (vide Ss. 363 and 381).

[20] This in my view is not the correct approach to the question. If an act is otherwise found to be a judicial act the absence of specific provisions either for the issue of notice to the party affected or for being heard in recognition of the fundamental right, will not be sufficient to convert the judicial act into an executive one. On the other hand, the party must always be deemed to be entitled to get an opportunity of being heard even if the statute does not specifically provide for the same. The only exception will be when there is a clear direction that no notice need be given or that the ex parte order is made revisable at the instance of the party affected. Similarly, if an order is otherwise found to be an executive one, the mere fact, that there is a provision for allowing a hearing to the party concerned, will not by itself make it a judicial one.

"It is an elementary rule of universal application and founded upon the plainest principles of justice that a judicial order which may possibly affect or prejudice any party, must not be finally made unless he has been afforded an opportunity to be heard." Ajant Singh v. F. T. Christian, 17 C. W. N. 862: (16 I. O. 567). See also In re Hammersmith's Rent Charge. (1849) 4 Ex. 87: (19 L. J. Ex. 66), Mena Juddi Biswas v. Toam Mandal, 39 Cal. 881: (15 I. C. 176) and R. v. Saddler's Co., (1863) 10 H. L. C. 404: (32 L. J. Q. B. 337).

[21] The Judicial Committee had occasion to consider the question as to the test to be applied for determining whether an order by the Commissioners under the Crown Lands Alienation Act, 1868, was purely ministerial or not.

"It an exercise of judgment is required to determine whether or not a man is entitled to lands by reason of compliance with the provisions of the Act, it is difficult to see why less judgment should be required in determining, what concerns him quite as much, whether or not be has forfeited them by non-compliance."

Their Lordships

"do not desire to be understood as lying it down that the Commissioner, in conducting such an enquiry, is bound by technical rules relating to the admission of evidence, or by any form or procedure, provided the enquiry is conducted according to the requirements of substantial justice. These requirements are well-known to our law, and have been enunciated in many cases bearing some resemblance to, though not identical with, the present." James Dunbar Smith v. Queen, (1878) 3 A. C. 614 at p. 623.

Sir Robert Collier refers with approval (at page 624) to the observation by Bailey J., in Capel v. Child. (1832) 2 C. & J. 558 at p. 588: (111 L. J. (N. S.) Ex. 205).

"Is it not a common principle in every case, which is in itself the character of judicial proceeding, that the party against whom the judgment is to operate shall have an opportunity of being heard?" See also R. v. Archbishop of Canterbury, (1859) 1 E. and E. 545 at 559: (28 L. J. Q. B. 154).

Wandsworth District (1863) 14 C. B. (N. S.) 180. (32 L. J. C. P. 185), although the Metropolis Local Management Act empowered the District Board to alter and demolish a house, where the builder had neglected to give notice of his intention to build seven days before proceeding to lay or dig the foundation, the Board were, nevertheless, unable to execute that power without first giving the person guilty of the omission an opportunity of being heard. Earle C. J. definitely lays down that the principle is applicable even in proceedings not strictly judicial:

"I fully agree that the Legislature intended to give the District Board very large powers indeed, on the qualification I speak of has been recognised to the full extent. It has been said that the principle that no man will be deprived of his property without an opportunity of being heard is limited to a judicial proceeding. I do not quite agree to that. The law I think has been applied to many exercises of power, which in common understanding would be not at all more judicial proceedings than would be the act of the District Board in ordering the house to be pulled down."

[23] The principles enunciated have been made applicable not only when a person is performing a judicial function but even if the function is not of a judicial nature. The party concerned must be given a hearing in the sense required by the elementary principles of natural justice.

permitting ex parte orders of a judicial nature, it is also another fundamental principle of natural justice that such orders may be revoked at the instance of any party prejudiced thereby and the Court has inherent power to give such directions as the justice of the case may require. Tasliman v. Harihar, 32 Cal. 253: (9 C. W. N. 81 F.B.); Tikait Ajant Singh v. F. T. Christian, 17 C. W. N. 862 at p. 864: (16 I. C. 567).

[25] It is further incontrovertible that even the absence of specific provisions in the statute does not authorise the Magistrate to proceed exparte and without offering an opportunity to the party concerned to be heard in his defence. Such an absence of provision cannot also be taken by itself to be sufficient to make the order a ministerial one.

[26] On the other hand, one of the infallible tests applied by Courts to determine whether an act is merely ministerial or judicial is to ascertain whether the public officer or body had to exercise a judicial discretion. Of the various authorities, I need only refer to the clear enunciation of the principle by Lord Eshar M. R. in Partridge v. General Council of Medical Education, (1890) 25 Q. B. D. 90 at page 96: (59 L. J. Q. B. 475):

"Is giving a special direction to the registrar under that section merely a ministerial act, to be done without the exercise of any discretion at all? I do not think so. I think it is clearly discretionary. Now it appears to me that it is a true proposition to say that, when a public duty is imposed by Act of Parliament upon a body of persons, which duty consists in the exercise of a discretion, it cannot be said that the exercise of that discretion is a merely ministerial act. If what the defendants did cannot be considered to have been merely ministerial, then I think for the purpose of the question, whether they are protected from an action, it must be considered as judicial."

[27] In the case now before us there can be no question that, even if the argument advanced on behalf of the Government about the duty cast on the Magistrate under S. 421 (2) be accepted there is no doubt that the Magistrate has to pass the final order only after using his discretion, which cannot but be a judicial discretion. From this point of view also the order passed by the Magistrate under S. 421 (2) must be considered to be a judicial order.

[28] Special emphasis is laid by the Advocate General on the opening words of sub-s. (2) of S. 421:

"If it appears to the Magistrate . . . he shall cause the same to be destroyed at the expense of the person in whose possession it was at the time of seizure."

[29] It is contended that the expression "if it appears" indicates that the Magistrate is neither to give any notice to the party concerned nor to hold any enquiry but may proceed to pass an order basing the same on his personal opinion after a visual examination only. Apart from the question whether it is either practicable or feasible for the Magistrate to arrive at a decision without any assistance from either of the parties, viz., the corporation and the person from whose custody the articles are seized, it may be stated at once that the question whether the orders passed by the Magistrate are judicial or ministerial ones must rest not on one clause only but on an interpretation of 8. 421 taken as a whole.

[30] In one sense the word "appear" may refer to that which is seen by the eye, but it is also used in its broader sense as signifying that which is made clear by evidence or is clear to the comprehension when applied to matters of reasoning or opinion.

[31] The expression 'if it appears' is used at various places in the Calcutta Municipal Act as among others in 8s. 259 (1), 272, 388 and 344, and from the context in each case it is clear that the expression is used in the broader sense as indicated above. This clause is used at least at three places in Chap. 28, in Ss. 419 (2), 421 (2) and 421 (3). That which "appears" in S. 419 (2) to the Health Officer and others as unwholesome or unfit for human food is described in the next S. 420 (1) as being so "in the opinion" of those officers. It is manifest that the Legislature was using the expressions "if it appears" and "if in the opinion of" as mutually interchangeable. According to the accepted rules of interpretation, if an ordinary expression like 'if it appears' is used in the wider sense in other parts of the same Act and is also used as an alternative to 'in the opinion' there is no escape from the conclusion that in S. 421 it has also been used in that wider sense. The more so, as there is no doubt so far as S. 421 (3) is concerned.

[32] The word "appear" or "appearing" is one of frequent use in judicial proceedings and is sometimes used in statutes referring to them as meaning

"clear to the comprehension, when applied to matters of opinion or reasoning and satisfactory or legally known or made known when used in reference to facts or evidence."

Various expressions of a similar import are used in the statutes and if reference be made to the Code of Criminal Procedure only we may notice the use of expression "if it appears" in Ss. 169, 170, 173 (8), 209 (1), "sees reason to believe" in S. 186 (1), "if he finds" in S. 209 (1), "if" or "unless the Magistrate is satisfied" in 8s. 210 (1) and 218 (1) or "if he thinks fit" in Bs. 219 (1) and 260 (1) (c). In each one of these cases the conclusion to be arrived at by the Magistrate, etc., is after the exercise of judicial discretion and on a proper appreciation of the materials placed before him. I do not overlook the opinion expressed by the English Court in Robinson v. Corporation of Sunderland (No. 2), (1899) 1 Q. B. 751 at p. 757 : (68 L. J. Q. B. 830) where in considering a statute (8. 36 of the Public Health Act, 1875) that: - "if a house within the district of a local authority appears to such authority by the report of their surveyor or inspector of nuisances to be without a sufficient water-closet," the Court observed:

"The words 'appear to such authority' are obviously put in for the purpose of making the local authority the judges on the question whether the house is without a sufficient water-closet."

It is sufficient to observe that it was not merely on the expression "appear to such authority" that the decision in this case and in similar other ones was arrived at. Reference was made to the opportunity-which the party had, at the earlier stage, as held in Attorney. General v. Hooper, (1893) 3 Ch. 483: (63 L. J. Ch. 18), to raise objection and to lead evidence but had neglected to avail of it and more particularly to the provisions for an appeal as under S. 268 of that Act against this summary decision. Not only the section itself as a whole but the setting in which it appears in the particular statute, will determine the particular interpretation to be put on this phrase. What the intention of the Legislature is has to be ascertained from the case taken as a whole and also with an eye tol reasonableness.

[33] It has already been pointed out that the test to be applied as under Ss. 420 and 421, Calcutta Municipal Act in the case of a perishable article is altogether different from the one necessary when the article is non-perishable. It is only after a proper enquiry is held, the Corporation and the other party are heard, that it may "appear to the Magistrate" as to whether the particular non-perishable article is fit to be condemned or not. The emergency and plenary powers as contained in S. 420 are attracted, even when the owner is not a consenting party, but it is limited to the destruction of articles of a perish. able nature only. The reason is that in the case of a perishable article orders have to be passed on the spot and a decision can be made in a very large majority of cases by a mere look, touch or smell of the thing. But it may not very often be possible for a person to declare off-hand, if the article is not of a perishable nature, that it is liable to be condemned. The facts of this case now before us show unmistakeably that it was impracticable and impossible for the Magis. trate to record an opinion, without material assistance from the Corporation and the party. as to whether the food contained in a large stock of closed tins was either fit for human consumption or not. The extreme urgency which exists in the case of a perishable article is also not present here. The persons named in S. 420 are not, on these grounds, given the authority to destroy such articles on the spot. They are required to bring them before an independent person, the Magistrate, so that he may examine the opinion held by the Corporation Officer and others on the merits and how can he do so without holding an enquiry before arriving at the proper decision? Even if it may be said that the enquiry to be made by the Magistrate is to be of a summary nature and a detailed and long investiga. tion is not contemplated that cannot alter the character of the enquiry or the nature of the orders passed. The expression "if it appears to the Magistrate" as the opening words of S. 421 (2) cannot be taken to vest such Magistrate with unlimited powers with a discretion not to hold a proper enquiry or to make the order passed an administrative or ministerial order only. It is worthy of note that the Calcutta Municipal Act contains no provisions for the party affected by an order, even though improper and unsustainable, to apply for any relief elsewhere. There are no provisions similar to those as found in Ss. 268 or 308, Public Health Act, 1875 (38 and 39 Vict. C. 55).

[34] A further provision, as is to be found in sub-s. (3) of S. 421, places the matter beyond any doubt. The Magistrate acting under S. 421, sits in judgment over the opinion and decision of the Corporation Officer or Councillor and acts as an appellate or a revising authority. It is open to the Magistrate not to accept the case as made by the Corporation and in that event provision is made for the restoration of the articles to the party from whose custody they had been taken. Further, the Magistrate is to exercise his discretion, which no doubt must always be a judicial discretion, to award, to the party under certain circumstances, such compensation for the loss as he might have sustained. Now, is it possible for the Magis. trate to arrive at a correct decision without giving both the Corporation and the party concerned an opportunity of being heard? Moreover, how is the Magistrate to ascertain the amount payable without having heard the party aggrieved? Further, if a decision is arrived at about the quantum of compensation it cannot be suggested that that part of the order is bind. ing on the party as an executive order. It had been conceded before us that the order, if any, allowing compensation is a judicial order. The decision by the Magistrate under S. 421 (3) has to be made, whether for return or for compensation, immediately after he comes to the conclusion under sub-s. (2) of that section that the opinion of the Corporation cannot be accepted. How is the party to be heard at this stage if he had not been intimated from before and is ready with the evidence if required?

(35) Under ordinary canons of interpretation a section is to be taken as a whole. The intention of the Legislature, as to the nature of the authority exercised by the Magistrate, or the character of the order passed, is to be determined with reference to the section as a whole. It is not only impracticable but also unwarranted if the provisions are so interpreted so as to have laid down that the functions of the Magistrate so far as condemning the article is concerned are to be deemed to be executive in nature but the order for compensation, if allowed, will be a judicial one.

[36] Under S. 420 there is no necessity for any provision for the return of the articles to the party from whose custody they might have been taken and no question further arises either for assessing compensation for damages incurred by the party or for awarding the same.

[37] A distinction was attempted to be made between preventive and penal steps as provided in the Act. It was suggested that a penal order may be a judicial order but a preventive order may not be. Further, the preventive portion of the order is to be passed very expeditiously and introduction of judicial procedure will defeat the very purpose of the provisions.

[38] In the first place a preventive step may, in its very nature, be a penal one. To prevent the owner of the article from exposing it for sale and thus to protect public health, the article may be seized or destroyed. Seizing it, pending further decision as to its disposal, is merely preventive but a direction for destruction, by whichever authority it may be, is penal. The order for destruction is a penal one and is in the nature of confiscation of the goods and it is actually so. The decision by the competent authority that an article is unfit for human consumption has the effect under S. 426, Calcutta Municipal Act to transfer the ownership to the Corporation. The order for destruction when passed is really when ownership of the article has vested in the Corporation.

[39] The argument based upon urgency and expedition so far as applicable under S. 420 loses force to some extent at least when the order is one under S. 421 the reason again being that in one case the article is perishable and in the other non-perishable. Unless there be specific provisions abrogating the necessity of service of notice in giving a hearing to the party affected, it cannot be presumed when a penal order is to be passed that no hearing need be given or that the penal order itself is merely a ministerial order by a Magistrate.

(40) From the interest of public health also the Corporation should not be compelled to take the decision by the Magistrate as final and conclusive, as it must be, if the same be deemed to be a ministerial order. If the opinion by the Corporation Officers is not accepted by the Magistrate illegally or without any inquiry it is only proper that the Corporation should have an opportunity of having the matter treated as an order by a Court subordinate to the High Court.

[41] Section 488 of the Act provides for the penalties which may be imposed for certain offences under the Act. Section 407, with 8. 421 . in Obap. XXVIII of the Act, indicates the nature of the offence by sale, storing etc., of any of the articles mentioned therein. For goods or drugs destroyed under S. 421 a person may be convicted under S. 488 of the Act. There is no doubt that if a person is fined under 8. 407 read with S. 488 of the Act the order passed by him is in his judicial capacity and as a Court acting under the High Court. But it is argued that the order for destruction under S. 421 is not a judicial order but is a ministerial direction given by the self-same Magistrate which cannot be revised by the Court. It is permissible for the Corporation to proceed, for the destruction of a particular article, under S. 421 (2) only or along with the same under S. 407 read with S. 488 of the Act. The penalty which may be imposed on a person for the sale, storing, etc., of food and drugs, etc., is of a two-fold nature-one by a direction for destruction under S. 421 (2) and the other by an imposition of a fine under S. 488. The undoubted position is that the order under S. 488 is revisable by the High Court and this Court may, in that connection, come to the conclusion that the procedure followed for condemning the article was illegal or that it had not been proved that the article was unfit for human consumption which could be condemned. It seems to be rather strange that a proceeding in which two different_orders are passed will, for certain purposes be considered to be in course of judicial proceedings and for other purposes executive. The anomaly which will arise on such interpretation if accepted, is that the person aggrieved, even if he succeeds, against an order passed under S. 407 read with S. 488, the only relief that he would be entitled to will be that the fine cannot be imposed. But when the Court comes to the conclusion that the articles could not have been condemned an order passed under sub-s. (2) of S. 421 would become wholly untenable. The party would in equity, and legally also, be entitled to an order in terms of sub-s. (3) of S. 421. If we are to accept the interpretation as put on behalf of the Government and the Corporation that orders passed under S. 421 (2) are merely executive orders manifest injustice and incongruities will follow in certain cases,

[42] There is no doubt that no Court is entitled to depart from the intention of the Legislature as may be ascertained from the language of the Act only because it is thought either unreasonable or inconvenient. But where two constructions are open the Court may adopt the more reasonable of the two. Countess of Rothes v. Kirkcaldy and Dysart Waterwork Commissioners, (1882) 7 A. C. 694 at p. 702; Cooke v. Charles A. Vogeler Co., (1901) A. C. 102; (70 L. J. K. B 181); Mersey Steel and Iron Co. v. Naylor Benzon & Co., (1882) 9 Q. B. D. 648.

(43) In my view the language used in the relevant section indicates that the Magistrate is to exercise a judicial function. Even if it be contended that two constructions are possible I would accept the one which is more reasonable and in consonance with natural justice.

[44] In the view expressed above, even though there is no direct provision that a formal notice is to be given to the party before any action is taken either under sub s. (2) or sub-s. (3) of S. 421 the Magistrate is bound to give notice before he arrives at a decision. It cannot also be contended that an order passed by a Magistrate under S. 421 (2) could be deemed to be merely a ministerial order against which the party aggrieved cannot move this Court. The proposition that all actions taken by the Magistrate under 8. 421 (2) of the Act are merely of a ministerial or executive nature is fundamentally opposed to all notions of justice and canons of fairness. On a reading of the provisions contained in S. 421, and interpreting the section as a whole and the context in which it appears, there is no escape from the conclusion that the order is a judicial order.

[45] I have discussed the question as to the nature of the order passed under S. 421 on the basis of the language used in the Act without any reference to the authorities which were cited before us and which were based on provisions other than one the now before us. As indicated already, there is no direct decision on S. 421 of the Act covering the point now raised. But I would now consider the authorities to which reference had been made before us.

[46] We may in the first instance consider those decisions which have been referred to and arise out of other provisions of the Calcutta or other provisions where the jurisdiction of the High Court was presumed and there is no actual decision on the point now raised need not be considered.

[48] The question of jurisdiction appears to have been raised for the first time in Abdul Samad v. Corporation of Calcutta, 83 Cal. 287: (3 Cr. L. J. 211). This was an application in revision against an order passed by the Municipal Magistrate for demolition for infringement of building rules and the order was one passed under S. 449, Calcutta Municipal Act (Bengal Act III [3] of 1899 now repealed, (the corresponding section under the new Act being Ss. 263 and 364). It having been urged on behalf of the corporation that the High Court had no jurisdiction, sitting in revision, before they could deal with the order that had been made. Woodroffe and • Mookerjee JJ. indicated that the then General Committee had under the section a discretion, as also the Magistrate, when the matter was brought before him. As the Magistrate had a discretion either to make or revise the order under S. 449 of the said repealed Act, the discretion so vested could only be exercised in a judicial manner. This would give the High Court jurisdiction to entertain an application in revision and the order complained of was actually revised. Although the section in question was not the one which is now before us, but the principle similar to the one enunciated by Lord Esher M. R. in Partridge v. General Council of Medical Education, (1890) 25 Q. B. D. 90: (59 L. J. Q. B. 475), already referred in an earlier part of the judgment, was applied for testing whether an order was in the nature of a judicial order or not.

[49] In Ram Gopal v. Corporation of Calcutta, 52 Cal. 962: (A. I. R. (12) 1925 Cal. 1251), another case arising out of the building Regulations (Ss. 363 and 364 of the present Calcutta Municipal Act, Bengal Act III [3] of 1923) a question was specifically raised as to the jurisdiction of the High Court to entertain an application in revision against an order under S. 363 of the said Act. Sanderson C. J. held (Panton J., agreeing) that the Municipal Magistrate, appointed under S. 531 of the Act for the trial of offences under the said Act, is a criminal Court and the order of the Magistrate was a judicial order revisable by the High Court whether in the exercise of criminal or civil jurisdiction.

[50] In a later case, however, Krishen Doyal v. Corporation of Calcutta, 54 Cal. 532: (A. I. R. (14) 1927 Cal. 509: 28 Cr. L. J. 407), where the only question which arose for decision was, whether in a proceeding pending before the Municipal Magistrate for an order for the demolition of an unauthorised structure, the owner of the said unauthorised construction was or was not an accused person. The question being answered in the negative, such a person was held as not exempted from the administration of cath under S. 342 (4), Criminal P. C. This Court seemed to have been of the view that so long as there was no disobedience to the order of demolition passed by the Magistrate, there was no offence. Suhrawardy and Cammiade JJ. distinguished the clear and unequivocal decision by Sanderson C. J. as being an obiter only. I respectfully agree with the decision as given in the earlier case. It was not an obiter but a decision which was necessary for the disposal of the matterthe Court, before it could interfere with the order passed by the Magistrate, had to decide whether the former had jurisdiction to entertain the petition in revision. It is not necessary for us to consider whether the limited and distinct question which came up for decision in Krishen Doyal v. Corporation of Calcutta, 54 Cal. 532: (A. I R. (14) 1927 Cal. 509 :28 Cr. L. J. 407), Was correctly decided. When the proper occasion comes it may be necessary to reconsider the proposition laid down. Without going into the details it may just be indicated that under the Calcutta Municipal Act, it is not always the case that an offence is not committed until there is a disobedience of an order of demolition passed by the Magistrate. The offence, on the other hand, may have been committed when the structure was raised without the necessary eanction or in deviation of an order passed by the Corporation. The jurisdiction of the Municipal Magistrate is invoked when an offence has in the opinion of the Corporation already been committed. What the Magistrate is required to consider is whether the offence had been so committed.

[51] The three decisions referred to above arose out of S. 363 of the Act and it may be argued that the provisions of that section are materially different from those found in S. 421 of the . Act. Accordingly these cases are no direct authority for the proposition that an order passed by a Magistrate under S. 421 (2) is an order passed by him in a judicial capacity and that he is a Court subordinate to the High Court. But there is a clear Bench decision, so far as the legal position of the Municipal Magistrate, who is also acting as the Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, to the effect that he is a Court subordinate to the High Court. For determining the test for differentiating a judicial order from a ministerial one, Abdul Samad v. Corporation of Calcutta, 33 Cal. 287: (3 Cr. L. J. 211) is of some a-sistance. But strictly speaking there being no direct authority on S. 421 of the Act, we had proceeded to interpret the section as it stands and have already come to a conclusion as stated already.

[52] As regards provisions in other statutes, similar to the one in S. 421, Calcutta Municipal Act, reference need he made only to S. 18, Bengal Food Adulteration Act (Bengal Act VI [6] of 1919). The language used and the procedure laid down is almost similar to those in S. 421 of the Act. In a number of cases the High Court had interfered in revision against orders passed by the Magistrate under S. 13, Bengal Food Adulteration Act. The two of the recent decisions are Benarasi Lal Marwari v. Chairman, Asansole Municipality, 42 C. W. N. 731 and Sachi Nandan v. Chairman, Midna. pore District Board, 44 C. W. N. 173: (A. I. R. (27) 1940 Cal. 213: 41 Cr. L. J. 582). In both these cases the Magistrate had in the same proceedings passed orders for destruction or forfei. ture as also orders on the basis that an offence had been committed under S. 6 of the same Act. Whether the order is passed under S. 6 or S. 13 of the said Act, the foundation must be on a decision whether the article is to be condemned or not. The anomalous position which would arise on one part of the proceedings being considered to be ministerial while the other is accepted as judicial has already been referred to. Although the question of the jurisdiction of the High Court was not specifically raised and decided in either of these two cases these are apposite instances which show what difficulties and anomalies would have ensued had the two parts of the proceedings been treated differently.

[59] Reference has now to be made to some of the English decisions on which principally the learned Advocate-General rested his argument. Reference is made in these decisions to 88. 116 and 117, Public Health Act 1875 (38 and 39 vict. C. 55). This old statute has been modified in many important particulars and we shall have to refer to one of the more recent statutes which are now in force. Sections 116 and 117 of the 1875 Act were in the following terms:

"S. 116. Any medical officer of health or inspector of nuisances may at all reasonable times inspect and examine any animal carcase, meat, poultry, game, flesh, fish, fruit, vegetables, corn, bread, flour or milk exposed for sale, or deposited in any place for the purpose of sale, or of preparation for sale, and intended for the food of men, the proof that the same was not exposed or deposited for any such purpose, or was not intended for the food of man, resting with the party charged; and if any such animal carcase, meat, poultry, game, flesh, fish, fruit, vegetables, corn, bread, flour or milk appears to such medical officer or inspector to be diseased or unsound or unwholesome or unfit for the food of man, he may seize and carry away the same himself or by an assistant, in order to have the same dealt with by a justice.

S. 117. If it appears to the justice that any animal carcase, meat, poultry, game, flesh, fish, fruit, vegetables, corn, bread, flour or milk so seized is diseased or unsound or unwholesome or unfit for the food of man, he shall condemn the same, and order it to be destroyed or so disposed of as to prevent it from being exposed for sale or used for the food of man; and the person to whom the same belongs or did belong at the time of exposure for sale, or in whose possession or on whose premises the same was found, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty, pounds for every animal, carcase or fish or piece of meat, flesh or fish, or any poultry or game, or for the parcel of fruit, vegetables, corn, bread or flour or for the milk so condemned, or, at the discretion of the justice, without the infliction of a fine, to imprisonment for a term of not more than three months.

The justice who, under this section, is empowered to convict the offender may be either the justice who may have ordered the article to be disposed of or destroyed, or any other justice having jurisdiction in the place."

[54] Section 308, Public Health Act, 1875, entitles the party aggrieved to bring the same question for a decision by the justice for further consideration. These proceedings are by way of a claim for compensation and most of the authorities cited before us were at the stage when proceedings had been started under S. 309 which runs as follows:

"S. 308. Where any person sustains any damage by reason of the exercise of any of the powers of this Act, in relation to any matter as to which he is not bimself in default, full compensation shall be made to such person by the local authority exercising such powers: and any dispute as to the fact of damage or amount of compensation shall be settled by arbitration in manner provided by this Act, or if the compensation claimed does not exceed the sum of twenty pounds, the same may at the option of either party be ascertained by and recovered before a Court of summary jurisdiction."

[55] In the first place it is to be noticed that S. 117 deals with merely articles of a perishable nature and instead of giving any authority to certain officers, as under S. 420, Calcutta Municipal Act for immediate destruction, under the English Statute direction has to be obtained from a justice. The test of extreme urgency and promptitude applies to actions under S. 117 of the English Act as the justice has to deal with articles of a perishable nature. Observations in decisions on 8. 117 are more apposite if at all, to a case coming under S. 420 and not S. 421, Calcutta Municipal Act. If we overlook this primary distinction between Ss. 420 and 421, Calcutta Municipal Act on the one hand and s. 117, English Act on the other we are apt to be misled.

[56] There is another very important aspect which we cannot lose sight of. Under the English Act even in the case of a perishable article the emergent orders which may be passed by the justice are not final. Further opportunity is afforded to the aggrieved party to have the question, whether the goods ought to have been condemned or not, brought at a subsequent stage before another Tribunal. Under such circumstances the English Courts have interpreted the orders passed under S. 117 in a particular way. There are material points of difference between S. 117, English Act and S. 421, Caloutta Municipal Act; the two statutes are moreover, conceived on different principles and the setting in which the particular sections appear in the two statutes are fundamentally different. It is not only undesirable but we would not be justified in applying stray observa. tions from the decisions of the English Courts for interpreting altogether different provisions which are to be found in the Calcutta Municipal Act.

[57] Although the correct view would be not to rely upon these decisions but as great emphasis had been laid on behalf of the Government we may proceed to consider some of the more important authorities cited before us.

[58] In Walshaw v. Brighouse Corporation, (1899) 2 Q B. 286: (68 L. J. Q. B. 828), the question arose not at the stage when the meat was destroyed but at a later stage when compensation was claimed under S. 309, Public Health Act by the party aggrieved by reason of the seizure of the meat. What the Court of Appeal was called upon to consider was the extent of the powers and authority of an arbitrator under S. 308, Public Health Act. The observations made in connection with the interpretation of Ss. 116 and 117, Public Health Act, 1875, must be taken as influenced by the provisions of S. 308 of which there is no counter part in the Calcutta Municipal Act. It was found that the order of condemnation passed under S. 117 was revisable by the arbitrator. No question arose as to whether the ordinary Court would have had jurisdiction to revise the order passed by the justice under S. 117, if that order had been moved against. The only question was that there being a special provision as contained in S. 308 of that Act, vesting the arbitrator with certain powers, whether the order previously made under S. 117 would be binding on the arbitrator or not. The Court of Appeal found that the arbitrator was not bound by the earlier order as regards the unsoundness of the meat. One of the reasons given, on consideration of the special provisions of English Act that the order passed under S. 117 was an administrative order not a judicial order, is of very little assistance for deciding the case now before us.

[59] The procedure to be followed by the justice when passing an order under S. 117 came up for consideration in In re Bater & Birken. head Corporation, (1893) 1 Q. B. 679: (62 L. J. M. C. 107). In that case also the matter came up before the Court after fresh proceedings had been started under S. 303. The question was as to bow the compensation payable under 8, 308 was to be ascertained. During the proceedings under S. 117, the owner of the meat had attended and given evidence in defence of the meat. Was he entitled to be reimbursed so far as the cost incurred by him for appearance through the S. 117 proceedings ? The Court held that he was entitled to be repaid the cost reasonably incurred by him in attending before the justice and resisting the condemnation of the meat. Charles J. observes at p. 684:

"It is said that the attendance was not the ordinary and natural consequence of the act of the Inspector in seizing the meat. I am unable to agree to that contention. A man who knew, as the appellant did, that the Magistrate would be invited to destroy as unfit for the meat which he believed, and could prove to be not unwholesome or unfit for human food, would naturally attend before the Magistrate, although he was neither summoned nor bound to do so, for registering the destruction of the meat. It was perfectly natural and right for the appellant in my opinion, to go before the Magistrate with his witnesses. But then it is said that the Magistrate had no power to hear of him or his witnesses. No case decides that. No doubt Field J. in White v. Redfern, (1880) 5 Q. B. D. 15 : (49 L. J. M. C 19) and in Vinter v. Hind, (1883) 10 Q. B. D. 63: (52 L. J. M. C. 93) says that the Magistrate need not hear the owner if he likes to refuse to do so; but no case goes so far as to say that the Magistrate has no power to listen to the owner of the meat, Although he is not entitled to be heard, the Magistrate may hear him. If he thinks fit, and on his attendance before the Magistrate, if a charge were formulated against him under S. 117, Public Health Act, with a view to his committal to prison, the Magistrate would have power, I think to bear and determine the charge, then and there, and would have jurisdiction over the cost of the witnesses under S. 18 of 11 and 12 Vict. C. 43. That however was not done. The Magistrate was asked to condemn the carcase, and he very properly heard the evidence tendered by the owner of the caracase, although he was not bound to do so, and in the result he declined to make the order condemned the meat."

[60] The owner of the meat had declined to take the meat so released and the Court rightly held that he could not have refused to take it back.

[61] The provisions in the 1875 [Act] were so interpreted holding that the Magistrate, though not bound, could allow the owner to adduce evienced and also be heard. The position has now been made clear by the Food and Drugs Act, 1938, (1 and 2 Geo. VI, C. 56). Under S. 10 of this Act it is now provided that when officers seizing the articles or food bring it before the justice of peace, if he attends before him upon the application for his condemnation "be entitled to be heard and to call witnesses." This provision confirms the right of the owner to adduce evidence and the law in Bater's case, (1893-1 Q. B. 679: 62 L. J. M. C. 107) is made a part of the statute withdrawing the discretion of the Magistrate. It has been pointed out that ordinarily the owner appears and the Magistrate requires his assistance in determining whether the article should be condemned or not.

[62] In the case above mentioned as also in other decisions of the English Courts emphasis is laid on the emergency of the order. This emergency the Legislature in Bengal takes due note of and makes the necessary provision in S. 420, Calcutta Municipal Act. There is no such emergency in an enquiry under S. 421, Calcutta Municipal Act. It is only when the food or drug is not of a perishable nature the Corporation is bound to take it before the Magistrate. Under the English law, even in the case of perishable articles, no officer of the local body is authorised to destroy the same as in the Calcutta Act. But he must take it to the justice for exercise of the summary power, subject to the revisionary powers as contained in S. 308 of the old 1875 Act. This summary power is given under the Calcutta Act to the different persons mentioned in S. 420.

[63] It would be a wrong analogy to apply these English decisions for the interpretation of S. 421 of the Calcutta Act merely because perishable articles have under the English statute to be taken before a Magistrate and non-perishable ones under the Calcutta Act.

[64] In our view the English decisions referred to cannot be of any assistance or be used as authority in support of the contention that the orders passed by the Municipal Magistrate under S. 421, Calcutta Municipal Act is not a judicial order.

[65] The preliminary objection raised must be overruled. We therefore proceed to consider the case on the merits.

[66] In this part of the case it may be stated at once that the petitioner has failed to show that there has been any error of law or miscarriage of justice committed by the Magistrate.

(67) The question whether the particular tinned foodstuff is or is not deleterious and injurious to public health is a question of fact which must be determined on the evidence adduced in the case.

(68) Reliance is placed on the report submitted by the Director of Public Health Laboratory on 6th December 1947, indicating that there were no indications of deterioration of the contents of the tins examined and that after culture no organism of certain varieties could be isolated. It is also urged that when there are a very large number of tins the examination of some only could not in law be justified as sufficient to condemn the whole lot.

[69] If any complaint can be made against the procedure adopted by the Magistrate it is against the long drawn enquiry which was undertaken by him. After notice to the party concerned, the Court proceeded to examine on the basis of the evidence laid before it the allegations.

[70] The report by the Director of Public Health is only one of the many pieces of evidence which the Magistrate had before him. The examination by the Director was only of particular specimen sent to him whereas before the Magistrate the examination was of a larger number of specimens both by the Corporation experts as also the witnesses brought by the owner. The opinion given by the Director is in no way conclusive and binding on the Magistrate. It was open to him to consider the evidence as adduced and come to a decision. No complaint can be made about the procedure adopted by the Magistrate.

[71] With regard to the other question as to the number of the specimens examined before the Magistrate it cannot be argued that he must examine each and every particle of the foodstuffs or each and every one of the tins. Liberty was given to the opposite party for putting all such samples as he wanted to be examined by the witnesses on behalf of the Corporation. Moreover, even the representative from Mazdas, who had been called by the petitioner had expressed, during his cross-examination, that many of the tins contained unwholesome food. How many tins have to be examined in any particular case must depend upon the facts in each case. In Sachinandan v. Chairman, Midnapore District Board, 44 O. W. N. 173: (A. I. R. (27) 1940 Cal. 213; 41 Cr. L. J. 582), sample taken from one tin out of 25 tins of mustard oil, all being of the same brand and forming part of one consignment, was held to be sufficient in the eye of law to make the forfeiture order with regard to the whole of the consigment. In the case now before us, the original 20 oz, tins were repacked after being reprocessed. A very large number of smaller tins after being reprocessed were found to contain unwholesome food. For the further reasons given by the Magistrate I do not see any reason for disagreeing that the whole lot should be condemned. I have myself gone through the evidence as adduced before the Magistrate and I have no doubt that the conclusion arrived at by him is the only one possible.

[72] The provisions contained in this part of the Calcutta Municipal Act are provisions for the safety of public health and no risk can or should be taken in this matter. In the interest of public health and in view of the provisions in the Act the order passed by the Magistrate is unassailable.

[73] In this view this rule must be discharged and the order passed by the Municipal Magistrate affirmed.

[74] Das Gupta J.—On 2nd December 1947 Haran Ch. Saha of the Calcutta Corpo. ration, on inspection of a stock of jams stored by the petitioner Messrs. A. Hasan & Co. in a godown at 30 Park Lane, seized a number of tins and scaled the remainder of the stock. He produced the tins that were seized by him before the Municipal Magistrate, Calcutta, and prayed for an order for destruction, under S. 421, Calcutta Municipal Act, of the tins produced before him and also the stock sealed in godown. The Magistrate issued notices on the proprietor, manager and others of the petitioner company, and on consideration of oral and documentary evidence that was produced by both sides and examination of some tins, came to the conclusion that the entire stock was unwholesome and unfit for human consumption, and ordered the destruction of the entire stock under S. 421 (2), Calcutta Municipal Act, referred to hereafter as the Act.

[75] The first question for decision, in considering the present petition calling for our interference with this order of destruction, in the exercise of our powers of revisional jurisdiction under S. 435, Criminal P. C., is whether the Magistrate acting under S. 421 (2), Municipal Act is a "Court" within the jurisdiction of this Court. The Advocate General, appearing for the Government of West Bengal, contends that the Magistrate acts as an executive officer under S. 421, Calcutta Municipal Act, and not a Court and the order passed by him is an administrative order and not a judicial order. If this contention be correct, it is obvious, this Court has no jurisdiction to interfere with the order passed in the present proceedings.

[76] It is indisputable that the mere fact that a "Magistrate" acts under S. 421 of the Act, does not make his order amenable to the jurisdiction of this Court. Common sense and authority tell us with one voice that a Magistrate may have executive as well as judicial function to perform, and that whatever functions a Magistrate has to perform under a statute are not necessarily judicial. One of the earliest Indian decisions on this point is reported in In the matter of Rahman Sarkar, 10 Beng. L. R. App. 4: (18 W. R. C. R. 67), where it was held that the order of a Magistrate under the Police ·Act appointing some persons as special constables was an executive act, with which the High Court could not interfere. In Hasanali v. Em. peror, 47 Cal. 843: (A. I. B. (7) 1920 Cal. 635), it was held that a District Magistrate in granting or refusing an application to take the name of a person out of the register, in which it had been entered under the provisions of S. 5, Criminal Tribes Act, does not perform any judicial function, that his functions are administrative, and that the High Court is not entitled to interfere with such an order. In Vijayaraghavalu Pillai v. Theagcroya Chetti, 38 Mad. 581: (A. I. R. (2) 1915 Mad. 360), the Madras High Court had to consider whether they had any power to revise the order of a Magistrate allowing an application to declare that the inclusion of the petitioner before the Court as a candidate for municipal election by the President of the Madras Corporation was illegal. The learned Advocates for the petitioner conceded there that the petition did not lie under S. 439, Criminal P. C., but contended that under the Charter Act, the High Court was competent to revise the order. The Court rejected this contention, holding that the Magistrate in this instance was not a Court of law.

[77] When we turn to S. 421 of the Act, the first thing we notice is that the law does not require the Magistrate to issue any notice on any party, or to examine any witness.

[78] Section 421 runs thus:

"(1) Any animal, food, drug, utensil, or vessel seized under S. 419 which is not destroyed in pursuance of S. 420 shall, subject to the provisions of S. 419, subs. (3), be taken before a Magistrate as soon as may be after such seizure.

(2) If it appears to the Magistrate that any such animal is diseased, or that any such food or drug is unsound, unwholesome, or unfit for human food, or for medicine, as the case may be, or is adulterated, or that any such utensil or vessel is of such kind or in such state as is mentioned in S. 419, sub-s. (2), or is used for preparing, manufacturing or containing such food or drug, he shall cause the same to be destroyed at the expense of the person in whose possession it was at the time of its seizure or to be otherwise disposed of by the Corporation so as not to be capable of being used as human food or medicine.

(3) If it appears to the Magistrate that any such animal is not diseased or that any such food or drug is not unsound, unwholesome, or unfit for human food, or for medicine, as the case may be, or is not adulterated, or that any such utensil or vessel is not used for preparing, manufacturing, or containing the same, the person from whose shop or place the animal, food, drug, utensil, or vessel was taken shall be entitled to have it restored to him, and it shall be in the discretion of the Magistrate to award him such compensation, not exceeding the actual loss which he has sustained, as the Magistrate may think proper."

It is abundantly clear from the words "if it appears to the Magistrate " and the absence of any words requiring any enquiry to be made, or any notice to be issued, that the Magistrate may by just looking at the food produce, be satisfied that it is unwholesome or unfit for human food, or is adulterated, and if he is so satisfied, he shall cause the same to be destroyed. If what is produced before him is an animal, and by merely looking at it he is satisfied that it is diseased, he shall cause the same to be destroyed. It is useful to notice in this connection that some other sections of the Calcutta Municipal Act which entrust the Magistrate with the performance of functions other than the trial of offences, contain clear provisions that notice should be issued on parties concerned, and enquiry held. In S. 363 under which a Magistrate may, on the application of the Corporation, make an order directing demolition or alteration of structures, it is provided that the Magistrate shall not make any such order

"without giving the owner or occupier of the building to be so demolished or altered full opportunity of adducing evidence and of being heard in his defence."

[79] Section 381, which empowers the Magistrate to prohibit the use of buildings for human habitation, provides that the Magistrate shall serve a notice on the owner or occupier of the building of being heard in the Court, and hold such inquiry as he thinks fit to make.

(80) A comparison of these provisions with those of S. 421 of the Act brings home forcibly the deliberate care with which the Legislature omitted from S. 421 the requirement of the Magistrate giving any notice to any party or hearing any evidence, or holding any enquiry, before passing an order of destruction.

[81] It is helpful in this connection to consider the scope and purpose of Chap. XXVIII of the Act, in which chapter, S. 421 occurs. Part V of the Act contains the provisions concerning "the Public Health, Safety and Convenience." Chapter XXVIII is one of the seventeen chapters in this Part, and is about Food and Drugs, which is obviously a very important matter if not the most important matter, for the purpose of "Public Health." Of the 22 sections comprising this chapter 8s. 405 to 416 are with regard to the sale of food and drugs; 417 to 421 with regard to inspection, seizure and destruction; 422 to 425 are as regards the analysis of food and drugs, while S. 426 provides about the restoring of condemned food or drug in the Corporation. Some of the first twelve sections (405 to 416) provide for the licensing of sellers of food etc., while some prohibit the sale of adulterated food, or of food which is not of the prescribed standard of purity, or of "diseased animals or unwholesome articles intended for human food." Contravention of these prohibitions are punish. able, and the penalties are laid down in S. 488. Obviously, however, preventive action is even more necessary than penal steps if the sale of unwholesome food is to be stopped. Sections 417 to 421 are designed for the purpose of this preventive action. Section 417 gives the Health Officer of the Corporation power to:inspect places where unlawful slaughter of animals or sale of flesh is suspected; S. 418 enjoins the Corporation to provide for inspection of animals, food and drugs intended for human consumption; 8. 419 gives the Health Officer or any person authorised by him power to inspect and examine, any animal, food, or drug intended for human consumption, and to seize any such animal or any such food or drug that appears to him to be unsound, unwholesome or unfit for human food or to be adulterated. Sections 420 and 421 are the two sections provided for destruction; S. 421 has already been set out.

"When any animal, food, drug, utensil, or vessel is seized under S 419, it may, with the consent of the owner or the person in whose possession it was found, be forthwith destroyed; or if such consent to not obtained, then, if any food or drug so seized is of a perishable nature and is, in the opinion of the Executive Officer, the Health Officer and Assistant or District Health Officer or any Councillor or Alderman unsound, unwholesome or unfit for human food or medicine, it may likewise be destroyed. The expenses incurred in taking any action under sub-s. (1) shall be paid by the person in whose possession such animal, food, drug, utensil, or vessel was at the time of its seizure."

Two things appear clear from this analysis. The first is that the Legislature thought that both preventive action before sale and penal action after sale were necessary to secure the desired result—the protection of public health against unwholesome food etc. The second is that the preventive measures viz., seizure and destruction were to be taken very speedily. That is why under S. 419, officers may inspect and seize at any time by day or by night, and under S. 420, if consent of the owner or the possessor was obtained, destruction may take place forthwith; even if consent was not obtained, and the article be food or drug which is perishable, it may be likewise destroyed, if the Executive Officer, or Health Officer, and Assistant or District Health Officer or Councillor or Alderman, consider it unwholesome. Where action is not taken under 8. 420, food or drug etc., seized shall be taken to a Magistrate as soon as possible after seizure, and if it appears to him unwholesome, he shall cause it to be destroyed. If anything is clear from the above, it is the importance the Legislature attached to the urgency of speedy action. This alone precludes the possibility of any intention of the Legislature that the procedure of Courts of law for judicial determination should be followed, and explains why, unlike Ss. 363 or 881, S. 421 contains no provision for issuing any notice, or holding any enquiry, or hearing any evidence.

[83] It is also clear that the Magistrate under S. 421 is in the cases of perishable articles of food or drug only an alternative authority to the Executive Officer, the Health Officer or Assistant or District Health Officer, or Councillor, Alderman; but his functions under S. 421 (2) are fundamentally the same as the functions of the above-mentioned officers under S. 420. No person would dream of characterising the action taken by any of these officers "judicial action"; if the same action is taken by a Magistrate, who has not got to follow any different procedure, how can it become judicial action?

[84] These conclusions that the Magistrate acting under S. 421 (2) is just an alternative to the several corporation officers or a Councillor or an Alderman acting under S. 420, and that the law does not require the Magistrate to issue any notice, take any evidence, or hear any party before passing any order under S. 421 (2) make inevitable the further conclusion that the Magistrate acting under S. 421 (2) is an executive officer and not a Court, and his order for destruction is an administrative, and not a judicial order. This Court has, therefore, no jurisdiction to revise the order passed by a Magistrate under S. 421 (2), Calcutta Municipal Act.

[85] Different considerations may arise as regards an order passed under S. 421 (3) of the Act, awarding compensation, but these do not in my opinion affect present problem; viz., whether an order under S. 421 (2) of the Act is a judicial or an administrative order.

[86] I have approached the question as a res integra, for, as far as I could find out, there is no Indian decision as regards the nature of the order under S. 421 (2), Calcutta Municipal Act or any similar provision of any other Municipal Act of India. Two cases under the Food Adulteration Act, where orders under somewhat similar provision as embodied in S. 13 of that Act came before this Court are Sachinandan v. Chairman, Midnapore District Board, 41 C. W. N. 173 : (A. I. R. (27) 1940 Cal. 213 : 41 Cr. L. J. 582); Banarasi Lal v. Chairman, Asansole Municipality, 42 C. W. N. 731. In neither of these cases, however, was the question of this Court's jurisdiction raised or decided. It has to be noticed that in both these cases, the order for destruction or forfeiture was passed by the Magistrate in the same proceeding in which some person was being tried for an offence under S. 6. Food Adulteration Act, so that the scope of an argument that the Magistrate in passing the order under S. 13 was not a Court was considerably reduced. In Chunder Kumar Biswas v. Municipal Corporation, Calcutta, 7 C. W. N. 27, an order for destruction of damaged rice passed by a Magistrate under S. 505 of the old Culcutta Municipal Act was set aside by this Court in its criminal revisional jurisdiction; but here also the question whether the Court has such jurisdiction was not raised or decided. A large number of cases were cited before us on S. 363 of the Municipal Act. In only three of these, was the question of jurisdiction raised. In 1903, this was raised in Abdul Samad v. Corporation of Calcutta, 33 cal. 287, but no decision, was recorded. In fact, there is no discussion at all in the judgment of this point. In Ramgopal v. Corporation of Calcutta, 52 Cal. 962 : (A. I. R. (12) 1925 Cal. 1251), it was held that this Court had jurisdiction to revise such an order as the Magistrate acting under S. 363 was a criminal Court or at least a civil Court. Two years later, in Krishen Doyal v. Corporation of Calcutta, 54 Cal. 532 : (A. I. R. (14) 1927 Cal 509 : 28 Cr. L. J. 407), it was held by Suhrawardy and Cam. miade JJ. that the Criminal Procedure Code did not apply to proceedings under 8.363, Municipal Act, and that the observation of Sanderson C. J. in Ramgopal Goenka's case: (52 cal. 962: A. I. R. (12) 1925 Cal. 1251) that the Criminal Procedure Code did apply to such proceedings, was otiter, and not binding as an authority. It is not necessary for us to consider this question however; for supposing we are bound by authority to hold that a Magistrate acting under S. 363 of the Act is a criminal Court, that authority is of no assistance for the decision of the question whether the Magistrate acting under S. 421 (2) of the same Act is a Court, for as already point. ed out, the terms of S. 363 are substantially different from those of S. 421.

[87] Of more assistance are some English decisions, in which though the question whether the Court has jurisdiction to interfere with an order passed for the destruction of goods was not in terms raised, the question whether such an order under S. 117, Public Health Act is a judicial order or not, and whether it is necessary to hear witnesses, before passing an order for destruction came up for consideration.

[88] Section 117 runs thus:

"If it appears to the Justice that any animal carcase, meat, poultry, game, flesh, fish, fruit, vegetables, corn, bread, flour or milk so seized is diseased or unsound or unwholesome or unfit for the food of man, he shall condemn the same, and order it to be destroyed or so disposed of as to prevent it from being exposed for sale or used for the food of man, and the person to whom the same belongs or did belong at the time of exposure for sale, or in whose possession or on whose premises the same was found, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds for every animal carcase or fish or piece of meat, flesh, or fish, or any poultry or game, or for the parcel of fruit, vegetables, corn, bread or flour or for the milk so condemned, or, at the discretion of the Justice, without the infliction of a fine, to imprisonment for a term of not more than three

The Justice who under this section is empowered to convict, the officer may be either the Justice who may have ordered the article to be disposed of or destroyed, or any other Justice having jurisdiction in the place." It is clear that the function of the Magistrate under the first part of S. 117 is just the same as that of the Magistrate under S. 421, Calcutta Municipal Act. In Walshaw v. Brighouse Corporation, (1899) 2 Q. B. 286: 68 L. J. Q. B. 828) where the Magistrate condemned the meat under S. 117, Public Health Act, and the arbitrator held that the meat was sound, an argument that the decision of the Magistrate was a judicial decision was negatived. The observation of

Vaughan Williams L. J. reported at p. 292 may be noticed. After stating that there can be no doubt that the arbitrator acted within his jurisdiction in finding that the meat was sound and the finding cannot be disputed by anyone interested, he proceeds:

"I understood at one time in the argument that it was meant to be suggested that there had been a judicial order condemning the meat and determining its soundness. In my judgment the order for condemnation of the meat under S. 117 is nothing of the kind." The question came up in another form in Bater's case, (1893) 1 Q. B. 679 : (62 L. J. M. C. 107). Meat belonging to the appellant was seized by the Borough Inspectors under S. 116, Public Health Act, and carried before a justice. The appellant attended and brought evidence to show that the meat was sound. The Justice, after hearing the evidence, refused to condemn the meat. The appellant declined to receive it back. One of the questions which arose for decision was whether the appellant was entitled to be repaid the costs incurred by him, in appearing before the Magistrate and bringing evidence to show that the meat was not unfit. The Court decided that he was so entitled, and there was nothing to stop the Magistrate from hearing evidence. It was observed, however, that it was entirely the Magistrate's discretion to hear any evidence or not. "The procedure by which the condemnation of meat takes place," it was observed "is no doubt to some extent anomalous, since it may take place behind the back of the owner, or if he is present without his being heard at all."

[89] These observations of the English Courts on the provision of S. 117, Public Health Act fortify me in the conclusion I have arrived at on a consideration of the provisions of S. 421, Municipal Act that the Magistrate acting under S. 421 (2) is not a Court but is an executive officer and that his order is an administrative order and not a judicial order.

[90] I agree that the rule be discharged.

Bholanath Chatterjee and another — Defendants—Petitioners v. Chandra Shekhar Bhattacherjee—Plaintiff — Opposite Party.

Civil Rule No. 165 of 1949, decided on 2nd September 1949, from order of Munsif, Dubrajpur (Birbhum), D/- 20th September 1948.

Arbitration Act (1940), S. 39 (1) (vi)—Objections to filing of award — Decision overruling them — Appeal lies though decision also directs decree to be passed in terms of award.

An appeal lies against decision overruling objections to the filing of an award under S. 89 (1) (vi). The fact that by the same order the Court also directed a decree to be passed in terms of the award does not take away the right of the aggrieved party to file an appeal in accordance with the provisions of S. 39: A. I. R. (35) 1948 Pat. 207, Rel. on; A. I. R. (1) 1914 Cal. 899 and A. I. R. (28) 1941 Cal. 202, Ref. [Paras 1 and 2]

Baidyanath Bannerjee and Profulla Kumar Chatterjee - for Opposite Party.

Order .- This rule was obtained by the defendant against an order of the Munsiff of Dubrajpur, District Birbhum, dated 28th September 1948. By the said order the learned Munsiff overruled certain objections taken by the defendant to the filing of the award made on a reference through the intervention of the Court and also directed that a decree be drawn up in terms of the award. The petitioner in this case did not file an appeal under S. 17, Arbitration Act because it is stated before me there was no ground for such an appeal. The complaint of the petitioner is against the order of the Munsiff overruling his objections to the filing of the award. An appeal lies against such a decision, under S. 39 (1) (vi), Arbitration Act. It is not disputed on behalf of the petitioner that ordinarily such an appeal was competent. What is contended for is that the appeal was not competent in this case because by the same order which overruled his objections to the filing of the award the learned Munsiff directed a decree to be passed in terms of the award.

[2] In my opinion the fact that by the same order the Munsiff overruled the objections to the filing of the award and also directed a decree to be passed in terms of the award does not take away the right of the aggrieved party to file an appeal in accordance with the provisions of S. 39. This view is supported by the decision in the case of Sheocharan Mahton v. Sanichar Mahton, A. I. R. (35) 1948 Pat. 207: (26 Pat. 115). Before the enactment of the Indian Arbitration -Act 1940, under the analogous provision of the Code of Civil Procedure where an appeal lay against an order filing or refusing to file an award under S. 104 (f), Civil P.C., in cases where the arbitration was not through the intervention of the Court, the mere fact that the objections to the filing of such an award were overruled by one and the same order by which a decree was also passed in terms of the award did not preclude the party aggrieved by such an order from availing himself of the right of appeal which he had under S. 104 (1)(f), Civil P. C. (See the cases of Kshetra Nath v. Ushabala Dasi, 18 C.W.N. 881 : (A. I. R. (1) 1914 Cal. 899) and Troilokya Nath v. Sukumar Bose, 44 C. W. N. 1084; (A. I. R. (28) 1941 Cal. 202).)

[3] The petitioner's remedy was therefore to prefer an appeal against the order complained of before the proper Court. This rule is accordingly discharged with costs, hearing fee one gold mohur.

[4] This order will not however stand in the way of the petitioner preferring any appeal which he may choose to file against the order of the proper Court.

Kunja Behari Barman and others—Judgment-debtors—Petitioners v. Mritunjoy Prosad Roy Choudhury and others — Opposite Party.

Civil Rules Nos. 345 and 346 of 1949, Decided on 1st September 1949, against order of Addl. Dist. Judge, Alipur, D/- 10th January 1949.

(a) Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act (VII [7] of 1936), S. 37A(2)—Question of limitation depending on date when possession was delivered to certificate holder—Question is one of fact and cannot be raised at late stage.

Where the question of limitation depends on the date when possession was delivered to the certificate holder, it is essentially a question of fact and ought not to be allowed at a late stage, for example, before the District Judge after the case has gone back to him on remand by the High Court.

(b) Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act (VII [7] of 1936). S 37A (2) - Limitation applicable to parties added is governed by S. 22, Limitation Act—Application under S. 37A filed within time against certificate holders—Lessees of latter impleaded beyond period of limitation—As against lessees, proceedings held commenced on date on which they were impleaded—Limitation Act (1908), Ss. 22 and 29.

Bengal Act II [2] of 1942 which inserted S. 37A in the Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act is a local and special Act and the period of limitation applicable would, under S. 29 (2) (a) of the Limitation Act, be governed, as regards parties added, by S. 22, Limitation Act. [Para 11]

Where, therefore, an application under S. 37A. to which all the certificate bolders were made parties, was made within one year of the date on which S 37A, came into force, but, on objection being raised by the certificate holders, their lessees were impleaded after more than a year when S. 37A came into force:

Held that in so far as the lessees were concerned the proceedings must be deemed to have commenced on the date on which they were impleaded. [Para 11]

Annotation ('42 Com.) Lim. Act, S. 29, N. 3, Pt. 3a.

(c) Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act (VII [7] of 1936). S. 37A (2)— Application under S. 37A— Names of present occupiers need not be stated therein—Addition of lessees beyond period of limitation does not attract bar of limitation—Limitation Act (1908), Ss. 22 and 29.

In order that an application under S. 37A may be an effective application all that is necessary is to mention the names of the decree-holder and the landlord and the mortgagees who may come within S. 37A (4) of the Act. It is not necessary to state in the petition under S. 37A the names of the alleged present occupiers or of the under raiyats. The addition of the lessees of the certificate holders at a date beyond the period mentioned in S. 37A (2) of the Act does not therefore attract the bar of limitation. [Para 11]

Order .- These two Rules are at the instance of the applicants under S. S7 A, Bengal Agricul. tural Debtors Act. The facts are shortly these: The petitioners are agricultural tenants under the Bhowanipur Wards Estate the proprietors whereof are opposite parties Nos. 1 to 8 represented by the Manager, Court of Wards. The petitioners held two tenancies and rents having fallen into arrears at the instance of the Bhowa. nipur Wards Estate two certificates for rent were issued and in execution of these certificates the two tenancies were brought to sale on 24th January 1938. Possession through Court was taken on 17th June 1939. Section 37A, Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act was inserted by Bengal Act, II [2] of 1942, and came into force by a Notification on 18th June 1942. On 4th June 1943 two applications which have given rise to the present revision cases were filed by the debtors under S. 37A of the Act. These two applications were registered as Cases Nos. 625 (S) of 1943 and 626 (s) of 1943 of the Special Debt Settlement Board of Diamond Harbour. The parties impleaded in these applications were the disqualified proprietors, namely opposite parties Nos. 1 to 8, represented by the Manager, Court of Wards. On an objection raised by the Manager, Court of Wards, opposite parties Nos. 6 and 7 who are two of the disqualified proprietors were added as parties to the application, on 7th Sep. tember 1945. These two opposite parties filed an objection on the ground that they were lessees under the Wards Estate, the leases having be. come operative on 16th August 1939, that is, before the relevant date mentioned in S. 87A of the Act. On 24th November 1945 the Special Debt Settlement Board dismissed the applications solely on the ground that the certificate. holder who was the auction-purchaser was not in possession on or after relevant date, that is, 20th December 1939. The other objections raised were overruled by the Debt Settlement Board. Against the order of the Debt Settlement Board the petitioners took two appeals to the Appellate Officer. These were numbered as Debt Settlement Board Appeals Nos. 132 of 1945-1946 and 134 of 1945-1946. On 27th June 1946 the Appellate Officer allowed these appeals. Against the order of the Appellate Officer four petitions in revision were filed before the District Judge, two of these were filed by the Court of Wards being numbered as 150 of 1946 and 152 of 1946. Two other petitions which were filed by opposite .

parties Nos. 6 and 7 were numbered as 151 of 1946 and 153 of 1946. By an order dated 23rd September 1947, the District Judge allowed all these petitions being of the opinion that the leases in favour of opposite parties Nos. 6 and 7 were completed on 16th August 1939 and as such the applications under S. 37A could not be maintained. Against the order of the District Judge the petitioners filed only two petitions in this Hon'ble Court. On these petitions two Rules were issued by Mukherji J., being numbered as Oivil Revision Cases Nos. 2067 of 1947 and 2068 of 1917. It appears that in the petitions which were filed in this Court the number of the corresponding revision petitions before the District Judge was given respectively as 150 of 1946 and 151 of 1946. The corresponding numbers of the appeals before the Appellate Officer were given as 132 of 1945-46 and 134 of 1945-46. It would appear, therefore, that in the petitions filed there was a mistake in not putting down the numbers of all the revision cases which were filed before the District Judge but the number of the appeals which were filed before the Appellate Officer was correctly given in both the petitions. These revision cases came on for hearing before Mukherji J. By his order dated 29th June 1948 the learned Judge allowed these applications. In the course of his judgment it was observed that the real point for decision was not when sanction of the Board of Revenue was obtained to the grant of the two leases in favour of opposite parties Nos. 6 and 7 but when there was a completed agreement for a lease. The Rules were accordingly made absolute and the cases were sent back to the learned District Judge for disposal according to law and in accordance with the directions contained in the judgment. The learned Assistant Government Pleader who appeared on behalf of the Court of Wards did not then raise any objection that there was an omission in the revision petitions to mention the correct numbers of the corresponding revision petitions before the District Judge. The whole case was heard on the merits and as I have already observed an order in favour of the present petitioners was made by the learned Judge.

(2) After the matter was received back on remand by an order dated 10th January 1949 the learned Additional District Judge was of the opinion that the leases in favour of opposite parties Nos. 6 and 7 were not completed before 7th July 1940 that is, still after the relevant date. The learned Additional District Judge, however, went on to observe that the applications of the petitioners before the Debt Settlement Board were barred by limitation, opposite parties Nos 6 and 7 having been added as parties to the proceedings after the lapse of the period of one year mentioned in S. 37A (2) of the Act. Against the order of the learned Additional District Judge the debtors moved this Court and obtained two Rules which are numbered as 345 and 346 of 1949.

[3] Mr. S. K. Das appearing on behalf of the petitioners has contended that the learned Additional District Judge was not entitled to go beyond the order of remand made by this Court and his finding on the question of limitation was therefore uncalled for and the learned Additional District Judge should have dismissed the petitions which were filed before him by the Court of Wards and by opposite parties Nos. 6 and 7.

[4] Before I deal with this contention it is necessary to consider two preliminary objections raised on behalf of the Court of Wards by the learned senior Govt. Pleader appearing on behalf of the Court of Wards.

[5] The two preliminary objections are: (1) that no order can be passed in these revision cases because the names of opposite parties Nos. 6 and 7 appear in the revision petitions as Wards of Court represented by the Manager, Court of Wards, and not in their personal capacities, notices of the Rule were however served on them. It would appear however that in the earlier revision cases, viz. 2067 and 2068 of 1947 opposite parties were described in the same way as they are in the present revision cases. No objection was raised at the time as regards the incorrect description of the opposite parties. When the matter went back before the District Judge no grievance was made that the opposite parties had no opportunity of placing their cases before the Court. The whole case including the defence of the opposite parties Nos. 6, 7 has been heard at all stages of this litigation.

[6] In these circumstances I am not inclined to accede to a technical objection like this which would not advance the course of justice.

[7] (2) The second objection is that in mention. ing the numbers of the revision cases before the District Judge the petitioners have omitted to mention revision cases Nos. 152 and 153. This mistake also appears in the earlier revision cases but the correct numbers of the appeals before the Appellate Officer have been given in the present petitions and they were also given correctly in the earlier revision cases. If the correct numbers of the Debt Settlement Board cases and the correct numbers of the appeals before the Appellate Officer are mentioned, in my opinion, this Court is entitled to consider all the cases which were filed at the instance of the present petitioners and the Court of Wards. Rules of procedure are meant not for the purpose of hindering justice. The records were and are now before the Court and I do not feel pressed to deny the petitioners the appropriate relief simply on the ground that somebody entrusted to draft the petitions made mistake in putting down two numbers on the revision petitions. If necessary, I would have allowed the petitioners to amend the present petitions but in my opinion this is not necessary as the correct numbers of the proceedings before the Debt Settlement Board and before the Appellate Officer have been correctly given.

- [8] The two preliminary objections raised on behalf of the Court of Wards must therefore be overruled.
- [9] As regards the merits the learned Additional District Judge has found that the leases in favour of opposite parties Nos. 6 and 7 were completed on 7th July 1940. This finding is based on two important pieces of evidence, viz., the memorandum of the Manager, Court of Wards, dated 15th April 1940 which clearly shows that the leases were not completed on that date and a challan dated 7th July 1940 depositing the requisite amount. The finding of the Additional District Judge is therefore correct on the materials before him.

[10] The learned Senior Government Pleader, bowever, contends that this is not the relevant question for enquiry under S. 37A of the Act. The relevant enquiry is whether the certificate holder was in possession on the relevant date that is on 20th December 1939. This point again was not raised by Assistant Government Pleader before Mr. Justice Mukherjee when the learned Judge heard Civil Revision Cases Nos. 2067 and 2068 of 1947. But quite apart from this, it would appear from the record that it was assumed before Mukherji J. that possession followed the conclusion of the agreement. As the agreement was not completed till 7th July 1940, the possession of the lessees, opposite parties Nos. 6 and 7 did not begin till after that date. This contention on behalf of the opposite parties must therefore be overruled.

[11] The only other question which remains for discussion is the question of limitation. As I have already indicated the question of limitation was not raised at any previous stages. It was, however, after the case had gone back on remand that the learned Additional District Judge thought that the application under 8. 37-A was barred by the special limitation contained in S. 37-A (2). Before I deal with this point, I may point out that the learned Additional District Judge was clearly wrong in thinking that the question of limitation in the present case is a pure question of law. Under S. 37-A (2) an application is to be filed within one year of the date when the relevant Act being Act II [2] of 1942 came into force or when possession was delivered to the certificate holder. The learned Additional District Judge seemed to think that the latter date synchronised with the former, an assumption for which there was no foundation in the records. The question of limitation may depend on the date when possession was delivered to the certificate holder. This is essentially a question of fact and in my opinion Mr. Das was right in contending that the question of limitation ought not to have been allowed to be raised at that late stage. But apart from this ground let us see the validity or otherwise of the objection raised by the Court of Wards I have already said that S. 37-A came into force on 18th June 1942. The application under S. 37-A was filed within time on 4th June 1943. To this application the certificate holders were all made parties. On objection being raised by the certificate holders that they have granted leases to opposite parties Nos. 6 and 7 the latter were impleaded on 7th September 1945 which is more than a year from the date when S. 37-A came into force. It is contended that as opposite parties Nos. 6 and 7 were added as parties on 7th September 1945 the proceedings as against them must be deemed to have commenced on that date. This contention is correct. Act II [2] of 1942 is a local and special Act and the period of limitation applicable would, under 8. 29 (2) (a), Limitation Act, be governed, as regards parties added, by S. 22, Limitation Act. In so far as opposite parties Nos. 6 and 7 are concerned, the proceedings must be deemed to have commenced on that date. The question, however, remains whether the application under S. 37-A was a competent application in the absence of the alleged lessees. Rule 77 (a) of the Rules framed by the Local Government under the Agricultural Debtors Act prescribes a form for filing an application under S. 37-A. This is Form 19A. Appendix A. of the revised form states that the names of certain persons have to be mentioned in different columns. Column 3 requires the applicant to state the names and addresses of the decreeholder or the certificate holder. Column 9 requires the applicant to state the names and addresses of the under-raigats in occupation of the land at the date of sale. Column 10 requires the applicant to mention the names of the present occupiers of land and the date from which and the title under which the occupants are in possession. Columns 11 and 12 require the applicant to mention the names of the landlord and mortgagees who may come within S. 37-A (4) of the Act. Rule 77 (bb) requires notice of the application to be served only on the decree-holders landlords and the mortgagees but not on the under-raiyats or the present occupires whose names and addresses are to be mentioned in Columns 8 and 10.

that in order that an application under S. 37. A may be an effective application all that is necessary is to mention the names of the decree holder and the landlord and the mortgagees who may come within S. 37 A (4) of the Act. It was not necessary to state in the petition under S. 37 A the names of the alleged present occupiers or of the under-raiyats. The addition of the alleged lessees, opposite parties Nos. 6 and 7 at a date beyond the period mentioned in S. 37-A (2) of the Act does not attract the bar of limitation. The reasons given by the learned Additional District Judge, for allowing the petitions before him cannot, therefore, be sustained.

[13] The result, therefore, is that these rules must be made absolute, the order of the Additional District Judge set aside and the applications under S. 37-A, Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act are allowed.

[14] The petitioners are entitled to their costs in these rules the hearing-fee being assessed at two gold mohurs in each case.

(a) Penal Code (1860), S. 409—Banker—Persons working in bank are not bankers.

Persons working in a bank are not bankers. Therefore S. 409 has no application in respect of an alleged criminal breach of trust by such persons.

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 253 (2) and 403— Rule obtained for quashing proceedings discharged as not pressed — Subsequent application under S. 253 (2) is not barred—S. 403 has no application.

Where the rules obtained for quashing certain oriminal proceedings are not pressed and, therefore, discharged, there is no decision given on the merits and there is nothing in the Criminal P. C. which would prevent the petitioners from applying thereafter for a discharge under S. 253 (2), before the trial Magistrate. There is no such thing as res judicata in criminal trials. The only section which lays down a principle which resembles the principle underlying the doctrine of res judicata is S. 403, but that section has no application whatsoever to the case in question. (c) Penal Code (1860), Ss. 409 and 405— Entrustment – Deposit in bank — There is no entrustment — Relationship between bank and customer is that of creditor and debtor.

Section 409 presupposes entrustment. When a person opens a current account in a bank, there is no question of entrustment. The relationship between the bank and the customer is one of creditor and debtor. Hence there can be no case against a bank or its officers for committing an offence under S. 409 in respect of the money deposited by a customer: A. I. R. (28) 1941 Cal. 713 and A. I. R. (34) 1947 P. C. 44, Rel. on. [Para 5]

Order. — This is a rule obtained against an order passed by Sri K. C. Banerjee, Police Magistrate, Alipore, rejecting the application by one Gopesh Chandra Pal for being discharged in certain proceedings under S. 409 read with S. 120B, Penal Code.

[2] The facts briefly are as follows: The complainant Nirmal Kumar Das Gupta opened a current account with the Mabaluxmi Bank. He issued a cheque in favour of Messrs. Dunlop Rubber Company on the Bank for the sum of Rs. 2000 odd on 6th September 1948. On 9th September 1948, the complainant Nirmal Kumar Das Gupta received a telephone message from Messrs. Dunlop Rubber Company that the cheque had been returned by the Bank on the ground that the signature differed. Upon this the complainant went and saw the accountant of the Bank whose name is Lalit Sen and it is alleged that Lalit Sen told him that he should sign the cheque again and that there would be no trouble. The complainant signed the cheque again and it was presented on 11th September 1948 but payment was again refused, this time on the ground that the Bank was not functioning owing to a strike by the employees. The statement of the complainant is that these excuses for not meeting this cheque were false and frivolous and the Bank was trying to gain time for an application to the High Court under the Companies Act and he alleged that on 11th September 1948 Gopesh Chandra Pal the Managing Director, Rajani Dutt, the Chief Accountant and Lalit Sen, the Accountant, misappropriated his money dishonestly. This is stated in Para. 8 of the petition of complaint. In Para 11 of the petition of complaint, it is stated that the Managing Director and the Accountant abetted Rajani Dutt in the commission of the offence of misappropriation punishable under s. 403, Penal Code and also of the offence of misappropriation punishable under S. 409, Penal Code. The complainant was examined by the learned Magistrate and in the last few lines of the examination his statement is recorded thus : 'The said Bank as represented by the accused cheated me and also committed criminal breach of trust." (3) I have been at pains to mention these matters in detail in order to show that the complainant had a very hazy notion of who had cheated him or who had misappropriated his money. In one paragraph he says that all the accused persons misappropriated his money and in another paragraph he says that of the accused two of them abetted the other and finally in his initial statement he says that the Bank cheated him and committed criminal breach of trust. Upon this complaint being made, summonses were issued against Gopesh Chandra Pal, the Managing Director, and Lalit Sen, the Accountant, under S. 409 read with S. 120B, Penal Code. Here, again, I would point out that the learned Magistrate had a very vague idea of the mean. ing of S. 409 Penal Code. Section 409, Penal Code deals with criminal breach of trust by a public servant or by a banker, merchant, factor, broker, attorney or agent. Now, neither of these persons against whom summonses were issued were public servants, nor were they bankers. They were persons working in a bank and persons working in a bank are not bankers. Therefore S. 409, Penal Code has absolutely no application to this case. After the accused appeared a Rule was obtained from this Court for quashing the proceedings against them. On the date of hearing of the Rule learned advocate appearing for the two petitioners stated that he was instructed not to proceed with the Rules. Upon that statement being made my learned brother Blank J. passed an order "The Rules are accordingly discharged." Thereafter the petitioners moved the trial Magistrate praying that they may be discharged under S. 253 (2), Criminal P. C., on the ground that no offence had been disclosed against them in the petition of complaint or the initial statement. The learned M gistrate refused the prayer and the present Rule has been obtained against that order.

[4] On behalf of the complainant learned advocate contends that the previous Rules having been discharged it was not competent for the petitioners to move the trial Court, nor was it competent for them to obtain a Rule from this Court. He contends that the grounds upon which a discharge has been claimed before the learned Magistrate are almost identical with the grounds given for the issue of the present Rule. In my opinion this preliminary objection should fail. The Rules which were obtained were not pressed and no decision of the Court was given on the merits. There is nothing in the Code of Criminal Procedure which would prevent the petitioners from applying for a discharge under S. 253 (2), Criminal P. C., before the learned Magistrate. There is no such thing as res judi. cata in criminal trials. The only section which lays down a principle which resembles the principle underlying the doctrine of res judicata is S. 403, Criminal P. C., but that section has no application whatsoever to the present case. There may have been many grounds for learned Advocate appearing before Blank J., for not pressing the applications. I do not propose to go into the question why learned Advocate was instructed not to proceed with the Rules. The fact that he did not proceed with the Rules does not in my opinion debar the petitioners from moving the Magistrate for an order of discharge if such an order were permissible in the circumstances of this case.

[5] I shall now consider whether the learned Magistrate was right in refusing to discharge the petitioner. The learned Magistrate says that the statements in paras. 8 and 9 in the petition of complaint are almost conclusive for the purpose of making out a case prima facie under S. 409 read with S. 120B, Penal Code. I have dealt with this matter in the earlier part of my judgment and I have held that S. 409, Penal Code, has no manner of application to the facts of this case. The learned Magistrate goes on to say further that it is premature to order a discharge without hearing the evidence in the case. In my opinion the learned Magistrate is wrong in this view. If ever there was a case for acting under S. 253 (2), Criminal P. C., and for discharging the accused at the earliest stage of the proceedings before evidence is taken this case is one of them. It should be remembered that when a person opens a current account in a bank, there is no question of entrustment. The relationship between the bank and the customer is one of creditor and debtor. The bank is free to use the money deposited by the customer or constituent in any way it likes and is not bound to keep the money apart. No bank can ever function if it was obligatory on it not to touch the money of a person who makes a deposit in its current account. The bank is liable to pay the money to the customer when called upon but until called upon to pay it the bank is entitled to utilise the money in investment and in other ways for learning profit therefrom. On this ground also it is quite clear that there can be no case against the Bank or any of its officers for committing an offence under S. 409, Penal Code. Section 409, Penal Code, presupposes an entrustment and in the present case there was no entrustment. For this view I would refer to the case of S. Pakrashi v. Emperor, 45 C. W. N. 1071 : (A. I. R. (28) 1941 Cal. 713) and also to the case of Attorney General of Canada v. Attorney-General to the Province of Quebec, 51 C. W. N. 427; (A. I. R. (34) 1947 P C. 44).

(6) The main point for consideration is whether any money was entrusted to the persons who have been brought up for trial before the Magistrate. Obviously there was no such entrustment and there could not be any such entrustment. The money was paid into the Bank and not to these persons. It was not suggested that the money was handed over to either of these persons and that they put the money into their pockets. Learned Advocate for the complainant contended that the ingredients of an offence punishable under S. 403 read with S. 120B, Penal Code, have been disclosed in the petition of complaint and in the initial statement of the complainant. Here, again, I must differ from this view. There is nothing in the petition of complaint or in the initial statement to show that there has been any misappropriation by the accused persons. If a cheque is dishonoured, that does not connote misappropriation. The remedy for a cheque being wrongfully dishonoured lies in the civil Court. This is not a matter which is to be tried by a criminal Court. It is curious that the learned Magistrate has issued summons against Gopesh Chandra Pal and Lalit Sen. If there is any allegation which, if true, would establish their guilt, then Rajani Dutt would, it seems to me, be the chief villain of the piece because he is the person who made the endorsement on the intimation slip that the signature differed Why he was left out I find it difficult to appreciate. Be that as it may, I am of opinion that on the facts stated in the petition of complaint and in the statement made in the initial deposition of the complainant no case of a criminal nature has been made out against either of the accused persons Gopesh Chandra Pal and Lalit Sen. Lalit Sen has not moved this Court against the order of the learned Magistrate. The present Rule has been obtained by Gopesh Chandra Pal only. This Court however has the power to act suo motu under S. 489, Criminal P. C., and in disposing of the case of Gopesh Chandra Pal I have also taken into consideration the case of Lalit Sen. They both stand on the same footing so far as the question whether a criminal case has been made out by the complainant is concerned.

[7] In these circumstances I discharge both the accused Gopesh Chandra Pal and Lalit Sen and make this Rule absolute.

Judgment. — Defendant 2 is the appellant in this Court and this appeal arises out of a suit for specific performance of contract. The plaintiff's case was that Uttar Manikpur Hitakari Bank, which is represented in these proceedings through its Secretary, had agreed to sell certain lands to the plaintiff under certain conditions. That offer was accepted but the Bank did not accept the amount and the property was sold by the Bank to defendant 1. Hence the suit for specific performance.

[2] Defendant 1, the subsequent transferee from the Bank, filed a written statement denying all allegations of collusion with the Bank or its officers and further pleaded that he was a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of the alleged previous contract with the plaintiff. Defendant 2 filed a separate written statement alleging that the plaintiff did not fulfil her part of the contract, time was of the essence of the contract, and denying all the other allegations made about collusion and other statements. The learned Munsif decreed the suit in part directing defendant 2 to execute and register a kobala in favour of the plaintiff in respect of the property in suit within a particular date and in default, the kobala was to be executed by the Court at the costs of defendant 2. An appeal was taken against this decision by defendants 1 and 2 before the Court of the District Judge. A crossobjection was filed by the plaintiff with a prayer that defendant 1 should also be directed to execute and register the kobala jointly with defendant 2.

- District Judge. The first with regard to the fact whether there was any contract of a sale as asserted by the plaintiff and if so, whether the plaintiff bad fulfilled her part of the contract entitling her to specific performance of the said contract. The second point taken up for consideration by the Court was whether the trial Court erred in not directing the execution of the kobala by defendant 1 jointly with defendant 2. The first point was found against the appellant and the appeal was dismissed. With regard to the second point, the Court allowed the cross-objection directing both defendants 1 and 2 to execute the kobala.
- [4] A second appeal has been filed by defendant 2, the Secretary of the Uttar Manikpur Hitakari Bank making the plaintiff as also defendant 1 respondents to the appeal. During the pendency of this appeal in this Court, defendant 1 died and no steps were taken within 90 days by the appellant for bringing the heirs on the record. Subsequently, the appellant obtained a Rule from this Court (C. R. 1202 (S) of 1947) to show cause why the abatement should not be set aside and the heirs of defendant 1 brought on the record. This Rule came up for hearing on 19th February and was discharged. An application for setting aside the abatement and for substituting the heirs of the deceased respondent 2, was rejected. The further contention on behalf of the petitioner appellant that the heirs of the deceased respondent might be added as party respondents to the appeal was also disallowed.
- [5] On behalf of the respondents a preliminary objection had been taken to the competency of the present appeal. It is contended that the appeal having abated, so far as defendant 1 is concerned, the present appeal is not properly constituted and ought to be dismissed.
- [6] On behalf of the appellant Mr. Ghose contends that under O. 41, R. 4, Civil P. C., it is competent for this Court at this stage to hear the appeal and to give relief even to the dead defendant against the heirs of respondent 2, against whom the appeal has already abated.

Rule 4 will be attracted only if "the decree appealed from proceeds on any ground common to all the plaintiffs or to all the defendants". As indicated already, defences as put forward by the two defendants were not identical. Defendant 1 had rested his case particularly, if not wholly, on the plea that he was a bona fide purchaser for value without notice of the earlier transaction. Defendant 2, on the other hand, contested the claim of the plaintiff to obtain specific performance, because the plaintiff has failed to do or perform her part of the contract.

- [7] Mr. Ghose argues that the common ground on which both the defendants could and did resist the claim of the plaintiff was that the suit as framed impleading the Uttar Manikpur Hitakari Bank as being represented by its Secretary, was bad in law. The suit is not maintainable against the Secretary but ought to have been brought against the Bank registered under the Co operative Societies Act.
- [8] Under rule 4, the decree appealed from must proceed on a ground common to the defendants, but in this particular case the ground which is proposed to be urged in this Court, as being the common ground to all the defendants, does not find any place in the judgment of the lower Court far less being a ground on which the judgment was based. The view has been consistently held in this Court ever since the decision in the case of Protab Chunder Dutt v. Kurbanissa Bibee, reported in 14 W. R. 130, that the relevant provision of the Code of Civil Procedure does not empower an appellate Court to exercise the power with which it proposes to base its own decision is common to all the defendants. but only when it also finds that the decision of the lower Court has proceeded on such common ground. It may be noted in passing that S. 337 of the Code then in force, was in terms similar to R. 4 of O. 41 of the present Code. At p. 131 Dwarkanath Mitter J observed as follows:

"Section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure says, it is true, that an Appellate Court may, on the appeal of one defendant only, reverse the entire decree of the lower Court in favour of all the defendants; but that very section says that this power can be exercised only when the decision of the lower Court has proceeded upon a ground common to all the defendants.' In the present case, the decision of the Munsif did not and could not proceed upon a ground common to all the defendants. The defences set up by them were altogether different from one another and whilst the plaintiff was bound to prove his bill of sale as against the defendant, Abedoonissa, he was under no such obligation so far as the other defendants were concerned. The issue as to whether that bill of sale is a genuine instrument or not was laid down by the Munsif, it is true, but that issue had been raised by the defendant Abedunnissa alone, and she was the only party interested in its adjudication Defendant 2 had nothing whatever to do with it, for his defence was that he was entitled to hold possession of the lands in question as a tenant of the plaintiff."

The separate defences filed in the present suit also indicate the different nature of the defence as put forward by the two defendants. It is only when the dccree appealed against has proceeded upon a common ground to all the defendants, that is, when the Court below has made a decree against several defendants upon a finding which applies equally to all of them, that under the relevant provisions any one of the defendants may appeal against the whole decree and the appellate Court may reverse or modify that decree in favour of all the defendants, even though some of those defendants may not be before the Court (vide Puran Mal v. Krant Singh, 20 ALL. 8: (1897 A. W. N. 154) and Chajju v. Umrao Singh, 22 ALL. 386: (1900) A. W. N. 120).

[9] On the facts of the present case, there is no escape from the conclusion that the ground which the appellant wants to urge in this Court as being a common ground for defendants 1 and 2 was not urged or made the basis of the decision of the Court below. Rule 4 cannot, therefore, be attracted.

[10] It is not necessary in view of this decision to go into the other points affecting the applicability of B. 4 of O. 41, Civil P. C. When there is already an order of abatement recorded by the Court, it has been decided in some earlier decisions that R. 4 cannot be attracted (vide Protap Chandra v. Durga Charan, reported in 9 C. W. N. 1061 and Naimuddin Biswas v. Maniraddin, reported in 32 C. W. N. 299: (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Cal 184).)

[11] I must, therefore, hold that the appeal having abated against the heirs of the deceased defendant 1, defendant 2 is not competent to maintain this appeal. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs. Leave to appeal under cl. 15, Letters Patent was asked for and refused.

V.S.B. Appeal dismissed.

Judgment.— This is an appeal by the Express Dairy Limited against an order of conviction passed by Sri N. K. Ghose, Municipal Magistrate, Calcutta, convicting the Company of having committed an offence punishable under S. 407 read with S. 488, Calcutta Municipal Act. In short, the company was charged with storing for sale adulterated milk. The company has been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 500. Various defences were taken in the Court below. On the merits the defence was that the milk was not adulterated and in support of that various points were raised regarding the method of the examination of the milk.

[2] Having regard to the decision at which I have arrived, it would not be proper for me to consider the merits of the case. Mr. Das appearing on behalf of the company points out to me that there was no examination of the company in accordance with the provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C. He further points out that the provisions of S. 242, Criminal P. C., were not also observed. On these grounds he says that the whole trial has been vitiated. His argument is that by virtue of the provisions of S. 5, Criminal P. C., the offence with which the Company has been charged should have been tried in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure. On behalf of the Corporation Mr. Mukherjee contends that there has been substantial compliance with the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure and that the accused has not been prejudiced by anything done by the learned Magistrate. On behalf of the Crown Mr. Banerjee adopts the contentions raised by Mr. Mukherjee. A further argument placed by them is that it is not possible to follow the provisions of Ss. 242 and 842, Criminal P. C. inasmuch as the accused was merely a juridical person and not an actual person. That being so, they contended that there could be no personal examination of the Company under S. 342, Criminal P. C., nor could there be any explanation given regarding the offence charged to the company personally in accordance with the provisions of S. 242, Criminal P. C.

[3] There can be no doubt that as the Company is merely a juridical person, the charge could not be explained to the Company itself nor could the Company personally make a plea. It is also obvious for the reasons stated above that the Company could not be personally examined in accordance with the provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C. The question which arises is whether by reason of these circumstances the Court was absolved from following the provisions of Ss. 242 and 342, Criminal P. C. In my opinion the Court was not so absolved. The Code provides in S. 205 for the appearance of an accused by his pleader. The word 'pleader' does not necessarily mean a lawyer engaged to argue the case but it includes an agent duly empowered to answer all questions on behalf of the accused. Now, in this case it was possible for the Company to be represented by somebody and indeed no other means of appearance were possible. If the Company was represented by what I may term its agent, then it was the duty of the Court to follow the provisions of Ss. 242 and 342, Criminal P. C., as if such agent were the accused. In the present case the Company authorised a lawyer to defend the case, but it is not at all clear that the lawyer was an agent of the Company for all purposes; that is to say, it is not quite clear that the lawyer was given the right to do all such things as the Company could have done if it were a physical being. From the record it appears that one Mr. Calloden, the Manager of the Shop in Lindsay Street where the milk was seized, appeard on the date fixed for the trial. To neither of them was the charge explained in accordance with the provisions of S. 242, Criminal P. C. I shall assume for the moment that Mr. Calloden was em. powered to do all things which the Company could have done and that he was a physical embodiment of the juridical person which was the Company. If that be so, it was the duty of the Court to state to Mr. Calloden the particulars of the offence of which he was accused and to ask him if he had any cause to show why the Company represented by him should not be convicted. This is clearly laid down in S. 242, Criminal P. C., which is in the following terms:

"When the accused appears or is brought before the Magistrate, the particulars of the offence of which he is accused shall be stated to him, and he shall be asked if he has any cause to show why he should not be convicted; but it shall not be necessary to frame a formal charge."

Nothing of the kind was done by the learned Magistrate. What he has stated is as follows:

"Mr. N. B. Guha appears with Mr. Calloden, Sales Manager of Express Dairy Co., Ltd., and denies the charge and says R. N. Sharma does morning duty and looks after sales at the time, etc."

It is very difficult to understand what the learned Magistrate means. Was he reproducing the statement of Mr. Guha or of Mr. Calloden? I am unable to decide this question. I find that the learned Magistrate has made no attempt to follow the Code of Criminal Procedure. He seems to be oblivious of the provisions of S. 5, Criminal P. C. There is nothing in the record to show that the offence was ever explained either to Mr. N. B. Guha or to Mr. Calloden, nor is it possible to find out who denied the charge. It is clear, therefore, that the provisions of S. 242, Criminal P. C., have not been followed.

[4] I now turn to the consideration of the question whether the provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C., have been followed. It is admitted on behalf of the respondent and the Crown that there has been no examination of anybody in accordance with the provisions S. 342, Criminal P. C.

[5] The next question for decision is whether the failure to observe these provisions of the Code would vitiate the trial, or whether these errors were of such a nature that they are curable with the help of the provisions of S. 537, Oriminal P. C., on the ground that the accused has not been prejudiced by these errors of procedure. It has been held by this Court that the failure to observe the provisions of S. 242, Criminal P. C., vitiates the entire trial; see the case of Gopal Krishna v. Matilal Singh, 54 Cal. 359: (A. I. R. (14) 1927 Cal. 196: 28 Cr. L. J. 155). Its has also been held in a long series of decisions that failure to observe the provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C., also vitiates a trial. It has been contended by learned Advocate appearing on behalf of the Corporation that the recent decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Pulukuri Kottaya v. King. Emperor, 51 C.W.N. 474: (A.I.R. (34) 1947 P. C. 67: 48 Cr. L. J. 533), has really done away with these decisions and he contends that having regard to this decision it should be held that these errors are curable: by invoking the aid of S. 537, Criminal P. C. In my opinion the decision of the Privy Council has not decided that these decisions of the Indian Courts are incorrect. In the case before the Judicial Committee the question involved was whether the denial of the right given to an accused person by the provisoto S. 162, Criminal P. C., amounted to an illegality which vitiated the entire trial. The Judicial Committee held that failure to give the accused the benefit of the proviso to S. 162 of the Code was a serious matter, but that in the particular circumstances of that case the error was curable by S. 537, Criminal P. C., inasmuch as the accused had not been prejudiced. It did not deal directly with the provisions of Ss. 242 and 342, Criminal P. C. In passing, however, their Lordships made certain observations which are to be found at p. 479 of the aforesaid report. I may mention in this connection that Mr. Pritt appeared on behalf of the accused and contended that the error committed by the Crown was incurable. He argued that a breach of a direct and important provision of the Code of Criminal Procedure could not be cured and that it must lead to the quashing of the conviction. Their Lordships remarked that this argument found some support in two cases namely in the case of Tirkha v. Nanak, 49 ALL. 475: (A.I.R. (14) 1927 ALL. 350: 28 Or. L. J. 291) and In re Madura Muthu Vannian, 45 Mad. 820: (A. I. R. (9) 1922 Mad. 512: 24 Cr. L. J. 124) in which the view was expressed that any failure to examine the accused under S. 342, Criminal P. C., was fatal to the validity of the trial and could not be cured under S. 537 of the Code. Their Lordships then expressed the opinion that the argument of Mr. Pritt was based on too narrow a view of the operation of S. 587, Criminal P. C. They did not say that the failure to observe the provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C. was curable under S. 537 of the Code if it could be shown that it did not prejudice the accused; nor did they anywhere say that failure to observe the provisions of S. 242, Oriminal P. O. was curable under S. 537 of the Code if the error did not cause prejudice to the accused. I do not think therefore that this case is of much help to the respondent. The decisions regarding the effect of the non-observance of the provisions of Ss. 242 and 842, Criminal P. C. therefore remain unshaken.

[6] I would further add that I am quite unable to appreciate how, S. 587, Criminal P. C., can ever apply to a case where the provisions of 8. 842 of the Code have not been observed. If an accused person is convicted without the observance of the provisions of S. 342 of the Code it would amount to a conviction of a person without properly hearing his defence. In India the accused is not permitted to give evidence and the provisions of 8. 342 of the Code which give an opportunity to the accused to place before the Court in his own words his explanation regarding the facts appearing against him and to place before the Court in his own words what his defence is. This is a very important and fundamental right. Before a Court can find a person guilty it should hear what that person has to say. The failure to examine the accused under S. 842, Criminal P. C., deprives the accused of the right to place his entire defence before the Court and it amounts to a fundamental error in a criminal trial, an error which cannot in my opinion be oured by the provisions of S. 537, Criminal P. C. on the ground that there was no prejudice to the accused.

(7) As regards the failure to observe the provisions of S. 242, Criminal P C. I have already said that this Court has decided that the failure vitiates the entire trial and nothing has been said against this decision by the Judicial Committee. As it is a decision of a Division Bench of this Court I am bound to follow it and no other reason is necessary to be given for holding that the trial is vitiated by reason of the non-observance of the provisions of S. 242, Criminal P. C.

[8] Having regard to what has been said above I hold that the entire trial has been vitiated. The order of conviction and sentence are set aside and the case is sent back for retrial de novo by Sri S. P. Chatterjee, Municipal Magistrate, in the light of the observations made above.

[9] Mr. Das on behalf of the company undertakes that the company shall appoint a person to represent it at the trial for all purposes as if he were the company itself.

D.H. Conviction set aside; retrial ordered.

(c) Interpretation of Statutes — Non-compliance with statute, when amounts to illegality and irregularity, stated — Tests to distinguish illegality from

It cannot be affirmed as a proposition of universal application that non-compliance with every imperative provision of law renders the proceedings a nullity. The question depends on the nature, scope and object of the particular provision which has been violated. It is difficult sometimes to distinguish between an irregularity and a nullity, but the safest rule to determine what is an irregularity and what is a nullity is to see whether the party can waive the objection; if he can waive it, it amounts to an irregularity; if he cannot, it is a nullity: 35 Cal. 61 (F.B.), Rel. on. Das J.—This appeal is at the instance of the defendant and is directed against the judgment and decree dated 29th March 1945 passed by Mr. P. P. I. Vaidyanathan, learned District Judge, Malda, affirming on appeal the judgment and decree dated 17th November 1944 passed by Mr. S. C. Chakravarty, learned Subordinate Judge, Malda decreeing the plaintiff's suit.

property appertained to 2 jamas held by the defendants under Sadek Reja. The latter instituted a suit for rent and recovered a decree. In execution of the decree, the property was put up to sale and was purchased by Charu Chandra Sarkar, pleader of the decree holder on 26th March 1940. The judgment debtor's application for setting aside the sale failed. The auction purchaser Charu Chandra Sarkar took possession through Court on 31th December 1940 and later sold the property to the plaintiff on 16th December 1942. The plaintiff having failed to get possession, instituted the present suit for declaration of title and for possession.

[3] Defendant 2 who contested the suit, pleaded that the plaintiff's vendor did not acquire any title by his auction purchase in view of the provisions of O. 21. R. 73, Civil P. C.

[4] Both the Courts below overruled the defence and decreed the plaintiff's suit. Defendant 2 has preferred this appeal.

[5] Mr. Bakshi appearing on his behalf, has reiterated the ground taken in the Courts below and has contended that the prohibition contained in O. 21, R. 73, Civil P. C. hereinafter called the Code, applies to a pleader of the decree-holder and makes the sale a nullity.

[6] I may point out at the outset that no case of fraud on the part of the decree-holder has been proved in this case.

[7] The validity of the contention depends on the interpretation of O. 21, B. 73 of the Code, which runs as follows:

"No officer or other person having any duty to perform in connection with any sale, shall, either directly or indirectly, bid for, acquire, or attempt to acquire any interest in the property sold."

[8] The corresponding S 292 of the Code of 1882 did not contain the words "other person."

[9] The old S. 292 was construed in the case of Alagiri Sami v. Ramnathan, 10 Med. 111, to exclude a Vakil, on the ground that a Vakil cannot be regarded as an officer having any duty to perform in connection with the sale.

[10] As a legal practitioner is an officer of the Court only in a limited sense, the view taken in the Madras case may be supported on that ground.

[11] The further question viz., whether a pleader has any duty to perform in connection with the sale, has to be carefully considered bearing in mind the principle underlying the section and the intention of the legislation.

[12] In the Transfer of Property Act which was also enacted in 1882, we find in s. 136, an express prohibition as regards legal practitioners buying or trafficking in actionable claims.

[13] The principle underlying both the sections is that persons contemplated therein should not be even exposed to the suspicion that in the discharge of their duties, their conduct might be influenced by any personal consideration.

[14] In construing any Act of the Legislature the verbal construction of the particular section in question, if it be plain and simple, must govern the Court in arriving at its conclusion. If there be any doubt or difficulty in the wording of the particular section in question an enquiry is permissible into the history of the enactment and any supposed defect in the former legislation on the subject which it wanted to cure: Queen v. Bishop of London, (1889) 24 Q. B. D. 213 at pp. 224, 225.

[15] I now proceed to construe the section bearing in mind the principle underlying the section and the above rule of construction.

is a "person who has any duty to perform in connection with the sale". These words were construed in Shiam Lal v. Girraj Kishore, 49 ALL. 292: (A. I. R. (14) 1927 ALL. 76), to be "intended to prohibit all those persons who have anything to do with the machinery of the sale or having any interest in the result of the sale." This view is consistent with the collocation of the rules preceding R. 73.

[17] If this be the correct view of the relevant words in R. 73, it is difficult to say that the duty of the pleader of the decree holder ends with the obtaining of the order for sale, as was supposed in In re a Pleader, I. L. R. (1946) Mad. 521:

[18] Even after the order for sale is made, the pleader has to see that the sale proclamations when the bids may be favourable to the decreeholder. He has to apply for and obtain leave to bid on behalf of the decree-holder. He may pray for a resale under certain circumstances. In cases under chap. XIV, Ben. Ten. Act, he has to exercise the option given to the decree-holder under S. 165 of the Act. He is therefore not wholly unconnected with the machinery of the sale.

[19] It has been suggested that the words "any person who has any duty to perform in connection with the sale" refer to the persons entrusted with the holding of the sale, e. g., an auctioneer, bailiff, etc. This would have the effect of narrowing down the scope of the rule and would be inconsistent with the purpose of the rule and would not prevent the mischief the rule was intended to guard against. The decree-holder has been put under a limited ban from bidding at sale under R. 72. If his pleader is left unrestricted, it would leave the door wide open for evasion of R. 72. Moreover, the decree-holder's pleader is in a fiduciary position towards the decree-holder, and, the principles enunciated in Nugent v. Nugent, (1908) 1 Ch. 546: (77 L. J. Ch. 271) which was applied by this Court in Jiteswari Dasi v. Sudha Krishna, 59 cal. 956: (A. I. R. (19) 1932 Cal. 672), viz, that a person in a fiduciary position having special means of knowledge actual or probable ought not to be allowed to buy or bid for the property without the leave of the Court and that nobody ought to be allowed to get into a position where his interest conflicts with his duty, should be kept in view in construing the section.

[20] The decree-holder's pleader settles the terms of the sale proclamation and conducts the entire litigation on behalf of the decree-holder, he has special means of knowledge. He is in a position of confidence and should not allow himself to be placed in a position where his personal interest may conflict with his duty towards his

of the decree holder is hit by O. 21 R. 73 of the Code.

[22] Coming to the decisions, we have a decision in Kamakhya Dutt Ram v. Shyam Lal. A. I. B. (16) 1929 Oudh 285: (4 Luck. 635), where the purchase by a decree holder's pleader was upheld. No reasons are given for the conclusion. On the other hand, the decision in Sunderbai v. Bapuna, A. I. B. (16) 1929 Nag. 305: (116 I. C. 65), seems to prefer the opposite view. The decision in Shiam Lal v. Girraj Kishore, 49 ALL. 292: (A. I. B. (14) 1927 ALL. 76), did not decide the position of a pleader. The decision in In rea Pleader, I.L.B. (1946) Mad. 521: (A. I. B. (33) 1950 C/9 & 10 1946 Mad. 245: 47 Cr. L. J. 708 F. B.), following the earlier case in Alagirisami v. Ramanathan, 10 Mad. 111, fakes a contrary view. The judicial decisions are thus not uniform.

[23] In Subharayudu v. Kottayya, 15 Mad. 389, the decree-holder successfully challenged a secret purchase by his pleader. The point now under consideration did not require a decision. Their Lordships quote with approval the following passage from Greenlaw v. King, (1840) 3 Beav. 49: (10 L. J. Ch. 129):

"The question is not whether there was fraud or no fraud, but whether the Court will permit a person standing in the fiduciary and confidential situation in which B was, to make himself an interested party in the very transaction which he as trustee was bound most vigilantly to superintend."

Alexander Shaw, 13 W. R. 209 (at p. 214) (S.B.) on which Mr. Bakshi relied was a case of a joint purchase by the decree-holder and a pleader of the judgment-debtor under suspicious circumstances, and did not touch the present question. The case of Aghorenath Chakravarty v. Ram Chandra Chakravarty, 23 Cal. 805, was one where a purchase by a pleader for the judgment-debtor was held to enure for the benefit of the judgment-debtor on the principle that "it would be acting in violation of all rules of equity and good conscience if we were to hold that the defendant is entitled to maintain his purchase to the detriment of the plaintiff."

The above cases illustrate the anxiety of the Courts to maintain the purity of the sales in auction. On similar grounds S. 66 of the Code forbids benami purchases at court sales.

[26] The effect of the above decisions supports the view taken by me that a purchase at the auction sale by a pleader of any of the parties is liable to be set aside, as being in contravention of O. 21, R. 73 of the Code.

[27] This leads us to consider whether an auction purchase which is hit by 0. 21 R. 73 makes the sale void or voidable.

[27a] Mr. Bakshi contends that the use of word shall makes the prohibition mandatory and renders the sale a nullity.

ther by principle nor by authority. It cannot be affirmed as a proposition of universal application that non-compliance with every imperative provision of law renders the proceedings a nullity. The question depends on the nature, scope and object of the particular provision which has been violated. In Holmes v. Russell, (1841) 9 Dowl. 487, which was quoted with approval in Ashutosh Sikdar v. Behavilal Kirtania, 35 Cal. 61 at p. 72: (6 C. L. J. 320 F. B.) Coleridge J., observed as follows:

"It is difficult sometimes to distinguish between an irregularity and a nullity, but the safest rule to determine what is an irregularity and what is a nullity is to see whether the party can waive the objection; if he can waive it, it amounts to an irregularity, if he cannot, it is a nullity."

[29] The rule now in question is intended for the benefit of the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor and may be waived by them without any infringement of public right or policy.

[30] Judged in the light of the above principles, the purchase by a pleader of the decreeholder is not a nullity but is merely voidable.

[31] This conclusion is also supported by the fact that a purchase by the decree-holder whose position cannot be worse than that of his pleader, is only voidable in the absence of a leave of the Court under R. 72.

[32] In this view, the purchase by Charu Chandra Sarkar which was unsuccessfully challenged by the judgment debtor, is binding on the defendant and the plaintiff has acquired a good title by his purchase from Charu Chandra Sarkar.

[33] The only contention raised in the appeal fails. The appeal must therefore be dismissed with costs.

Guha J .- I agree.

Criminal Appeal No. 138 of 1948, Decided on 12th August 1949.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 234, 239 (d)—In furtherance of object of conspiracy to cheat, accused persons forging large number of thumb impressions on pay sheets—Limitation in S. 234 held did not apply.

Where in furtherance of the dominant object of the conspiracy to cheat, the accused persons were alleged to have forged a large number of thumb impressions on pay sheets and for these specific acts of forgery, charges under S. 467, Penal Code on 116 counts were framed against accused G, on 105 counts were framed against accused M and on 15 counts were framed against accused A:

Held that the case came under cl. (d) of S. 239 and that in such a case the limitation as to the number of offences contained in S. 234. Criminal P. C. did not apply: A. I. R (25) 1938 P. C. 130, Foll. [Para 15]

(b) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 235—Charges absolutely clear and unambiguous—Accused not to be deemed to be prejudiced by mere plurality of counts.

Where the charges are absolutely clear and unambiguous and strictly in conformity with S. 233, Criminal P. C the accused cannot be deemed to have been prejudiced merely by the plurality of counts. Where the accused committed 116 offences of forgery in pursuance of the conspiracy to cheat:

Held that one trial for all the different counts set out with sufficient clearness and precision was less prejudicial and less embarrassing from the point of view of the defence: A. I. R. (12) 1925 Cal. 341, Ref.

(c) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 196A (2)—Cognisable offence punishable with imprisonment for two years or upwards—Subsidiary acts which are non-cognizable offences also alleged—Sanction not necessary.

If the object of the conspiracy is a cognisable offence punishable with imprisonment for two years or upwards no sanction is required under S. 196A (2). There is difference between the object of a conspiracy and the means adopted to achieve that object and if the object is not hit by S. 196A (2) it does not matter whether that object is sought to be attained by non-cognizable offences. The mere fact that the subsidiary acts, which are means to the achievement of the principal object of the conspiracy, are non-cognisable offences will not attract the operation of S. 196A (2) provided the principal or "dominant" object falls outside its scope. Where the principal object was to cheat which was a cognisable offence punishable with imprisonment for 7 years, the case does not fall within the mischief of S. 196A (2) and the fact that in the charge of conspiracy it is also alleged that for the purpose of cheating the accused committed forgeries of thumb impressions which are offences under S. 467, Penal Code and non-cognisable offences does not attract S. 196A (2): A. C. (1898), S. 342.

Section 73, Evidence Act is quite general in its terms and applies to all case sand there is no exception in favour of an accused person. If there is nothing in the Criminal P. C. which precludes its application to criminal trials there is no reason why the plain language of the section should not be given its full effect. Section 342, Criminal P. C. does not make S. 73, Evidence Act inapplicable to criminal trials. The procedure followed in taking specimen thumb impressions of the accused under the direction of the Court is in strict compliance with S. 73 and S. 45, ill. (c), Evidence Act and also S. 5 of Act XXXIII [33] of 1920: Case law discussed.

(e) Evidence Act (1872), S. 45 - Finger-print expert - Court to satisfy itself as to value of evidence of expert like any other evidence - Evidence of such expert is however more reliable than hand-writing expert.

It cannot be laid down as a rule of law that it is unsafe to base a conviction on the uncorroborated testimony of a finger-print expert. The true rule seems to be one of caution, that is to say, the Court must not take the expert's opinion for granted, but it must examine his evidence in order to satisfy itself that there can be no mistake, and the responsibility is all the greater when there is no other evidence to corroborate the expert. The Court cannot delegate its authority to the expert but has to satisfy itself as to the value of the evidence of the expert in the same way as it must satisfy itself as to the value of any other evidence. Though the evidence of a handwriting expert is frequently found to be faulty, the evidence of a thumb impression expert is more reliable because with regard to finger-prints it has never been found that two finger prints are identical in all respects:

S. C. Taluqdar and C. F. Ali-for Appellant. Harideb Chatterji and N. K. Sen-for the Crown.

Lahiri J .- In April 1949, the Government of Bengal received reports from the Collector of Burdwan about acute economic distress in certain parts of that district and sanctioned certain sums of money on various dates amounting to a total of about 4 lacs under the Famine Code to be spent on Test Relief operations under the provisions of the said Code. These operations were carried on in 52 different centres through the District Board under the control of the Collector between the months of April and July 1943. The District Board, in its turn, carried out the operations by "Agents" who used to be employed on a commission basis. Purulia Ambalgram road under P. S. Kethgram was one of the 52 Centres where Test Relief operation in the shape of earth work was taken up and one Gulzar Shaikh (who has since died) was employed as an agent at this Centre. Under S. 63 of the Famine Code read with para. 6 of the Famine Manual, the Collector directed that the Agent would employ his own men and the District Engineer would have to pay the Agent the following: (a) Cost of temporary staff employed and (b) Supervision allowance to the Agent [vide'Collector's order dated 11th May 1943-Ext. 1 (41)]. Acting under this order, the District Engineer authorised the Agent to appoint the following temporary staff (1) One Pay Master for every 500 labourers, (2) one Work Sircar for 200 labourers, (8) one dafadar for every 100 labourers [vide Ex. 68 (1)]. To supervise the work of the Agents there was to be a Supervisor under the District Board. The duties of the Agent in carrying out the works were specified in various circular orders and instructions issued by the District Engineer from time to time, as will appear from Exs. 68 (2), 68 (8), 68 (4) and 68 (5). The following were some of the more important duties of the Agents and Supervisors: (1) Men from neighbouring districts are not to be employed for the relief works of the Burdwan Dis. trict. (2) Agents should maintain a Muster Roll which will be eigned by Supervisors in course of inspection. (8) Measurements of earth work are to be entered daily in Measurement Books to be maintained by the Agents and they are to be submitted once a week along with Muster Rolls and Paysheets to the District Engineer. (4) Measurements are to be checked regularly and Muster Rolls are to be checked daily by Supervisors and their initials are to be affixed at the end of the entries of each date. (5) Entries in Measurement Books, Paysheets and Muster Rolls are to be made without leaving any blank space. Supervisors and Sub-overseers are to sign the paysheets and Muster Rolls whenever they visit any centre and corrections, if any, are to be signed by the Supervisor.

[2] Exhibit 1 (29) shows that allowances at the rates of 8, 6 and 4 p. c. were sanctioned for the Agents upon daily labourers employed by them upto 500, 501 to 2000 and above 2000 respectively.

[3] The system followed in carrying out the earth work was as follows: (a) Gangs of Coolies working in a centre and consisting of males, females and children were employed in different batches working under a mate who was himself a coolie and also a representative of the coolies working under him and used to receive payments on behalf of all the members of his gang on affixing his thumb impressions on paysheets. (b) Attendance of coolies used to be recorded in muster rolls maintained for the purpose and paysheets used to be drawn up showing the quantity of earth work done by each batch and the amounts of money paid by the Agent against the receipt containing the thumb impression of the mate to whom the payment is supposed to have been made and also the signature of the witness of payment, the signature of the Sarkar and a certificate by the Supervisor about the accuracy of the entries. (c) Daily wages were to be paid at the rate of -/8/- for a male and -/6/- or -/7/. for a female labourer against a daily output of 100 cubit feet of earth work. (d) The Agent used to receive payments from the District Board on production of periodical abstracts of paysbeets certified as correct by the Supervisor.

[4] One Santosh Kumar Bhattachariya was the supervisor of the District Board and Ghulam Rahaman, Mirza Ghulam Hossain, Abdul Based and Gora Chand Chakravarty were members of the temporary staff maintained by the Agent Gulzar Shaikh (deceased) in the Purulia Ambalpur Section of the Test Relief operations. The prosecution case is that the deceased Agent had submitted a bill for Rs. 16,732-12-6 claiming the amount as actually spent by him against 21,09,822 cubic feet of earth work done in the Purulia Ambalpur Section and had received an amount of Rs. 16,599 in several instalments from the District Board on the strength of paysheets submitted from time to time. As a result of departmental enquiry, however, it transpired that the total quantity of earth work shown in the paysheets was considerably in excess of the work that had been actually done, that payments alleged to have been made to mates had been artificially inflated by including the names of fictitious and non-existent persons in the muster rolls and by showing that a particular person had worked for a larger number of days than he had actually done and that payments were shown to have been made in the paysheets against forged thumb impressions and in this way the District Board had been cheated to the extent of a considerable sum of money. The prosecution case further is that the accused named above along with one Abadhut Majhi entered into a criminal conspiracy to cheat the District Board of Burdwan by fabricating muster rolls and paysheets and making false entries as indicated above. One of the co-conspirators according to the prosecution case named Bholanath Majhi, made a confession at the time of the investigation and he has been examined as an approver in the case. A finger-print expert and a handwriting expert examined thumb impressions and the handwriting appearing in the different paysheets and compared them with the specimen thumb impressions and handwritings of the different accused taken in Court and as a result of his examination the finger-print expert gave it as his opinion that: (a) the specimen of the right thumb impression of the accused Ghulam Rahaman was identical with the finger-impressions in the pay sheets against the names of 108 mates who were named by the expert in his evidence; (b) the specimen of the left thumb impression of Ghulam Rahaman was identical with the thumb impressions in the pay sheets against the names of four mates; (c) the specimen of the right middle finger impression of Ghulam Rahaman was identical with the finger impressions in the pay sheets against the names of four mates; (d) the specimen of the right thumb im. pression of the accused Mirzs Ghulam Hossain was identical with the finger impressions in the pay sheets against the names of 39 mates; (e) the specimen of the left thumb impression of the accused Mirza Ghulam Hossain was identical with the finger impressions in the paysheets against the names of 66 mates; (f) the specimen of the left thumb impression of the accused Abdul Based was identical with the finger impressions in the pay sheets against the names of 15 mates; (g) the specimen of the left thumb impression of the accused Gora Chand Chakravarty was identical with the finger impressions in the paysheets against the names of thirty-one mates.

[5] We need not refer to the opinion of the handwriting expert; because nothing hinges on that opinion in this appeal and that opinion has not also been relied upon by the Court below.

[6] Upon the aforesaid allegations all the four appellants named (1) Ghulam Rahaman, (2) Mirza Ghulam Hossain, (3) Abdul Based, (4) Santosh Kumar Bhattacharjya were placed on their trial on a charge under S. 120B, Penal Code and besides that common charge Ghulam Raha. man was specificially charged under S. 467, Penal Code on 116 counts in respect of each thumb impression alleged to have been forged by him; Mirza Ghulam Hossain was similarly specifically charged under S. 467, Penal Code on 105 counts in respect of the thumb impressions alleged to have been forged by him; Abdul Based was similarly specifically charged under S. 467, Penal Code on 15 counts in respect of the thumb impressions alleged to have been forged by him; Santosh Kumar Bhattacharjya was also specifically charged under S. 420/109, Penal Code on eight counts. Besides these four persons Gora Chand Chakravarty, who has not appealed to this Court, was also placed on the trial on charges under Ss. 120B and 467, Penal Code, the charge under B. 467 being on 31 counts and Abadhut Majbi who has been acquitted was charged under S. 120B, Penal Code only.

evidence in the case and it is not also disputed that the accused Santosh was employed as the Supervisor under the District Engineer and his duty was to sign the certificates in the pay sheets and generally to maintain the measurement books. The other four accused were members of the temporary staff employed by the Agent Gulzar Sheikh and no fixed duty was allotted to them and by turn one or other of them kept the muster roll or drew up the pay sheets or signed as witnesses of payment.

[8] Under notification No. 495J., dated 17th February 1947, issued by the Government of Bengal under S. 269 (1), Criminal P. C., the trial was held by the Additional Sessions Judge of Burdwan with the aid of assessors, and the trial went on from day to day for a period of nearly three months from 26th January 1948 to 22nd April 1948. 406 witnesses were examined by the Court of the committing Magistrate and 357 witnesses by the Court of Session, because some of the witnesses examined by the committing Magistrate had died and others were not available and the evidence of still others was tendered for cross examination. Besides the oral evidence the prosecution produced hundreds of exhibits and sub-exhibits to prove the complicity of the different accused. As a result of the trial all the assessors unanimously found the accused Abadhut Majhi not guilty of the offences charged against him and the learned Additional Sessions Judge accepted that finding and acquitted him. With regard to the remaining five accused, two of the assessors found them not guilty of the offences and this opinion was rejected by the learned Judge. One other assessor found the accused Gora

Chand Chakavarty not guilty under S. 120B but guilty under S. 467, Penal Code and the other accused guilty of all the charges against them. The learned Judge rejected the opinion of not guilty under S. 120B, Penal Code in favour of Gora Chand because the materials on the record do not afford any ground for differentiation between the charge under S. 120B and the charge under S. 467, Penal Code. The fourth assessor found all the accused except Abadhut Majhi guilty of all the charges against them and this opinion was accepted in its entirety by the learned Additional Sessions Judge. In the result the accused Santosh Kumar Bhattacharjya was sentenced to to rigorous imprisonment for one year and to pay a fine of Rs. 150 for each of the two charges under Ss. 120B and 420/109 and in default of payment of the aggregate fine of Rs. 800 to suffer rigorous imprisonment for three months more. Ghulam Rahaman and Mirza Ghulam Hossain were sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for one year and to pay a fine of Rs. 150 for each of the two charges under Ss. 120B and 467, Penal Code and in default of payment of the aggregate sum of Bs. 300 to suffer further rigorous imprisonment for a further period of 3 months but the sentences of rigorous imprisonment to run concurrently; Abdul Based and Gora Chand Chakravarty were similarly sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for six months and to pay a fine of Rs. 100 for each of the two charges under 8s. 120B and 467, Penal Code and in default of payment of the aggregate sum of Rs. 200 to suffer rigorous imprisonment for an additional period of two months, the sentences of rigorous imprisonment to run concurrently in each case. In awarding the sentences, the learned Judge very rightly took into consideration the impecunious condition of the accused and also the fact that they were helpless tools in the hands of the principal conspirator, the agent, named Gulzar Sheikh who had died. In the case of Gora Chand Chakravarty he rightly observed that this accused joined in the conspiracy at a very late stage and in the case of Abdul Based it was found that the number of instances in which he was implicated were fewer.

[9] Against the aforesaid order of conviction and sentence the present appeal has been filed by four viz., Ghulam Rahaman, Mirza Ghulam Hossain, Abdul Based and Santosh Kumar Bhattacharjya. Out of these four, again, Santosh Kumar Bhattacharjya filed an application from fail praying for an order that his name might be struck off from the category of the appellants as he did not desire to prosecute the appeal. This petition is dated 17th september 1948, and the signature of the petitioner is attested by the jail clerk, Sailendra Nath Biswas.

[10] Mr. Taluqdar appearing in support of the appeal has raised the following points: (1) that the trial has been vitiated by a misjoinder of charges because more than three offences have been tried together at the same trial, and in support of this point reliance has been placed upon the well-known case of Subramania Iyer v. King Emperor, 28 I. A. 257:(25 Mad. 61 P. C.). (2) Even if the joinder of charges be permissible under the law the accused in the present case have been bewildered by a plurality of charges and the prospect of a fair trial was endangered by the production of a mass of evidence tending by its mere accumulation to induce an undue suspicion against the accused and consequently the trial is bad. In support of this proposition reliance was placed upon the decision of the Bombay High Court in the case of Queen-Empress v. Fakirapa, 15 Bom. 491 and the case of Alimuddi Naskar v. Emperor, 52 cal. 253 : (A. I. R. (12) 1925 Cal. 341 : 26 Cr. L. J. 487). (3) The prosecution under S. 120B, Penal Code is invalid in the absence of a sanction under S. 196A, Criminal P. C. (4) The procedure of taking the specimen thumb impression in Court, as followed in this case, is not permissible under the law. (5) Undue importance has been placed upon the evidence of the finger-print expert which cannot be accepted unless it is corroborated by other evidence.

[11] On the merits of the case it has been argued that the evidence adduced by the prosecution is unworthy of acceptance as a large number of witnesses examined in this case were concentrated in a police camp and deposed at the dictation of the police and the evidence of the executive engineer, Ramnath Chatterjee (P.W. 256) shows that his measurements are unreliable as they were undertaken about a year after the earth work had been completed and after a substantial portion of the work done had been washed away by flood. It is urged that the deficiency in earth work found on measurement by the Executive Engineer is the foundation of the whole structure of the prosecution case and if that foundation is found to be rotten the whole case fails. We propose to deal with the points raised, one by one.

[12] On the first point about misjoinder of charges Mr. Chatterjee appearing for the Orown has strongly relied upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Babulal Chukani v. Emperor, 65 I. A. 158: 42 C. W. N. 621: (A. I. R. (25) 1938 P. C. 130: 39 Cr. L. J. 452), in which Lord Wright made the following observations on S. 239 (d), Criminal P. O.:

"This clause is expressly an exception from S. 233 and enables a plurality of offences to be dealt with in the same trial. But it does not import either expressly or by implication the limitation set out in S. 234 according to which not more than three offences, of the same kind committed within the space of 12 months can be tried together or the limitation contained in S. 235 (1) under which more offences than one committed by the same person can only be tried together, if they are in one series of acts so connected together as to form the same transaction in which case there is no specific limit of number. Nor is there any limit of the number of offences specified in S. 239 (d). The one and only limitation there is that the accusation should be of offences 'committed in the course of the same transaction ' It is enough for the present case to say that if several persons conspire to commit offences and commit overtacts in pursuance of the conspiracy (a circumstance which makes the act of each and all the conspirators) these acts are committed in the course of the same transaction which embraces the conspiracy and the acts done under it. The common concert and the agreement which constitute the conspiracy serve to unify the acts done in pursuance of it."

[13] The charge of conspiracy as framed against all the accused in the present case runs as follows:

"That you between 29th April and 17th June 1943, at Purulia and at other places agreed with one another and with others to do or cause to be done illegal acts, viz., to cheat the District Board of Burdwan and some of its officers by dishonestly inducing them to recommend payments to, pass and deliver moneys on false bills to Guljar Sheikh, since deceased, which is an offence under S. 420, Penal Code, in connection with the test Relief operations on Purulia-Ambalgram Road Section and also for that purpose to fabricate Muster Rolls and Pay Sheets and Abstracts by making false entries therein and committing forgeries of thumb impressions and signatures therein and also to fabricate Measurement Books and Abstracts of Pay Sheets, daily reports and other documents and the aforesaid illegal acts, viz., tabrication of Muster Rolls, Pay Sheets, Abstracts, etc., by making false entries, were done in pursuance of the said agreement and thereby committed an offence punishable under S. 120B, Penal Code."

[14] In furtherance of the dominant object of the conspiracy the appellants before us are alleged to have forged a large number of thumb impressions on pay sheets and for these specific acts of forgery, charges under S. 467, Penal Code, on 116 counts were framed against the appellant Ghulam Rahaman, charges under S. 467 on 105 counts were framed against the appellant Mirza Ghulam Hossain and charges under S. 467 on 15 counts were framed against the appellant Abdul Based. A sample of the specific charges under S. 467, Penal Code, is given below:

"that you on or about 8th May 1943 forged a certain document purporting to be a valuable security to wit, a pay sheet Ex. 19 (5) by putting your finger impression Ex. 19 (5t) purporting to be the left thumb impression of Sadu Ram with intent that fraud may be committed upon the District Board and its officers by acting upon the pay sheet with a forged finger impression as a genuine one and thereby committed an offence punishable under S. 467, Penal Code, etc."

[15] It is remarkable that each of these specific charges which were 236 in number against the three appellants Rahman, Hossain, and Based specifically mentions the thumb impression which is alleged to have been forged, the pay sheet on which it was affixed and also the purpose for which it was forged. The community of purpose which "serves to unify" the specific acts and makes them parts of the same transaction is the intention to cheat the District Board and the modus operandi is the forgery of the thumb impressions of different persons on the different pay sheets. It is therefore clear that the present case comes under cl. (d) of s. 239, Criminal P. C. and we are bound by the decision of the Judicial Committee to hold that in such a case the limitation as to the number of offences contained in S. 234, Criminal P. C. does not apply. The first point about misjoinder of charges must therefore be overruled.

[16] The second point relates to the alleged bewilderment of the accused resulting from a plurality of charges. Mr. Taluqdar has argued that even if the joinder of so many charges is permissible under the law it is improper as it tends to prejudice the accused. In support of this proposition Mr. Taluqdar cited the decisions of Queen. Empress v. Fakirappa, 15 Bom. 491 and Alimuddi Naskar v. Emperor, 52 Cal. 253: (A. I. R. (12) 1925 Cal. 341 : 26 Cr. L. J. 487). The Bombay decision does not really support the proposition for which it was cited, because in that case it was held that the different criminal acts charged against the four accused were not parts of the same transaction within the meaning of Ss. 235 and 239, Criminal P. C. of 1882 and it was held that the accused were likely to be bewildered by having to meet many "disconnected" charges. It was pointed out that the alleged criminal acts were "separated by distinct intervals of time and place" and that the "identity of oircumstances" required to constitute one transaction was "impaired by differences of time, place and persons present". We have not been able to find in this decision any support for the view that even if the joinder of charges be permissible under the law, a plurality of charges is improper as it bewilders the accused. In the case of Alimuddi Naskar v. Emperor, 52 Cal. 253 : (A. I. R. (12) 1925 Cal. 341 : 26 Cr. L. J. 487) seven offences of murder were combined in one charge and Mukherji J. observed at p. 264 as follows:

"then first part of S. 233, Criminal P. C. lays down that for each distinct offence there shall be a separate charge. This provision is mandatory, and seven different charges should have been framed for these seven offences of murder which appear to have been huddled into the first count as it stands."

His Lordship then points out that the joinder of several charges was permissible in that case in view of the fact that the offences were committed in pursuance of one conspiracy. Still however, the accused were prejudiced by reason of the fact that several charges of murder were huddled into one count as it appeared from the evidence that there was no foundation for the charges as regards most of the accused. The case before us avoids the mischief pointed out by Mukherji J. by including each offence of forgery in a separate count. The sample of the charge under S. 467, quoted above, shows that each offence was set out with sufficient clearness and precision against each accused and that there was no ambiguity or obscurity with regard to the accusation the accused had to meet. We have not been able to read the decision in Alimuddi Naskar's case, 52 Cal. 253: (A. I. R. (12) 1925 Cal. 341: 26 Cr. L. J. 487), as laying down the proposition that even in a case where the charges are absolutely clear and unambiguous and strictly in conformity with S. 233, Criminal P. C., the accused must be deemed to have been prejudiced merely by the plurality of counts, the prosecution case being that the appellant Ghulam Rahman (to take only one instance) committed 116 offences of forgery in pursuance of the conspiracy to cheat the District Board. We fail to see how the prejudice to him would have been less if he had been put on trial in 39 different cases with three counts in each. On the contrary we think that one trial for all the different counts set out with sufficient clearness and precision is less prejudicial and less embarassing from the point of view of the defence. We are accordingly unable to give effect to the second point raised by the appellants.

[17] The third point is that the prosecution under S. 120B, Penal Code, is invalid for want of sanction under S. 196A, Criminal P. C. It is admitted that sub-s. (1) of s. 196A, Criminal P. C. does not apply to the present case and the only question is whether it comes under sub-s. (2) which requires that the object of the conspiracy must be to commit either a non-cognisable offence or a cognisable offence not punishable with death, transportation or rigorous imprisonment for a term of two years or upwards. If the object of the conspiracy is a cognisable offence punishable with imprisonment for two years or upwards no sanction is required under S. 196A (2). From the charge of conspiracy set out above, it is clear that the principal object was to cheat the Distriot Board which is an offence under S. 420, Penal Code and a cognisable offence punishable with imprisonment for 7 years. Such a case does not fall within the mischief of sub.s. (2) of S. 198A. It is true that in the charge of conspiracy it is also alleged that for the purpose of cheating the accused committed forgeries of thumb impressions which are offences under S. 467, Penal Code and non cognisable offences. The mere fact that the subsidiary acts, which are means to the achievement of the principal object of the conspiracy, are non cognisable offences will not attract the operation of S. 196A (2) provided the principal or "dominant" object falls outside its scope. This principle was laid down by the Bombay High Court in the case of Ram Chandra Rango v. Emperor, A. I. R. (26) 1939 Bom. 129: 41 Bom. L. R. 98: 40 Cr. L. J. 579) and followed by a Division Bench of this Court presided over by Blank and Ellis JJ. in the case of Paresh Nath v. Emperor, 47 Cr. L. J. 710: (A. I. R. (34) 1947 cal. 32). The result of these authorities, with which we respectfully agree, is that there is difference between the object of a conspiracy and the means adopted to achieve that object and if the object is not hit by S. 196A (2) it does not matter whether that object is sought to be attained by non-cognizable offences. Accordingly we hold that S. 196A, Criminal P. C. does not apply to the present case and the third point! fails.

[18] The fourth point of law raised in the appeal relates to the legality of taking specimen thumb impressions in Court. Mr. Taluqdar has argued that this procedure is wholly unwarranted and relied upon Bazari v. King. Emperor. 1 Pat. 242: (A. I. R. (9) 1922 Pat. 73), where it was observed that there is no law which authorises a Court to ask the accused to do something which may have a tendency to incriminate them. It is remarkable that in this case the attention of the Court was not invited to S. 73, Evidence Act. This decision was dissented from by the same High Court in the cases of Basgit Singh v. King. Emperor, 6 Pat. 305 :(A. I. R. (15) 1928 Pat. 129:28 Cr. L. J. 850) and Zahuri Sahu v. Emperor, 6 Pat. 623: (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Pat. 103: 28 Cr. L. J. 1028) in which reliance was placed upon 8. 5 of Act XXXIII [83] of 1920. (Identification of Prisoners Act) which authorises a Magistrate for the purpose of any investigation under the Criminal Procedure Code to direct finger impression to be taken. In the case of Public Prosecutor v. Kanda Sami, 50 Mad. 462: (A. I. R. (14) 1927 Mad. 696: 27 Or. L. J. 1251), the Madras High Court has dissented from the view taken by the Patna High Court in Bazari's case, (1 Pat. 242: A. I. R. (9) 1922 Pat. 78) and held that it is not illegal or improper for a Magistrate to direct the finger print of the accused to be taken in the course of a criminal trial where he is charged with the offence of forgery of a finger print. The Bombay High Court has taken the same view as the Madras High Court in the case of Emperor v. Ram Rao, 56 Bom. 304: (A. I. R. (19) 1932 Bom. 406: 88 Cr.L.J. 666). In the case of Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal v. Kiran Bala Dasi, reported in 30 O. W. N. 873 : (A. I. B. (18) 1926 Cal. 631 : 27

Cr. L. J. 409), C. C. Ghosh and Duval JJ., it was held that the procedure of directing the specimen of the thumb impression of the accused to be taken was permissible under 8. 5 of Act XXXIII [33] of 1920 as also under illustration (c) of S. 45, Evidence Act but no reference was made to the provisions of S. 73, Evidence Act. In Kishori v. Emperor, 39 C. W. N. 986: (A. I. R. (22) 1935 Cal. 303: 36 Cr. L. J. 921), there was a difference of opinion between Lort. Williams and Jack JJ. on the question whether S. 73. Evidence Act applied to such a case although it was not necessary for the learned Judges to decide the point. The obiter dictum of Lort Williams J. was to the effect that it was doubtful whether the word "person" in S. 73 applies to an accused person whereas the obiter dictum of Jack J. was to the effect that S. 73 does apply to the accused in a criminal trial. The question of the applicability of S. 73 to the accused in a criminal trial was decided in the affirmative by a Full Bench of the Rangoon High Court in King-Emperor v. Nga Tun Alaing, 1 Rang. 759: (A. I. R. (11) 1924 Rang. 115: 26 Cr. L. J. 108 F. B.) where it was pointed out that S. 342, Criminal P. C., does not prevent the application of S. 73, Evidence Act to a criminal trial. Young C. J. observed as follows:

"Section 342, Criminal P.C. relates only to oral questioning of the accused and does not prohibit a direction to him to make a thumb impression, any more than it prohibits a direction to him to face a witness in order that he may be identified."

Section 73, Evidence Act is quite general in its terms and applies to all cases and there is no exception in favour of an accused person. If there is nothing in the Criminal Procedure Code which precludes its application to criminal trials we do not see any reason why the plain language of the section should not be given its full effect. The operation of any other Act is, of course, expressly saved by s. 2, Evidence Act. We agree with Young C. J. that S. 342, Criminal P. C. does not make S. 73, Evidence Act inapplicable to criminal trials. We accordingly hold that the procedure followed in taking specimen thumb impressions under the direction of the Court is in strict compliance with S. 73 and S. 45, ill. (c), Evidence Act and also S. 5 of Act XXXIII [33] of 1920. The fourth point raised by Mr. Taluqdar is accordingly overruled.

[19] We have now to address ourselves to the question whether the evidence on the record, which is voluminous, is sufficient to justify the order of conviction and sentence. [After discussing the evidence and holding that the charges under S. 467, Penal Code and conspiracy were proved his Lordship proceeds.]

[20] There is an approver in the case whose name is Bholanath Majhi and who has been examined as P. W. 6. Before his examination in Court he made a confession which is Ex. 2. He has proved the association and common concert of the different accused for the purpose of cheating the District Board by forging thumb impressions and showing inflated numbers and figures. in Muster Rolls and Pay sheets. From the discussion of the prosecution evidence on the heads of forgery and also of conspiracy we are satisfied that his evidence has been corroborated in material particulars by independent and reliable evidence. The best corroboration of the approver's evidence comes from the acts of the accused in affixing their thumb impressions against the names of fictitious persons and also against the names of living persons who never worked.

[21] On behalf of the appellants, Mr. Taluqdar strenuously argued that the evidence of the finger-print expert is unworthy of acceptance and in any case it is unacceptable without corroboration. On the first branch of this argument it is said that the so-called expert is not a real expert, and his omission to take photographs of the impugned thumb impressions has vitiated his conclusions. From the evidence of the expert it appears that he received training at the Finger Impression Bureau in Calcutta under the D. I. G. C. I. D. and passed the examination and since 1939 he has been serving in that department. At the time he examined the thumb impressions of this case he had nearly seven years' experience. With regard to photographs it appears that P. W. 242 confined his opinion only to those thumb impressions in which the ridges are quite clear and distinct and avoided any opinion with regard to thumb impressions which are blurred or smudged in which cases photographs are necessary. For examplethe expert did not give any opinion with regard to Exs. 26 and 29 which are blurred. This precaution eliminates the possibility of any mistakeresulting from the omission to take photographs. We have carefully gone through the evidence of the expert and we have also compared some of the specimens with the disputed thumb impressions with the help of magnifying glasses to test the conclusions arrived at by the expert and without pretending to have any expert knowledge, we can say that we are in general agreement with the opinion of the expert. The learned advocates appearing for the defence also did not point out any thumb impression with regard to which the opinion of the expert might be said to be erroneous. In these circumstances we cannot reject the testimony of the expert as unacceptable. Mr. Taluqdar next contended that at all events, no conviction can be based upon the opinion of the expert without corroboration by independent evidence, and relied upon the decision in the case of Harendra v. Emperor, 35 C. W. N. 863: (A. I. R. (18) 1931 Cal. 441: 32 Cr. L. J. 1001), where S. K. Ghose J., sitting with Lord. Williams J. observed as follows:

"I do not think that it can be laid down as a rule of law that it is unsafe to base a conviction on the uncorroborated testimony of a finger print expert. The true rule seems to be one of caution, that is to say, the Court must not take the expert's opinion for granted, but it must examine his evidence in order to satisfy itself that there can be no mistake, and the responsibility is all the greater when there is no other evidence to corroborate the expert."

We respectfully agree with the observations quoted above but in our judgment they only mean that the Court cannot delegate its autho. rity to the expert but has to satisfy itself as to the value of the evidence of the expert in the same way as it must satisfy itself as to the value lof any other evidence. We have to point out, however, that in the case before us it cannot be eaid that there is no evidence to connect the accused except the evidence of the expert. From the evidence which we have discussed above it will appear that finger prints of imaginary persons and finger prints of persons, who exist but never worked, were affixed to the pay sheets and the evidence of the expert was utilised only for the purpose of connecting the different accused with the different faked thumb impressions. Moreover the thumb impressions with which we have to deal are not casual or accidental ones but deliberately affixed for the purpose of giving a valid discharge to the Agent. We cannot also lose sight of the fact though the evidence of a handwriting expert is frequently found to be faulty, the evidence of a thumb impression expert is more reliable, because with regard to finger prints it has never been found that two finger prints are identical in all respects. As already indicated, we have for ourselves tested the opinion of the expert examined in this case and we accept his evidence as reliable.

foundation of the prosecution case is the deficiency of the earthwork undertaken in the course of the Test Relief Operations and as the prosecution has failed to prove any deficiency the whole case fails. The evidence of the Executive Engineer (P. W. 256) Ram Nath Chatterjee has been placed before us in this connection and it has been pointed out that he took measurements about a year after the earthwork had been completed and after a considerable portion of the work done had been washed away by flood and rain. It is undoubtedly true that it appears from the evidence of P. W. 256 Ramnath Chatterjee who was the Executive Engineer from May 1939 to June 1944, that he submitted his report in July 1944 whereas the -charges framed against the appellants cover the period beginning from 29th April 1943 and ending with 17th June 1943. It is also true that portions of the work done had been washed away by natural causes; but the Executive Engineer gave his opinion about deficiency after making an allowance of 182 p. c. for sinking, wastage etc. But the more serious objection to this argument is that it does not form the subject-matter of any of the charges against any of the appellants. Far from being the foundation of the prosecution case it may be said that the prosecution case does not suffer in the least if this part of the evidence be totally excluded from eonsideration. From Ex. 1 (29) it appears that the remuneration of the Agent depended on the number of coolies employed by him and the prosecution case, as far as we have been able to understand it, is that the Agent used to draw larger amounts of money than were really due to him by falsely and dishonestly inflating the number of coolies and the amounts paid to them. The samples of the charges which we have quoted in an earlier part of the judgment will confirm this conclusion.

[23] The last argument of Mr. Taluqdar is that a large number of witnesses examined by the prosecution in this case were concentrated in police camps and they deposed at the dictation of the police and as such their evidence is unworthy of acceptance. This argument was dealt with by the learned Judge in his judgment and we have nothing to add to what has been said by him. As has been pointed out by the learned Judge these witnesses are illiterate and improvident village folk for whom suitable accommodation could not be found in the town. The learned Judge accepted only so much of their evidence as received corroboration from other reliable evidence on the record. In our opinion this was the most proper thing to do in the circumstances of the present case.

[24] A feeble attempt was made to prove that the approver's evidence as to the complicity of the appellants has not been corroborated by any independent evidence and that the appellants were not named by the approver in his confession Ex. 2. With regard to the former, it is sufficient to state that the prosecution evidence which we have already discussed will show that it does not bear a moment's scrutiny. The evidence adduced by the prosecution is so strong that the findings arrived at by the Court below can be supported even without any reference to the approver's evidence. With regard to the confession it is clear that it purports to give only a bare outline of the prosecution case without the details. As we have accepted the evidence of the finger print expert and the evidence of other witnesses to have proved that the names of imaginary persons were introduced into the muster rolls and pay sheets it does not matter whether or not the appellants' names were mentioned in the confession.

[25] The result of the foregoing discussion is that the appellants have been rightly convicted. On the question of sentence we find that the learned Judge took into account, the fact that the appellants committed the offences under pressure of poverty and that they were mere tools in the hands of the principal offender Gulzar Sheikh who has died. In this view of the matter we do not think we shall be justified in interfering with the sentences passed by the Court below.

[26] Before parting with this case we desire to place on record our grateful appreciation of the assistance we have received from Mr. Harideb Chatterjee who has taken enormous pains in placing before us a very helpful analysis of the huge mass of documentary and oral evidence produced by the prosecution.

[27] The appeal is accordingly dismissed. The appellants will surrender to their bail bonds and serve out the remaining portion of their sentences. We have not specifically dealt with the case of the appellant Santosh Kumar Bhattacharjya because he has withdrawn his appeal.

Bhulan Singh and others—Appellants v. Ganendra Kumar Roy Chowdhury—Respondents.

A. F. O. D. Nos. 114, 115, 116 and 117 of 1949, Decided on 23rd August 1949, from decrees of Banerjee J., D/- 12th May 1949.

Houses and Rents—Rent Control Legislation—Landlord "bona fide requiring premises for rebuilding"—Meaning of—Landlord honestly requiring premises for re-building is sufficient—Premises need not require re-building—Tests to be applied—Case where landlord requires premises for his own occupation and case where he requires it for rebuilding must be distinguished—West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act (XXXVIII [38] of 1948), S. 11 (1) (f).

Proviso (f) to S. 11 (1) of the Act does not mention premises requiring rebuilding. What it states is that sub-s. (1) shall have no application if the landlord requires the premises bona fide for rebuilding. The state of the premises therefore is not an essential factor in the case.

[Para 14]

The premises are bona fide required by the landlord for the purpose of rebuilding if the landlord bonestly requires them for that purpose. The equivalent of the phrase "bona fide" is "honestly". It refers to the state of the landlord's mind. The landlord, therefore, will be entitled to possession as against the tenant if he establishes that he honestly requires the premises for rebuilding. It cannot be inferred that the landlord's intention was not honest merely because he had not got permits for cement and steel before he brought the ejectment suit against the tenant. If he honestly believed that steel and cement would be available the moment he was in a position to use such materials, then he would be acting perfectly honestly in bringing the suits.

[Paras 15 & 19]

There is a considerable difference between what a landlord has to establish when he sets out to prove that he reasonably requires premises for his own occupation and when he sets out to prove that he requires premises bona fide for rebuilding. A man who could be satisfactorily accommodated in three or four rooms cannot possibly 'honestly' require twenty rooms for his occupation. Whether the landlord really needs the accommodation is a test of his honesty. [Paras 21 & 22]

If a landlord genuinely intends to rebuild an old and somewhat dilapidated premises and has the means to do so, it can be said that he bona fide requires the premises for rebuilding, because they cannot be rebuilt until he obtains possession and demolishes the existing structure.

[Para 23]

H. N. Sanyal -for Appellants.
Atul C. Gupta-for Respondents.

Harries C. J.—These are four appeals from decrees of Banerjee J. sitting on the Original Side of this Court, made on 12th May 1949 in ejectment suits. The plaintiff-respondent in each of these appeals purchased certain premises known as No. 30 Kali Krishna Tagore Street in the year 1938. These premises were let to a number of tenants-including the four appel. lants. Notices to quit were served on each of the four appellants and on 14th January 1949 ejectment suits were filed by the plaintiff respondent against each of the four appellants. These suits were tried together by Banerjee J. sitting on the Original Side, as the facts were common to each case. The learned Judge eventually came to conclusion that the plaintiff was entitled to possession as against each of the four defendants and accordingly made decrees for ejectment in each suit. It is from these four decrees of ejectment that the present appeals have been filed.

appeals is whether having regard to the terms of s. 11 (1) (f). West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1948, the plaintiff landlord was entitled to possession as againt these tenants.

(3) As I have said earlier, the plaintiff who was a trustee under a trust deed, acquired these premises in 1938. It is to be observed that the plaintiff is also the chief beneficiary under this trust. According to the evidence, the premises were old and in the year 1939 before the War and long before these Rent Control Acts were thought of, the plaintiff applied to the Corporation of Calcutta for sanction to rebuild these premises and in the month of March 1939 the Corporation accorded a preliminary sanction to rebuild. In September 1939 the second World War broke out and it is not surprising to find that the plaintiff did not proceed with his intention to rebuild. However, he paid on 4th May 1942 an encroachment fee amounting to Rs. 5,500 which would entitle him to build certain projections to the proposed building which he otherwise could not have done, and sometime during the month of May the Corporation gave their final sanction to the rebuilding of these premises.

[4] Nothing however was done presumably owing to the War. On 27th March 1948, the Corporation of Calcutta issued a notice on the plaintiff and the occupiers drawing attention to the dangerous condition of this building and demanding that certain repairs should be done immediately, otherwise they would be done by the Corporation and charged to the plaintiff or the occupants.

[5] On 2nd April 1948, the plaintiff entered into an agreement with a firm of contractors know as Messrs. A. K. Sircar & Co. Ltd. to rebuild these premises in accordance with the plan sanctioned by the Corporation. In the month of June 1948 an application was made for a permit for the necessary cement and in september 1948 an application was made for the necessary steel which should be required for the construction of this building.

[6] It appears that permits could not be granted then and the plaintiff was told to make a further application in March of the following year. In consequence, rebuilding could not be commenced and on 8th November 1948, the plaintiff applied to the Rent Controller for sanction to bring ejectment proceedings against the tenants. The plaintiff alleged that he required possession as he bona fide required the premises for rebuilding. This permission however was refused by the Rent Controller.

Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1948 came into force and under that Act no previous permission of the Rent Controller to bring a suit was necessary. Accordingly on 8th December 1948, notices to quit were served on the tenants and on 14th January 1949 four suits were filed against the four appellants on the original side of this Court. On 12th May 1949, these suits were decided and decreed in the manner I have indicated.

[8] Before Banerjee J. a number of witnesses were called and amongst them was an Engineer, a Mr. Satish Chandra Bose. According to this witness, the premises in question were between 100 and 150 years old and were in a dilapidated condition. He gave details of the disrepair and in his view the premises would probably collapse if extensive repairs were not undertaken forthwith.

[9] There was evidence given by the defendants appellants that the premises were not so old. But even their evidence showed that these premises were in a state of serious disrepair. Further, notices had been served by the Calcutta Corporation calling upon the plaintiff or the occupiers to put these premises into repair.

[10] Banerjee J. who saw and heard the Engineer, Mr. Satish Chandra Bose, accepted his evidence. According to the learned Judge he gave his evidence very fairly and if his evidence is accepted, it is clear that these premises were in a state of very serious disrepair and were probably dangerous to the occupants.

[11] The defence of the tenants was that the plaintiff respondent was not entitled to possession because it could not possibly be said that he required these premises for rebuilding. Reliance was placed upon 8. 11, West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1948. That section in so far as it is material is as follows:

"(1) Notwithstanding anything contained in the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, or the Indian Contract Act, 1872, no order or decree for the recovery of possession of any premises shall be made as long as the tenant pays to the full extent the rent allowable by this Act and performs the conditions of the tenancy: Provided that nothing in this sub-section shall apply

(f) Where the premises are bona fide required by the landlord either for purposes of building or rebuilding, or for his own occupation or for the occupation of any person for whose benefit the premises are held."

[12] The tenants claimed that they could not be ejected as long as they paid to the full extent the rent allowable by the Act. There was no allegation that the rent had not been so paid. The plaintiff landlord however contended that 8. 11 (1) afforded the tenants no protection against ejectment because the landlord bona fide required the premises for the purpose of rebuilding.

[13] Quite clearly, if the landlord bona fide required these premises for rebuilding then the tenants had no defence whatsoever. On the other hand, if the landlord failed to show such bona fide requirement then the tenants could not be ejected.

[14] It was suggested that this provision giving the landlord a right to possession, if he established that he required the premises bona fide for rebuilding, could have no application whatsoever unless the state of the premises was such that they required to be rebuilt. It is to be observed that proviso (f) to S. 11 (1) of the Act does not mention premises requiring rebuilding. What it states is that sub-s. (1) shall have no application if the landlord requires the premises bona fide for rebuilding. The state of the premises therefore is not an essential factor in the case. However, it cannot be overlooked that in this case the learned Judge has accepted the evidence of a witness which showed that there premises were very old, dilapidated, dangerous and likely to fall if extensive repairs were not done to them quickly.

[15] It appears to me that the premises are bona fide required by the landlord for the purpose of rebuilding if the landlord honestly requires them for that purpose. The equivalent of the phrase "bona fide" is "honestly". It refers to the state of the landlord's mind. The landlord therefore will be entitled to possession as against the tenant if he established that he honestly requires the premises for rebuilding. [16] The facts in this case show to my mind clearly that the landlord did honestly require these premises for rebuilding. They were bought in 1938 and even then they were obviously old and somewhat dilapidated. The following year an application was made to the Corporation for sanction to rebuild the premises. That application was made when no Rent Control Acts were in force and when a tenant would have no defence whatsoever to a suit for ejectment if notice to quit had been given. A preliminary sanction was granted and Mr. Sanyal has suggested that this application could not have been serious or tona fide because nothing was done. In the first place, before a building can be commenced safely the final sanction of the Corporation was required and it must be remembered that in September 1939, the Great War broke out. Even so the landlord moved in the matter because in the month of May 1942 he paid an encroachment fee of Rs. 5,500 and then obtained final sanction to build. Is it likely that a landlord would pay this very substantial sum of Rs. 5,500 if he did not honestly require these premises for rebuilding? The war dragged on its weary course and it is not surprising to find that the plaintiff respondent took no steps to demolish these premises and rebuild them. As is well known, labour was scarce, materials were scarce and building operations on any great scale were practically imposeible during the later stages of the War and for some considerable time thereafter. On 27th March 1948, however, the plaintiff had a reminder that these premises were in a very bad state of repair because on that day the Corporation served a demolition notice on him. The plaintiff immediately took steps with a view to rebuild. ing and entered into a contract with a firm of contractors in April of 1948 and in June and september began to busy himself with a view to obtaining permits for steel and cement. The Corporation in September served another demolition notice on the plaintiff.

[17] The plaintiff failed to obtain permits for steel and cement and was told to wait a little time. He then took steps to eject his tenants.

[18] Mr. Sanyal has urged that bringing these ejectment suits must be mala fide because the plaintiff was not in a position to rebuild without permits for steel and cement. The evidence called on behalf of the plaintiff however is to the effect that cement and steel would be readily available if the plaintiff was in a position to use them immediately and he would use them if he was able to eject his tenants.

[19] I do not think it can be inferred that the plaintiff's intention was not honest merely because he had not got permits for cement and steel before he brought these ejectment suits. If he honestly believed, as I think he did, that steel and cement would be available the moment he was in a position to use such materials, then he would be acting perfectly; honestly in bringing these suits. He had been so advised by his Engineer and I think that the plaintiff honestly believed that he could rebuild immediately the tenants were ejected.

[20] I can see nothing in the facts of this case to suggest that the plaintiff did not require these premises bona fide for rebuilding. He had, as I have said, bought them as old premises and immediately took steps to obtain sanction for building. What prevented the rebuilding was undoubtedly the War and now further difficulties are created by these Rent Acts. The plaintiff satisfied the learned Judge that he had the means to rebuild, that he had made the necessary contracts to rebuild and that he had every intention of demolishing the premises and erecting new premises thereon which would be very much more commodious and would produce five or six times the rent which he was then receiving from the premises. It appears to me upon those plain facts that the learned Judge was bound to hold that the landlord bona fide required these premises for rebuilding.

[21] It seems to have been argued in the Court below that the landlord could not bona fide require the premises for rebuilding unless rebuilding was absolutely necessary and that the disturbance of the tenants was absolutely necessary. It was pointed out that Courts have held that a landlord does not bona fide require premises for his own occupation unless he can show that the premises are necessary to him. It appears to me, however, that there is a considerable difference between what a landlord has to establish when he sets out to prove that he reasonably requires premises for his own occupa.

tion and when he sets out to prove that he requires premises bona fide for rebuilding.

fide to require a twenty-roomed house for his occupation if three or four rooms would be ample for all his purposes. If in the circumstances he claimed that he bona fide required a twenty-roomed house for his occupation the Court would immediately hold that the requirement was not bona fide or honest, but was in fact dishonest. A man who could be satisfactorily accommodated in three or four rooms cannot possibly honestly require twenty rooms for his occupation. Whether the laudlord really needs the accommodation is a test of his honesty.

[29] If a landlord genuinely intends to rebuild old and somewhat dilapidated premises and has the means to do so then I think it can be said that he bona fide requires the premises for rebuilding because they cannot be rebuilt until he obtains possession and demolishes the existing structure.

[24] There is a decision of this Court Rekhab. chand Doogar v. J. R. D'Cruz, 26 C. W. N. 499: (A. I. R. (10) 1923 Cal. 223), dealing with this phrase "bona fide requires." But it was a case dealing with the bona fide requirement of certain premises for the landlord's own occupation. At page 502, Buckland J., observed:

"It seems to me that the plaintiff has here based his requirement of the premises in suit on the ground of his wife's health because he feels that the other grounds would not be sufficient to entitle him to say that he bona fide requires the house for his own occupation which it is necessary that I should find for him to obtain an order for possession. From this point of view I am not at all satisfied as to the bona fides of the plaintiff. Without asserting that he is deliberately untruthful, he has to my mind strained the circumstances in his own favour to the utmost limit. I do not think it is enough that a plaintiff in order to defeat a plea under the Calcutta Rent Act should merely say that he desires the premises bona fide for his own occupation. The word in the Act is not 'desire' but 'require.' This in my opinion involves something more than a mere wish and it involves an element of need, to some extent at least."

[25] I think this view of the meaning of the phrase "bona fide requires" when it is applied to a landlord's bona fide requirement of premises for his own occupation, is the true one. But it in no way affects my view of what the landlord has to establish when he alleges that he bona fide requires premises for rebuilding. It seems to me that he establishes bona fide requirement for rebuilding when the Court is satisfied on the facts placed before it that the landlord honestly desires to rebuild, has the means to rebuild and will rebuild if the possession is given to him. In considering whether the landlord genuinely and honestly desires to rebuild the Court will consider all the surrounding circum.

clusion that the landlord honestly desires to rebuild because, as I have said, the premises are old, dilapidated and could be made to yield not Rs. 600 per month as they yield at present, but Rs. 3,500 per month if the premises were rebuilt. From these facts the Court could very easily come to the conclusion that there was an honest desire to rebuild, particularly when it finds that the land. lord had taken steps to rebuild long before these restrictions were placed on landlerds by these Rent Acts. On the evidence also, it is quite clear that the landlord was in a position to give effect to his desire and had done everything short of beginning the work of demolition in carrying out his purpose. Mr. Sanyal could, as I have already pointed out, only stress the fact that the landlord up to the present had failed to obtain permits for steel and cement. I am satisfied that the learned Judge was right in coming to the conclusion that there would be no difficulty with regard to steel and cement once the landlord was in a position to enter the premises and begin demolition work. It seems to me, upon these facts, that the learned Judge was right and indeed was bound to hold that the landlord bona fide required these premises for rebuilding and that being so, the decrees which he made in each case cannot be assailed.

Order. — This rule has been obtained by the petitioner who has been convicted by Sri R. C. Sen, Magistrate, First Class, Howrah, of having committed an offence punishable under S. 500, Penal Code and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 200, in default, to undergo rigorous imprisonment for three monhts. An appeal was taken to the Sessions Judge and it was dismissed. Thereafter this rule has been obtained.

[2] The facts briefly are as follows: The accused Bishan Singh went to a Grain Shop on a bicycle and leaving the bicycle outside he entered the Grain Shop. He borrowed the bicycle from one Mahadeo. When he came out be found the bicycle missing and was informed by some persons that a carpenter named Ram Nagina had taken the bicycle. Upon this information being received, he went to his superior officer, B. N. Railway, at Shalimar, and informed him of the incident. A document was written out and signed by Bisban Singh and it was taken to the Government Railway Police where it was treated as a first information report. The Police investigated the case and returned a charge sheet against Ram Nagina. He was tried and acquitted. Thereafter Ram Nagina filed a petition of complaint before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Howrah, in the following terms:

"The humble petition of complaint of Ram Nagina Singh most respectfully sheweth: (1) That a false and malicious case under S. 379, Penal Code was started by the Shalimar G. R. P. (2) That as a result of the false and malicious statements made in the F. I. R. and those before the Court of Mr. S. K. Das Gopta, Magistrate, 1st Class, Howrab, the complainant has suffered loss of reputation. (3) That the said case has ended in acquittal on 22nd April 1948."

Thereafter there was a prayer that the Magistrate should issue process against Bishan Singh under S. 500, Penal Code. Bishan Singh was tried. The prosecution examined five witnesses, the defence examined none. I think it necessary in this case to set out the charge which was framed against the accused. It is in the following terms:

"That you, on or about 21st October 1947 at Shalimar G. R. P. defamed Ram Nagina by making a certain imputation concerning Ram Nagina namely describing him as a thief of a cycle by lodging an information at thana to that effect in consequence of which Ram Nagina was tried for theft and acquitted, having reason to believe that such imputation would lower the reputation of the said Ram Nagina and thereby committed an offence punishable under S. 500, Penal Code and within my cognizance, etc."

It is quite clear, therefore, that the defamatory statement with which the accused was charged was not any statement made to any one other than the statement made to the Inspector of the G. R. P., B. N. Railway at Shalimar which statement was treated as the First Information Report.

[3] The defence taken was that the accused acted bona fide when he made his report to the police and that his case came within Exception 8 of S. 499, Penal Code. It was also argued that the Ninth Exception operated because the statement was made in good faith for the protection of the interests of the person making it. The lower Courts have held that the allegation was not made in good faith and convicted the accused. The order of the Court below is attacked on two grounds. First, it was contended that the whole proceedings were without jurisdiction inasmuch as there was no complaint made against. the accused with respect to this offence in accordance with the provisions of 8. 195 (1) (b) read with S. 476, Criminal P. C. and the second line of defence was that the Court below had erred in holding that the accused was not protected by Excps. 8 and 9 of 8. 499, Penal Code and also that the Court below has erred in taking into consideration many facts which were not. evidence in the case.

Learned advocate points out that if it be held that the accused made a false complaint at the thana knowing that there was no just or lawful ground for making such complaint, then the offence committed by him would be one punishable under S. 211, Penal Code and that as the offence had been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in Court no Court had jurisdiction to take cognizance of such offence except on the complaint in writing of the Court in which those proceedings had been held or of some other Court to which such Court was subordinate. Now, there can be no doubt that if it is held that the accused falsely charged Ram Nagina.

with theft knowing that there was no just or lawful ground for making such charge he would be guilty of an offence punishable under S. 211, Penal Code. There can also be no doubt that if he is guilty of an offence punishable under S. 211, Penal Code, he would also be guilty of having committed an offence punishable under S. 500, Penal Code as there would be no ground for holding that he acted bona fide. I should like it to be clearly understood that I am not suggest. ing that the accused is guilty of an offence punishable under s. 211, Penal Code. I am acting on the assumption that he has committed such an offence. Now, if such an offence has been committed, it was committed in relation to or in connection with proceedings in Court because the matter went up for trial and Ram Nagina was acquitted. No Court could take cognizance of such an offence unless the Court in which the trial was held or a Court to which such Court was subordinate complained. Here, admittedly no complaint was lodged by any such Court but Ram Nagina adopted the device of filing a complaint charging the accused not with the offence punishable under S. 211, Penal Code, but with the offence of defamation. It was argued on behalf of the complainant, Ram Nagina, that with respect to the offence of defamation punishable under S. 500, Penal Code, the Court could take cognizance of it without any complaint being made in accordance with the provisions of S. 195 (1) (b)/476, Criminal P. C. and therefore there was no defect of jurisdiction in the present case which was a case of defamation. For this proposition, reliance was placed on a decision of a Special Bench of this Court in the case of Satish Chandra v. Ram Dayal, 24 O. W. N. 982: (A.I.R. (8) 1921 Cal. 1: 22 Cr. L. J. 31 S. B.). On behalf of the petitioner, it was argued that if the offence committed be one punishable under S. 211, Penal Code, the Court cannot exercise jurisdiction and take cognizance of such offence by whittling it down and treating it as an offence punishable under S. 500, Penal Code and for this purpose reliance was placed upon the case of Prafulla Kumar Ghose v. Harendra Nath, 44 Oal. 970: (A. I. R. (4) 1917 Cal. 708: 18 Cr. L. J. 977) and the case of Ibrahim v. Emperor, 29 Or. L. J. 849: (111 I. C. 483 Cal.), where both the previous mentioned cases were considered. In my opinion the point for decision in the Special Bench case was whether a person making a false statement in Court could claim an absolute privilege. The point under discussion was not directly in issue but there were certain dicta which taken out of their context may lend support to the contention urged on behalf of the complainant Ram Nagina. There is a passage however at p. 1000 of that case, Satish Chandra v. Ram Dayal, 24 O.W.N.

982:(A. I. R. (8) 1921 Cal. 1:22 Cr. L. J. 31 (S.B.)) which is to this effect:

"Now, the maker of single statement may be guilty of two distinct offences, one under S. 211 (which is an offence against public justice) and the other, an offence under S. 499, wherein the personal element largely predominates. The Legislature has provided, in the Criminal Procedure Code, that the sanction of the Court where the offence is committed, is essential in the former case for the institution of criminal proceedings. In the latter case, the Legislature has omitted to make a similar provision."

Then the learned Judge goes on to say that in such latter case no sanction was necessary. I may mention that the first two cases mentioned above were decided prior to the amendment of the Code of Criminal Procedure whereby sanctions have been removed and in their place complaints in writing by the Court concerned have been introduced. In my opinion this passage indicates that where the offence substantially is one punishable under S. 211, Penal Code, sanction should be taken and that where offence complained of constituted a mere personal attack more than anything else, then no sanction is necessary. Rankin C. J. distinguished that case in the following terms:

"It is said that in a Full Bench case reported as Satish Chandra v. Ram Dayal, 24 C. W. N. 983: (A. I. R. (8) 1921 Cal. 1:22 Cr. L. J. 31), the contrary of this doctrine was laid down. In that case, however, the view taken was that the offences defined in Ss. 211 and 499 were fundamentally distinct in nature."

Having regard to this decision, I am of opinion that the decision of the Special Bench is really not applicable having regard to the facts of the present case. I respectfully agree with the view of Sanderson C. J. and Richardson J., that if the contentions made by learned Advocate for the opposite party were to prevail, then the provisions of S. 195, Criminal P. C., may just as well be wiped out. It is worthy of note that these remarks were made both by Sanderson C. J. and Richardson J., separately and that Richardson J., was one of the Judges in the Special Bench case. If he held the view that what he had said before was not correct, one would have expected a learned Judge of his eminence to say so in the decision of the Special Bench, but he did not resile from the view taken in the earlier decision when he decided the later decision as one of the Judges of the Special Bench. In my opinion in a case of this description the Court could not take cognizance of the offence except upon a complaint being made by the Court which tried Ram Nagina. That being so, the entire proceedings are without jurisdiction, and they must be set aside and the acoused must be discharged.

[5] Having regard to this decision it is not necessary for me to deal in detail with the trial and judgment of the Courts below. I would point out however that the charge framed against the accused related solely to the statement made in the First Information Report. The statement is in the following terms:

"That I took the cycle from one of my carpenters named Mohadeb T. No. 401 to call my carpenter from the Grain Shop No. II who was taking rations today 20th October 1947. I kept the cycle near the gate of No. II Grain Shop Shalimar and entered into the Grain Shop to have a look as because I did not find my man outside.

After coming out from there I did not find the cycle there, I asked Gararam and Appanna Khalasi of Carriage Department who were waiting near the cycle for drawing their rations. Being asked they told me that one of your carpenters, blackish, bearded, named Ramnagina to look (sic) has taken away the cycle without asking anybody. They may be asked to identify the man if required.

The cycle bearing Registered No. 660 and the cycle No. 23885 and the holder of the same is Mohadeb Manna Carpenter T. N. 401 of Marine Workshop, Shalimar. The cycle is a Phillips one and the colour is black.

Will you be kind enough to investigate the matter and do the needful to get back the cycle?

Thanking you in anticipation."

The statement by itself shows that the accused was acting in good faith. He was not charging Ram Nagina with theft. He merely stated that some persons told him that Ram Nagina had taken away the bicycle and he asked the police to do the needful to get back the cycle. There is no specific charge of theft against the accused in the statement. The Courts below, however, have come to the conclusion that there was a charge of theft and they arrived at this conclusion by referring to certain statements made by witnesses at the former trial. These statements are inadmissible in evidence except for the purposes of corroborating or contradicting the statements of the witnesses in the present case. The Court, however, dealt with all the evidence in the former case and also with the reasons given in the judgment of the former case and then came to the conclusion that the offence punishable under S. 500, Penal Code, had been committed. Now, the reasons of the judgement given in the former theft case are irrelevant and inadmissible in evidence. The trial by the Court below has been full of irregularities. In this connection, I would also mention that the lower appellate Court came to a definite finding that the accused believed in the statements made by two persons that Ram Nagina had taken away his bicycle. If that be so, I cannot see how the Court could hold that the accused was not acting bona fide when he lodged the First Information at the thana. On that finding alone he would be entitled to the benefit of the Exceptions 8 and 9 of S. 499, Penal Code. [6] I set aside the order of conviction and sentence and direct the accused to be discharged. The fine, if paid, shall be refunded.

Criminal Revn. No. 596 of 1949, Decided on 25th August 1949.

(a) Penal Code (1860), S. 441 — Tenant temporarily vacating premises for purposes of repairs on request of landlord — Landlord refusing to give back possession — No evidence that landlord has any intention to intimidate, insult or annoy or to commit offence — Action of landlord though unlawful does not amount to offence under second part of S. 441.

A person charged with trespass under the second part of S. 441, Penal Code, not only must remain on the premises unlawfully but he must remain on the premises unlawfully with certain intentions, namely, the intent to intimidate, insult or annoy or to commit an offence.

[Para 4]

Where a landlord induces his tenant to vacate the premises temporarily for the purpose of repairs and the tenant vacates them but on return of the tenant the landlord refuses to hand over possession to the tenant, the action of the landlord in remaining in possession of the premises no doubt is unlawful but unless the prosecution establishes that the landlord had remained in possession with one of the intentions mentioned in the section, he cannot be held guilty under the second part of S. 441. Order. — The petitioner has been convicted of having committed an offence punishable under S. 448, Penal Code and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 200, in default to undergo simple imprisonment for one month. Out of the fine, if paid, the complainant was to be awarded Rs. 150, as compensation. This order of conviction and sentence was passed by Sri B. Majumdar, Magistrate, Second Class, Howrah. An appeal by the petitioner to the Additional District Magistrate was dismissed. The petitioner has now obtained this Rule.

[2] The facts alleged by the prosecution are these. The complainant was a tenant of the accused petitioner in respect of a shop room at 8 Lal Behari Basu Lane and he used this room for the sale of straw. On 3rd Aswin the accused landlord came to the complainant and asked him to vacate the room temporarily as he wished to repair it. Believing in the statement the complainant on 4th Aswin removed his articles from the room and went away. He returned on 14th aswin and found that the room was being used as a garage by the accused who refused to vacate although requested to do so. The defence taken is that the complainant terminated his tenancy in the month of Sravan and gave up possession of the room in question to the accused. The complainant had a grocery shop in a room taken lease of from one Kirtibash. The landlord of Kirtibash brought a suit against Kirtibash and got orders to demolish this room. Upon this Kirtibash asked the complainant to give up the room and the complainant not hav. ing any other place to go to has brought this false case against the accused in order to get back the room which he had already surrender. ed. The learned Court below has disbelieved the accused's case regarding surrender and it has believed the complainant's case that the room was given up to the accused temporarily for the purpose of enabling the accused to repair it and that the accused is now refusing to give up possession.

(3) The question which arises is whether on these findings the accused can be held guilty of having committed the offence of criminal trespass. The charge against the accused as originally framed was in the following terms:

"That you on or about 30th September 1948 (corresponding to 14th Aswin) at Lal Behari Basu Lane, p. s. M. P. Ghora committed house trespass by entering into 8 Lal Behary Basu Lane used as a shop room by the complainant Upendra Nath Samanta with the intent to cause annoyance to him."

The charge clearly shows that what was being alleged against the accused was that he entered into the premises on 14th Aswin with intent to cause annoyance to the complainant and thereby committed the offence of criminal house trespass. The learned Magistrate found that the facts did not support the charge because the entry was not on 14th Aswin but on 4th Aswin. Realising this he says that the charge was not quite accurate and he says that the offence of the accused was that he lawfully entered into the shop room on 4th Aswin but committed criminal house trespass by remaining there after 14th Aswin although requested by the complainant to give up possession. On appeal the learned Additional District Magistrate also comments on this defective charge and he says that the entry of the accused on 4th of Aswin was lawful and that the offence of trespass was committed on 14th Aswin when he refused to vacate the premises. He 1950 C/11 & 12 holds that the intention of the accused on this date was to cause mischief and annoyance to the complainant. He further said that the defective charge had not caused any failure of justice and thereafter he upheld the order of conviction and sentence.

[4] It is clear from both these judgments that the crime with which the accused has been charged is that which has been defined in the second portion of S. 441, Penal Code. The section is as follows:

"Whoever enters into or upon property in the possession of another with intent to commit an offence or to intimidate, insult or annoy any person in possession of such property, or, having lawfully entered into or upon such property, unlawfully remains there with intent thereby to intimidate, insult or annoy any such person, or with intent to commit an offence.

is said to commit criminal trespass."

In order to establish the offence described in the second portion of S. 411, Penal Code, the prosecution must prove that the accused remained in the premises into which he has lawfully entered with the intention of intimidating, insulting or annoying the person in possession of the property or with intent to commit an offence. Learned advocate for the petitioner contended that as the petitioner had already entered upon the property he was in possession and therefore, there could be no criminal trespass because in order to establish criminal trespass it must be proved that some one else other than the trespasser was in possession of the property. He says that constructive possession would not do. I am not impressed with this argument. If a person lawfully enters into a room in the possession of another person and induces that person to go out and on return of that person forcibly prevents him from re-entering and remains in the room with the intention of insulting that person, then it cannot be said that the second part of S. 441, Penal Code, does not apply. When possession is spoken of in this section it means possession at the time of the entry. If a person is in possession at the time of the entry and some one enters into the premises with one of the criminal intents mentioned in the section he will have committed an offence punishable under the first part of the section. Again, if a person enters into the property of another and after such entry refuses to leave the property with any of the intents mentioned in the section, he will be guilty of criminal trespass although by his entry he has succeeded in dispossessing the person who was in possession of the property at the time of the entry. There are, however, other difficulties in the way of the prosecution. As I have said before the case which the accused had to answer was the case of lawful entry and unlawfully remaining in the premises entered with one of the intents specified in the section. There is nothing in the charge to give notice to the accused that when the landlord entered the premises he had any of the intentions specified in the section. The judgment proceeds on the basis that the entry was lawful. In other words, the judgment proceeds on the basis that the landlord entered into the premises with none of the intentions mentioned in the section. If ten days after such entry he refused to vacate can it be said that he is remaining in the premises with the intention to intimidate, insult or annoy the person who was in possession at the time of the lawful entry or to commit any offence? I do not think it can. The lower appellate Court has held that the accused has continued in unlawful possession with a view to cause mischief and annoyance. There is no evidence that he had any intention to cause mischief nor is there any evidence to show that he had any intention to annoy. At worst his intention was to remain in the premises unlawfully but that by itself does not constitute an offence of trespass. A person charged with trespass under the second part of S. 441, Penal Code not only must remain on the premises unlawfully but he must remain on the premises unlawfully with certain intentions namely, the intent to intimidate, insult or annoy or to commit an offence. There is nothing to show that the accused had any of these intentions. That being so, the second part of S. 441, Penal Code can have no application.

[5] The order of conviction and sentence must therefore be set aside and the accused must be acquitted.

(6) I realise that it may be that the landlord when he entered originally on the premises got in there by committing the offence of cheating, but there is no such allegation either in the charge or anywhere else. On the contrary, the specific finding is that the landlord when he entered the premises entered lawfully. I was asked to send the case back for a retrial on the footing that the offence committed was one described in the first part of S. 441, Penal Code, but I do not think that the accused should be harassed any further because the complainant has his remedy in the civil Court where this question could be more effectively dealt with.

Jatindra Mohan Das — Petitioner v. Khitipathinath Mitra and another — Opposite Party. Civil Rule No. 203 of 1949, Decided on 17th August 1949.

Houses and Rents—West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act (XXXVIII [38] of 1948), Ss. 11 (3) and 18—Scope of—Proceedings between landlord and tenant—Decree passed under S. 18—Sub-tenant claiming statutory tenancy under S. 11 (3) has no right to ask for variation or rescission of such decree—Fact that decree is consent decree is immaterial.

Section 18 vests a Court with certain powers and does not in any other way interfere with ordinary civil law as to the rights of parties. Under the ordinary civil law a person who is not a party to a suit or proceeding has no right to come to the Court to have the decree in that suit varied or rescinded. Section 11 (3) of the Act has conferred some independent rights on a sub-tenant, provided his case is within that section, to claim a statutory tenancy under the landlord under certain circumstances. But nowhere in this Act is there any provision which entitles such a sub-tenant to intervene in any proceedings between other parties, namely, the landlord and the tenant. Therefore, a sub-tenant has no right when he claims a staturory tenancy under S. 11 (3) to intervene and ask for a variation or rescission of the decree under S. 18. It is immaterial whether such a decree is a consent decree or a decree on contest or ex parte. [Para 2]

Chandra Sekhar Sen and Bhabesh Narayan Bosefor Opposite Party.

K. C. Chunder J. — The rule was issued on the application of the petitioner who was a sublessee of premises No. 81 Pataldanga Street, Calcutta. Opposite party No. 2 was the lessee and Opposite party No. 1 was the landlord. On 4th August 1947 the landlord gave a notice tohis tenant opposite party No. 2 to quit by the last date of August 1947. As the premises were not vacated and peaceful possession delivered the landlord on 10th October 1947 brought a suit in ejectment at the Calcutta Court of Small Causes being Suit No. 5772 of 1947. The suit was decreed on 8th March 1948 by consent whereby the tenant agreed to vacate by 9th September 1948. Oppositeparty No. 2 brought a suit in the Original Side of this Court being Suit No 3079 of 1948 for a declaration that the ejectment decree was null and void. In that suit by consent it was ordered in September 1948 that opposite party No. 2, the tenant, was to give up vacant possession on 81st January 1949. It is said that opposite party No. 2 has now given up possession. On 24th January 1949 the petitioner who was the sub tenant in portion of the premises filed an application before the Court of Small Causes purporting to be under S. 11 (3) and S. 18, West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1948. It was not in execution as the petition itself shows, as also the consent decree, that there was no execution proceedings pending at the time. The Small Cause Court Judge on 1st February 1949 dismissed the application on contest but without costs holding that the provisions of S. 18 did not apply to consent decree and further that the petitioner had no locus standi to file an application under S. 18 and thereby make a prayer before the Court for varying the decree which was passed on confession. Against this order a petition in revision was filed and the present rule was issued.

[2] The main question which arises in this case is whether the petitioner has locus standi to ask the Court under S. 18 of the Act to vary or rescind the decree itself. It appears that in a decision in the case of Brojendra Kumar v. Moslem Ali Molla in Civil Revn. Case No. 465 of 1949 dated 12th May 1949 : (A. I R. (36) 1949 cal. 610), our learned brother Sen J. made an obiter dicta that a sub-tenant could come under S. 11 (8) for variation or rescinding of a decree under S. 18 of the Act. It was not necessary at all in that decision to go into that question. Section 18 is a section which vests a Court with certain powers and does not in any other way interfere with ordinary civil law as to the rights of parties. Under the orninary civil law, a person who is not a party to a suit or proceeding has no right to come to the Court to have the decree in that suit varied or rescinded and a perusal of 8. 18 would be quite sufficient to show that no such new right was conferred by that section upon any third party. Section 11 (8) of the Act has conferred some independent rights to a sub-tenant, provided his case is within that section, to claim a statutory tenancy under the landlord under certain circumstances. But nowhere in this Act is there any provision which entitles such a sub-tenant to intervene in any proceedings between other parties, namely, the landlord and the tenant. How this right given to him is to be enforced by him or used as a shield by him is a matter with which we are not at present concerned and so we express no opinion. The sub-tenant not having any right to intervene in a proceeding between the landlord and the tenant under the Act itself if he claims any such right it must be under the general law and it may be at once said that under the general law he has no such right. Therefore a subtenant has no right when he claims a statutory tenancy under S. 11 (8) to intervene and ask for a variation or rescission of the decree. It is immaterial whether such a decree is a consent decree or a decree on contest or ex parts. We pass no opinion whether a consent decree can be varied or rescinded under this section at the instance of any of the parties to the suit.

[3] Under the circumstances the Small Cause Court Judge came to a right decision though his reasons may not be proper.

[4] The rule is, therefore, discharged. Each party to bear his own costs.

Hazi Mahammad Ekramal Haque -Appellant v. Province of Bengal through the Land Acquisition Collector - Respondent.

A.F.O.D. No. 146 of 1945, Decided on 27th July 1949, against decree of Arbitrator appointed under the Defence of India Act for Calcutta and 24 Parganas at Alipore, D/-7th April 1945.

Land Acquisition Act (1894), S. 23 (1)-Requisition-Possession taken-No acquisition of ownership - Compensation has to be assessed on basis of fair market value for such interest - Fair rent must be notional fair rent of hypothetical tenant - Any restrictive executive order or Rent Control Order cannot be considered in assessing fair rent.

In case of a requisition where possession is taken, and there is not a complete acquisition of ownership of the land or buildings, compensation has to be assessed under S. 23 on the basis of fair market value for such interest in land. The relationship created is not that of a landlord and a tenant. Therefore, in deciding upon fair rent, for the purpose of S. 23, it must be a notional fair rent of a hypothetical tenant, and the assessment of such notional fair rent must be based upon a consideration which does not take into account restrictions temporarily imposed by any restrictive executive order or legislation like Rent Control Order, etc. The assessment in practice should be as if it was of a bouse of like nature let out for the first time to a tenant who is not compelled to take it up and by a landlord who is not compelled to let it out. The practical method will be to assess rent as if it was a new house for the first time let out on that date. [Para 5]

Annotation : ('46-Man.) Land Acquisition Act, S. 23, N. 8.

Atul Chandra Gupta and Shyama Charan Mitter -for Appellant. Chandra Sekhar Sen, Jajneswar Majumdar and Smrili Kumar Roy Chaudhury - for Respondent.

K. C. Chunder J.—This is an appeal against a decision of the arbitrator in a proceeding in connection with the assessment of compensation for a building requisitioned under the Defence of India Act, S. 19, read with Defence of India Rules 81 (2) (bb) and S. 75A of the Rules.

[2] Briefly, the facts are that premises No. 9 Chittaranjan Avenue used to be occupied by the Central Government under a lease which expired on 29th July 1943. The lease had been granted on 28th July 1940, the rent reserved being Rs. 1950 monthly. On the expiry of the lease, the owner refused to renew the tenancy. Therefore on 80th July 1948, a requisition order was served requisitioning the building for the Controller of the Army Factory Accounts. The Collector offered Rs. 2200 as the monthly rent inclusive of the Corporation rates. This was refused by the landlord who claimed Rs. 3988 as the monthly rent inclusive of rates. He asked for a reference to arbitrator. The arbitrator came to the conclusion that as the House Rent Control Order had come into force from 26th June 1943, the landlord if he had let out the house on 30th July 1943, would not have been entitled to any increase in rent because of the limitations contained in S. 8 of that Order and he was not entitled to claim any increased rent. Under the Rent Control Order, then in force, only an increase of rent by ten per cent. could have been claimed if the creation of the tenancy was prior to 1st December 1941 which it was in the present case, but the right to increase rent was limited by S. 8 of the Order, and in the present case, in view of S. 8 no increase would have been possible in the rent and so the arbitrator came to the conclusion that Rs. 1950 should be the fair rent, and as the Collector had offered much more than that, he did not disturb what the Collector had done. The landlord has come up on appeal.

[3] It has been urged by Mr. Gupta on behalf of the appellant that the entire principle on which compensation has been assessed in the present case is wrong. According to him, the occupation will be for an indefinite period, and this fact is not contested. He urges that there is no provision in law, when once compensation has been assessed, for changing the same from time to time. This proposition cannot be contes-

[4] The requisitioning authority is not a tenant in law, and therefore whatever changes are introduced in the rent control legislation cannot beneficially affect the claimant. It is clear, and is not disputed, that in the present case the appellant wrote to the Collector after the West Bengal Act of 1948 came into force that the amount paid by the Government ought to be increased by forty per cent. because such was the increment allowed by that Act. The Collector rightly contended that the Government was not a tenant, and so the claim did not come within the West Bengal Act of 1948 and the amount awarded by the arbitrator would not be increased by any percentage.

[5] We are disposed to agree with the contention of Mr. Gupta after having heard both the Senior Government Pleader and the Junior Government Pleader. It is clear that in case of a requisition like this, where possession is taken, and there is not a complete acquisition of ownership of the land or building, compensation has to be assessed under S. 23, Land Acquisition Act on the basis of fair market value for such interest in land. The relationship created is not that of a landlord and a tenant. The requisition is by the Government by virtue of its suzerian position by which it can forcibly take away any one's property. It is the superior authority which the State possesses by virtue of which such compulsory acquisition or requisition is made. It does not bring about any actual relationship of landlord and tenant. Therefore the Rent Control Order or other legislation or executive order with the backing of legislation have very little direct bearing upon the assessment of compensation. The market value of the interest taken away from the owner has got to be assessed. In the present case, it is the possessory interest which has been taken by the State, and, therefore, in assessing the fair market value of the case, fair rent is taken to be a good criterion. It is as a criterion of market value of the interest that the question of fair rent arises, and the only bearing that the rent control legislation may have is in so far as it affects by way of fall in rent the income which will be obtainable from the property in a proper market by a landlord. Rent may be brought down by means of such legislation or Rent Control Order and, therefore, fair rent to be assessed may be lower, but it cannot for a moment be contended that the principle on which compensation should be assessed is the principle on which a rent controller will at that particular time assess that particular building or land to rent for the very simple reason that in spite of the Rent Control Order certain rights remain with a landlord e. g. in particular cases even mentioned in the Rent Control Order itself, a right of re-entry lies with the landlord but not in case of requisition. Then again a Rent Control Order being an executive order, though backed by legislation under the Defence of India Act, has only a very limited duration, or expected to have a limited duration, whilst the requisition made by the Government was for an indefinite period. It has now been made clear that it is for an indefinite period. This was done when the appellant communicated with the collector and wanted to know when possession was likely to be given over. He was informed that the occupation by the Government would be for an indefinite period. The owner not being in the position of a landlord does not become entitled to any increment of rent, as was rightly pointed out by the Collector, that subsequent legislation might entitle a landlord to. Therefore, in deciding upon fair rent, for the purpose of S 23, Land Acquisition Act, it must be a notional fair rent of a hypothetical tenant, and the assessment of such notional fair rent must be based upon a consideration which does not take into account restrictions temporarily imposed by any restrictive executive order or legislation like Rent Control Order etc. The assessment in practice should be as if it was of a house of like nature let out for the first time to a tenant who is not compelled to take it up and by a landlord who is not compelled to let it out. The practical method will be to assess rent as if it was a new house for the first time let out on that date. This will exclude all the trouble that has been introduced in the present case by taking into account the Rent Control Order which has very little direct bearing except in so far as it has or has not succeeded in bringing down the market rate of rent. Rule 75A, Defence of India Rules corresponds in England with Regulation 51 of Defence General Regulations, 1939, as to power to take possession of land, and as to compensation under the Defence Compensation Act, 1939, was passed in England. Unfortunately there was no such elaborate provision for compensation made in India as it was done in England in the Act of 1939 so that we have all this trouble. If requisitioning is to be made a permanent method of acquiring subordinate interest in property forcibly by the Government, it is desirable that the rate and method of compensation should be settled by appropriate legislation after careful consideration.

ed upon a wrong principle and his decision must be set aside and the matter is remitted back to him for further consideration and disposal of the case according to law in the light of the principles laid down and according to the evidence which both sides may have already adduced or may on remand adduce before him.

Balaram Mandal — Defendant 2 — Appellant v. Sahebjan Gazi and others — Respondents.

- S. A. T. No. 171 of 1949 (Taxing Matter), Decided on 22nd July 1949, against decree of Sub-Judge, Second Court, Alipur, D/-22nd December 1948.
- (a) Court-fees Act (1870), S. 7 (iv) (c) Suit for declaration of title and for permanent injunction restraining defendant from interfering with plaintiff's possession—Section 7 (iv) (c) applies—Plaintiff to put single valuation Court has power to correct valuation under S. 8C (Beng.) Court is however powerless where there is no objective standard of valuation—Where plaintiff is not before Court, Court to put valuation as best as it can.

The expression 'consequential relief' means some relief which follows directly from the declaration, the valuation of which is not capable of being definitely ascertained and which is not specifically provided for and cannot be claimed independently of the declaration as a substantial relief.

Where the plaintiff has prayed for a declaration of his title and for a permanent injunction restraining the defendant from Interfering with his possession the prayer for a permanent injunction is a consequential relief and court-fees are payable, under S. 7 (iv) (c), ad valorem on the amount at which the relief is sought to be valued in the plaint, subject to the provisions of S. 8C (Beng). Where the relief for declaration is valued at Rs. 1000 and the consequential relief by way of permanent injunction at Rs. 10 and a fixed court-fee has been paid on the former relief under Sch. II, Art. 17 (iii) and on the latter relief under S. 7 (iv) (d), the mode of valuation is entirely erroneous. The correct mode of valuation is to put a single valuation, the option of valuing the relief resting with the plaintiff. The High Court has power to correct a valuation improperly made by the plaintiff. However, as no rules under S. 9, Suits Valuation Act, have been framed the Court is powerless in cases where there is no objective standard of valuation. [Paras 9, 10 & 11]

The proper procedure in cases where the defendant and not the plaintiff is before the Court, is that the Court has to serve a notice on the plaintiff to appear in Court for the limited purpose of assessment of court-fees and if the plaintiff fails to appear in spite of such notice the Court is authorised to put a valuation as best as it can in the circumstances of each particular case: Case law referred. Judgment.— This is a reference under S. 5, Court-fees Act and raises three questions for decision, viz., (1) whether one valuation should be put under S. 7 (4) (c), Court-fees Act, subject to correction by the Court under S. 8 (c), Court-fees Act; (2) where the defendant and not the plaintiff is before the Court, what is the procedure to be followed for valuing the relief and (3) whether S. 17 (2), Court-fees Act as amended would apply to cases arising under S. 7 (4) (c), Court-fees Act.

[2] The substance of the plaint, as it appears from the report of the Stamp Reporter, is that the plaintiff brought the suit out of which the appeal arises on the allegation that the disputed property belonged to one Akazaddin and others. The plaintiff purchased the same by a registered deed of sale for a consideration of Rs. 1,000 from the said Akazaddin and others in the benami of of his brother-in-law defendant 1. The plaintiff went into possession of the property purchased by him. Later on, defendant 1 sold the disputed property to defendant 2 who in collusion with defendants 3 and 4, is trying to dispossess the plaintiff from the disputed property. The plaintiff accordingly brought the suit for declaration that defendant 1 is the benamdar of the plaintiff in respect of the disputed property and for a permanent injunction restraining the defendants from taking possession.

[3] The suit was valued at Rs. 1,000 for declaration and Rs. 10 for permanent injunction. A sum of Rs. 20 was paid on the prayer for declaration and a sum of annas 12 only was paid on the prayer for permanent injunction.

[4] The suit was decreed on contest.

[5] An appeal was taken by the contesting defendants to the lower appellate Court on the valuation as made in the plaint and court-fees were paid on the same footing. The appeal was dismissed by the lower appellate Court.

[6] The present appeal has been taken by defendant 2 and in the memorandum of appeal court-fees have been paid on the same basis as it was paid in the Courts below.

[7] The Stamp Reporter was of opinion that the mode of valuing the relief claimed in the plaint was contrary to S. 7 (4) (c), Court-fees Act and that court-fees should be paid on a single valuation of the reliefs claimed in the plaint. The learned advocate for the appellant having contested the view taken by the Stamp Reporter, the aforesaid points of difference were placed by the Stamp Reporter before the learned Registrar, Appellate Side, as a Taxing Officer of this Court.

[8] The learned Registrar was of opinion that the questions involved are substantial questions and require a decision by the Court. The matter was referred to me as a Taxing Judge under the orders of the learned Chief Justice for giving my decision on the points already mentioned. I shall first take up the first question submitted to me for decision.

[9] I have already stated the substance of the plaint which is to be found in the report of the Stamp Reporter and this is not disputed on behalf of the defendant appellant. The present case, therefore, is one where the plaintiff has prayed for a declaration of his title and for a permanent injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with his possession. The question is whether S. 7 (4) (c), Court-fees Act is attracted to the facts of this case. Section 7 (4) (c), Court-fees Act would apply if the suit is one for a declaration where a consequential relief is prayed for. The expression 'consequential relief' has been defined to mean some relief which follows directly from the declaration, the valuation of which is not capable of being definitely ascertained and which is not specifically provided for and cannot be claimed independently of the declaration as a substantial relief: Kalu Ram v. Babu Lal, 54 ALL. 812: (A. I. R. (19) 1932 ALL. 485 F.B.), Mt. Zeb Ul-Nisa v. Din Mohammad, I. L. R. (1941) Lah. 451: (A.I.R. (28) 1941 Lah. 97 FB). Tested in this light, the prayer for a permanent injunction in the present case is a consequential relief. The present case, therefore, directly comes within S. 7 (4) (c), Court-fees Act. Court-fees are, therefore, payable ad valorem on the amount at which the relief is sought to be valued in the plaint, subject to the provisions of S. 8 (c), Court-fees Act.

[10] In the plaint, the plaintiff has valued the relief for declaration at Rs. 1,000 and the consequential relief by way of a permanent injunction at Rs. 10. A fixed court-fee of Rs. 20 has been paid on the former relief under Sch. II, Art. 17 (iii), and on the latter relief under S. 7 (4) (d), Court-fees Act. Such a mode of valuation is entirely erroneous and the court-fees paid are not in terms of the statute. The correct mode of valuation of the relief in such a case is to put a single valuation, the option of valuing the relief resting with the plaintiff. This was held by this Court in the case of In re Kalipada Mukherji, 58 Cal. 281: (A. I. R. (17) 1930 Cal. 686). This is conceded by the learned advocates appearing on both sides. Mr. Roy, appearing for the appellant, however, contends that unless the plaintiff values his relief properly the proper fee payable on the plaint and on the memorandum of appeal cannot be ascertained, and as there is no objective standard of valua. tion in the present case, the Court is not in a position to value the same. In the present case, the plaintiff was served with a copy of the order of this Court specially drawing his attention to the fact that the plaint may have to be valued in this Court under S. 7 (4) (c), Court fees Act. The plaintiff has chosen not to appear in pursuance of the notice.

valuation improperly made by the plaintiff was recognised in the case of Narayangunj Central Co.operative Sale and Supply Society Ltd. v. Mafizuddin Ahmed, 61 Cal. 796: (A. I. R. (21) 1934 Cal. 448 F.B.), and is now embodied in S. 7 (4) (c), Court fees Act as amended by S. 7 (2), Bengal Act, (Act VII [7] of 1935), 1935. As pointed out, however, in the case of Star Trading and Investment Ltd. v. Ashutosh Mukerjee, 43 C. W. N. 1116: (A. I. R. (26) 1939 Cal. 627), as no rules under S. 9, Suits Valuation Act have been framed, the Court is powerless in cases where there is no objective standard of valuation. If the question had arisen in the trial Court.

the Court might have acted under 0. 7, R. 11, Civil P. C. In the present case, however, the plaintiff is a respondent and has not appeared before the Court in spite of service of notice. The question, therefore, is whether the Court is powerless in these circumstances. As the plaintiff has not availed himself of the option given to him by law of valuing the relief, in my opinion, the Court has to value the same as best as it can. In cases arising under S. 7 (4) (c), Court-fees Act, the value for the purpose of jurisdiction follows the valuation for the purpose of court-fees. In the case of Sailendra Nath v. Ram Chandra, 25 C. W. N. 768: (A. I. R. (8) 1921 Cal. 84), the plaintiff valued his suit at Rs. 1,010 for the purpose of jurisdiction. The Court [?] to trial on that footing. The decree for costs on a valuation of Rs. 1,010 was passed in favour of the plaintiff. In my opinion, in the special facts of this case, the value of the relief cannot be put at a sum less than Rs. 1,010. As such the value of the relief in the present case must be deemed to be Rs. 1,010 under S. 7 (4) (c), Court-fees Act. This disposes of the first question which was referred to me for my decision.

[12] As regards the second question, the proper procedure in cases where the defendant and not the plaintiff is before the Court, the Court has to serve a notice on the plaintiff to appear in Court for the limited purpose of assessment of court-fees, and if the plaintiff fails to appear in spite of such service of notice, the Court is authorised to put a valuation as best as it can in the circumstances of each particular case.

[13] Coming to the third question, the material provision is S. 17 (2), Court fees Act which runs as follows:

"Where more reliefs than one based on the same cause of action are sought either jointly or in the alternative, the fee shall be paid according to the value of the relief in respect of which the largest fee is payable."

[14] In the case of In re Kalipada Mukherji, 58 Cal. 281: (A. I. R. (17) 1990 Cal. 686), Rankin J. was of opinion that in cases coming within S. 7 (4) (c), Court-fees Act, there is only one relief and court fees have to be paid on a single valuation which it is the right and duty of the plaintiff to put in the plaint. In the case of Mohitosh Mukherjee v. Satyanarain Chatterjee, 58 O.W.N. 340, which arose out of a suit for a declaration that two deeds of gift and settlement were invalid as being fraudulent and collusive and for khas possession, Sen J. held that the case came within s. 7 (4) (c), the relief for possession being ancillary to the relief for declaration. Sen J. then proceeded to observe that the relief for declaration and the relief for khas possession are two reliefs based on the same cause of action and as such the fee shall be paid according to the value of the relief in respect of which the largest fee is payable. The view taken by Rankin J. in the case of In re Kalipada Mukherji, 58 Cal. 281: (A. I. R. (17) 1930 Cal. 686), was held to have become obsolete in view of the amendment of S. 17, Court-fees Act by S. 12, Bengal Act, (Act VII [7] of 1935), 1935.

really depends on the meaning of the word 'relief' occurring in that clause. In my opinion, the second part of the clause clearly shows that the relief contemplated by the clause must be one in respect of which court fees are independently payable under the Act. It cannot mean consequential relief which is not per se chargeable with court fees. The view taken by Sen J. does not seem to be correct. In my opinion, S. 17 (2) does not apply to cases arising under S. 7 (4) (c), Court fees Act where a single valuation is to be put, and ad valorem court fees are to be paid on that valuation.

[16] The defendant appellant must pay the costs of this reference, hearing fee being assessed at one gold-mohur.

Where the plaintiff claims mesne profits the burden of proof would depend on the nature of the claim made by the plaintiff. If the plaintiff limits his claim to the actual profits which the defendant is said to bave received obviously in such a case, as the defendant is the person who had special knowledge of the actual receipt of profits received by him, the burden would lie on him to prove the actual receipts made by him. If, on the other hand, the plaintiff wants to make the defendant liable for the profits which the defendant ought to have received by the use of ordinary diligence in the event it cannot be said that that is a matter within the special knowledge of the defendant and the burden of proof would rest on the plaintiff to prove the probable receipts in respect of the disputed property : A. The Court acts with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction when it adopts a wrong procedure in the course of the trial which materially affects the decision of the case. Thus, where the plaintiff claiming mesne profits does not limit his claim to the actual profits received by the defendant, the direction of the Subordinate Judge to the Commissioner to ask the defendant to lead evidence in the first instance materially affects the determination of the question of mesne profits and the case comes within S. 115 (c): A. G. N. Das J. — This rule was obtained by defendant 3 against an order of the learned Subordinate Judge dated 15th March 1949 in which he gave certain directions in the matter of the ascertainment of mesne profits, to a Commissioner appointed for this purpose. In 1944 a suit for declaration of the plaintiff's title and for reco. very of possession was instituted against several defendants. Defendants 1, 2 and 6 were the trustees to the estate of one Sm. Sekheswari. Defendants 3, 4 and 5 were in possession of distinct plots under the trustees. On 20th March 1948 the suit was decreed, the plaintiff's title was declared and a decree for recovery of possession and for mesne profits was passed in favour of the plaintiff. Against the decree defendant 3 preferred an appeal to this Court and obtained Civil Rule No. 872 (F) of 1948 for a stay of the decree for delivery of possession and for ascertainment of mesne profits. This rule was heard on 23rd August 1948. An order was made by this Court directing stay of delivery of possession on certain conditions. The order directed that the Subordinate Judge should make a rough estimate of the mesne profits in respect of the property which was in the possession of defendant 3 from the date of suit, that is, 13th September 1944 till August 1950. If the security was furnished in respect of this sum the decree for delivery of possession would be stayed. There was a further order made in the rule to the effect that thereafter the Subordinate Judge would proceed to an ascertainment of the mesne profits for the entire period from 13th September 1944 till August 1950 and after such ascertainment the order requiring security to be furnished would be liable to be varied. After the matter went down to the Court below the plaintiff filed a petition stating that the mesne profits should be calculated on the basis that the profits of a cotta of land was Rs. 10 per month. On this footing the plaintiff stated that the probable mesne profits would come up to Rs. 4,08,000. To this petition defendant 3 filed a petition of objection wherein he mentioned the profits received by him, and that the profits so received by him were largely due to the improvements made by him and which cost him a sum of about Rs. 2,00,000. After making deductions for interest on such cost the defendant stated that the nett profits would be about Rs. 500 per annum. In the alternative the defendant stated that the probable rent of the disputed land would be Rs. 6 per cottah per annum. By an order dated 15th February 1949 the learned Subordinate Judge made a rough estimate. He took the view that the land in the possession of defendant 3 would be about 6 bighas, the probable letting value would be Rs. 12 per cottah per annum and on that footing he calculated the probable mesne profits for the entire period, roughly six years, at the total sum of Rs. 8640. Thereafter the Court proceeded with the work of ascertaining the mesne profits of the land. A commissioner was appointed to ascertain the same. The commissioner in the course of his enquiry prayed for directions as regards the question as to the person on whom the onus lay to prove the amount. of mesne profits. The learned Subordinate Judge dealt with this matter by order No. 109 dated 15th March 1949. In the course of his order the learned Subordinate Judge stated that the defendant judgment-debtor who was in possession was to lead evidence first to enable the commissioner to arrive at a conclusion as regards the amount of mesne profits. In case defendant 3, the judgment-debtor, did not lead such evidence the commissioner was to take further directions from the Court. On behalf of defendant 3, the judgment-debtor, a prayer was made that in case he was called upon to lead evidence first he might be allowed the opportunity of adducing rebutting evidence. The learned Judge did not pass any final orders on this petition but held it over for further direction in case the question arose at a later stage. It is the propriety of this order which is called in question in this Rule on behalf of the petitioner.

[2] Mr. Sen appearing on behalf of the petitioner has contended that the learned Subordinate Judge adopted a wrong procedure by calling upon defendant 3 to lead evidence first. His in revision.

contention is that in a case like the present the burden of proof is initially on the plaintiff and it is the plaintiff who is to lead evidence first. He has referred us to some cases bearing on this question.

for the decree holders has raised two contentions. In the first place he contends that the learned Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the burden of proof lay on the defendant judgment-debtor who was in wrongful possession. He has referred us to a decision of this Court in the case of Brojendra Ccomar Roy v. Madhub Chunder Ghose, 8 cal. 343. He has also contended that even assuming that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that the burden of proof lay on the defendant, that is at best an error of law and this Court is powerless to interfere with the order passed by the Court below

[4] We shall first deal with the first question, viz., whether in a case like the present it was for the plaintiff to adduce evidence first on the ground that the burden of proof lies on him. The word mesne profits is defined in S. 2, cl. (12), Civil P. C., which runs thus:

"'Mesne profits' of property means those profits which the person in wrongful possession of such property actually received or might with ordinary diligence have received therefrom, together with interest on such profits, but shall not include profits due to improvements made by the person in wrongful possession."

A plain reading of the clause shows that the plaintiff is entitled to receive from the person in wrongful possession either the profits received by such a person or the profits which such a person might have derived by the exercise of ordinary diligence. The burden of proof would depend on the nature of the claim made by the plaintiff. If the plaintiff limits his claim to the actual profits which the defendant is said to have received, obviously, in such a case, as the defendant is the person who had special knowledge of the actual receipt of profits' received by him, the burden would lie on him to prove the actual receipts made by him. If, on the other hand, the plaintiff wants to make the defendant liable for the profits which the defendant ought to have received by the use of ordinary diligence in the event it cannot be said that that is a matter within the special knowledge of the defendant and the burden of proof would rest on the plaintiff to prove the probable receipts in respect of the disputed property. Under S. 101, Evidence Act the burden lies on the person who would fail if no evidence is given on either side. This is subject to a qualification to be found in S. 106, Evidence Act. The observation of Field J. in the case of Brojendra Coomar Roy v. Madhub

Chander Ghose, (8 Cal. 343) quoted above is to the effect that as the defendants were in possession as wrong-doers it lay upon them to show what profits were realised by them. This observation has got to be read in the light of the facts of that case. In that case a claim was made in regard to mesne profits in respect of a certain taluk of which the defendant was in wrongful possession. The defendant produced certain account papers and wanted to prove to the Court the actual receipts which came into his hands. The account papers were found to be unreliable. It is under these circumstances that Field J. made the above observation. It cannot be said that this observation was intended to lay down a general rule applicable to all cases where the plaintiff claims mesne profits from the defendant. Brojendra Coomar Roy's case, (8 Cal. 343) was considered in the case of Ramakka v. Negasam, 47 Mad. 800: (A. I. R. (12) 1925 Mad. 145). That was a case which arose out of proceedings by way of restitution, the defendant claiming mesne profits from the plaintiff in respect of the property which was taken possession of by the plaintiff in course of execution. In that case a question arose as to who would begin first. Their Lordships of the Madras High Court after referring to the provisions of O. 18, R. 1, Civil P. C., proceeded to state that in the enquiry held by the commissioner the defendant was to lead hisevidence in the first instance and thereafter the plaintiff would lead his evidence. It may be pointed out that in that case the defendant was the person who was claiming mesne profits as against the plaintiff who was in wrongful possession. The case therefore is an authority for theproposition that the person claiming mesne profits has to lead evidence first. In the course of their judgment their Lordships draw a distinction between two classes of cases which may arise in the matter of determination of the amount of mesne profits. Their Lordships point out that in case the plaintiff claims the actual receipts made by the defendant as mesne profits, by virtue of the provisions of s. 106, Evidence Act, the burden would lie on the defendant, that is the person in wrongful possession to lead evidence first but where the plaintiff makes a claim. in respect of profits that might have been realised by the defendant by the exercise of reasonable care the burden of proof would lie on the plaintiff to show the probable profits which the defendant might have received. We entirely agree with the view taken by the Madras High-Court. This view found favour with the Patna-High Court in the case of Ram Kishun Lal v. Abu Abdullah, 21 Pat. 735: (A. I. R. (80) 1948 Pat. 69). Mr. Sen also drew our attention to the caseof Province of Bengal v. Sm. Purna Sashi

Chaudhurani, 75 C. L. J. 479: (A. I. R. (30) 1943 Cal. 125). In that case Nasim Ali J. with whom the learned Chief Justice agreed observed that where the plaintiff claims probable profits of the land the burden lies on the plaintiff to prove what those probable profits are.

[5] On a consideration of the cases referred to above we hold that in the present case the burden lies primarily on the plaintiff to prove his claim. As such the plaintiff is to begin first. Mr. A. C. Mukherji did not say in answer to a question by the Court that the plaintiff would limit his claim to the actual profits which the defendant received. The first contention raised on behalf of the petitioner must therefore succeed.

[6] We have now to consider the second objection raised by Mr. Mukherji. This concerns the powers of this Court to interfere in revision under S. 115, Civil P. C. which runs thus :

"The High Court may call for the record of any case which has been decided by any Court subordinate to such High Court and in which no appeal lies thereto, and if such subordinate Court appears-

(a) to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or

(b) to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, or

(c) to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, the High Court may make such order in the case as it thinks fit."

Mr. Sen contends that the present case is covered by the observations of Sir John Beaumont in the case of N. S. Venkatagiri Ayyangar V. Hindu Religious Endowments Board, Madras, 53 C. W. N. 458 : (A. I. R. (36) 1949 P. C. 156), towards the end of the judgment at p. 461. In order to appreciate the observation to which we shall refer presently it is necessary to state the facts which came up for decision in that case. In that case a question arose as to the construction of a will. This had bearing on the question whether the temple therein in dispute was a private temple or a public temple. The High Court was of opinion that the learned District Judge was under a serious error in construing the terms of the will. On this ground the High Court interfered with the decision of the learned District Judge in revision and proceeded to give a decision on their view of the construction of the will. Before the Judicial Committee a question was raised as to whether the High Court acted with jurisdiction in setting aside the decision of the District Judge under S. 115, Civil P. C. The Judicial Committee was of opinion that the High Court had exceeded their jurisdiction in interfering with the decision of the District Judge on the question of the construction of the will. Their Lordships in the course of their judgment referred first to the following passage in the case of Rajah Amir Hussan Khan v. Sheo Baksh Singh, 11 Cal. 6:11 I. A. 237 (P. C.) viz. :

"Whether they decided rightly or wrongly they had perfect jurisdiction to decide the question which was before them and they did decide it."

Their Lordships pointed out that if the decision is erroneous in law that fact of itself did not entitle the High Court to interfere in revision because the Court has jurisdiction to decide a point rightly or wrongly. It is to be noted that the point before the Judicial Committee in the case of Rajah Amir Hussan Khan, (11 Cal. 6: 11 I A. 237 P. C.) was a question of res judicata and did not concern the jurisdiction of the Court either in entertaining the suit or in proceeding with it; the Court had jurisdiction to go into the question of res judicata if in exercise of its jurisdiction the Court made a mistake on the point of law, that was not a ground which empowered the High Court to interfere in revision. Their Lordships then proceeded to refer to the observations in the case of Balakrishna Udayar v. Vasudeya Aiyar, 44 I. A. 261 : (A. I. R. (4) 1917 P. C. 71), to the effect that

"S. 115 applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise or non-exercise of it, or the illegal assumption of it, the section is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved."

The Judicial Committee there make the following observation in construing S. 115 (c):

"that in exercising jurisdiction the Court has not acted illegally, that is in breach of some provision of law, or with material irregularity, that is by committing some error of procedure in the course of trial which is material so that it may have affected the ultimate decision."

Mr. Sen contends that the Judicial Committee explained the word illegal in cl. (c) as inclusive of cases where there is a breach of some provision of the law.

[7] In our opinion having regard to the context, it cannot be said that their Lordships were inclined to take the view that any error of law which the Court may commit in exercising its jurisdiction would arm this Court with powers to interfere with the decision of the Court below.

[8] In the present case the learned Subordinate Judge adopted a wrong procedure in the matter of the ascertainment of mense profits, as such the case clearly comes within the observations of the Judicial Committee which say that the Court acts with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction when it adopts a wrong procedure in the course of the trial which materially affects the decision of the case. The present case therefore presents no difficulty whatsoever in the way of our assuming powers under S. 115, Civil P. C. Mr. Sen also referred us to the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Joy Chand v. Kamalakshya Chaudhury, 53 C. W. N. 562: (A. I R. (36) 1949 P. C. 239). In that case on an application under the Bengal Money-lenders Act the decree-holder who was the appellant before the Privy Council raised a contention that the loan was a commercial loan and the case therefore did not fall to be decided under the provisions of the Bengal Money lenders Act. The Subordinate Judge on a construction of the mortgage bond was of opinion that the loan was a commercial one and he dismissed the application made by the judgment.debtor under the Bengal Money.lenders Act. Against that order a petition in revision under S. 115, Civil P. C., was taken to this Court. This Court disagreed with the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge that the loan was a commercial loan and the order of the Subordinate Judge was varied with regard to some properties. Against the decision of this Court, an appeal was taken to the Judicial Committee. Before the Judicial Committee, Mr. Pringle appearing on behalf of the appellant conceded that no appeal lay from the decision of the Subordinate Judge to this Court. This concession was accepted by the Judicial Committee without expressing any opinion on the point. Mr. Pringle then contended that as no appeal lay to this Court, this Court had no power to interfere in revision with the order of the Subordinate Judge. It was contended on the authority of Raja Amir Hossain Khan's case, (11 Cal. 6: 11 I. A. 237 P. C.) that at most the question whether the loan was a commercial loan or not depended on a question either of law or of fact and this Court in revision had no power to interfere. This contention was repelled by the Judicial Committee.

[9] It is to be noted that the Judicial Committee expressly said that the question came under 8. 115 (b), namely that on an erroneous view of the powers of the Court, the Court had failed to exercise its jurisdiction. The case obviously came within the purview of S. 115 (b) because once the Court determined that the loan was not a commercial loan the Court had to proceed to the next step in course of the proceedings, namely, whether relief should be given under the Bengal Money-lenders Act or not. The decision of the question whether the loan was a commercial loan or not, involved the further question namely whether the Court would assume further jurisdiction in the case or not. It had, therefore, direct reference to the juris. diction of the Court to continue the proceedings before the Court. After stating that the case before their Lordships came under 8. 115 (b) their Lordships proceeded to observe as follows:

"The cases of Babu Ram v. Munna Lall, 49 All, 454;
(A. I. B. (14) 1927 All. 358) and Hari Bhikaji v. Naro Vishvanath 9 Bom. 432, may be mentioned as cases in which a subordinate Court by its own erroneous decision

(erroneous, that is in the view of the High Court) in the one case on a point of limitation and in the other on the question of res judicata invested itself with a jurisdiction which in law it did not possess, and the High Court held, wrongly their Lordships think, that it has no power to interfere in revision to prevent such a result."

[10] It is contended that in this passage their Lordships seem to lay down a general rule that if on a question of res judicata or on a question of limitation a subordinate Court goes wrong, this Court is entitled in revision to interfere with the decision of the subordinate Court. If this were the correct reading of the above sentence, it would be in direct conflict with what was decided by the Judicial Committee in the case of Rajah Amir Hossain Khan: (11 Cal. 6: 11 I. A. 237 P. O.), where the question of res judicata was said to be a pure question of law and an erroneous decision on that question was said to be a matter outside the old S. 622, Civil P. C., 1882. It is obvious that such a result could never have been intended. If we examine the facts in Babu Ram v. Munna Lal, 49 ALL. 454: (A.I.R. 114) 1927 ALL 958), it would appear that in that case an application to set aside an ex parte decree had been made. This was accepted by the trial Court without properly going into the question of limitation. On an application in revision on behalf of the plaintiff, the High Court of Allahabad was of opinion that the application was obviously barred under Art. 164, Limitation Act, but the High Court declined to interfere as this was not a matter which came within S. 115, Civil P. C. Reference was made to the case of Balkrishna Udayar v. Vasudeva Aiyar, 44 I. A. 261: (A. I. R. (4) 1917 P. C. 71). In the latest case before the Judicial Committee the case is said to have been wrongly decided by the Allahabad High Court. It is to be observed that in the case under consideration the trial Court had not properly dealt with the question of limitation, the assumption of jurisdiction by the Court which depended on the decision of an initial question whether the application was made at a time beyond the period of limitation, as required by the terms of 8. 3, Limitation Act, was irregular. In the case of Hari Bhikaji v. Naro Vishvanath, 9 Bom. 432, the High Court had refused to interfere in revision on the ground that the point raised was a question of res judicata which was a mere question of law. This decision is also considered by the Judicial Committee in the latest case to have been wrongly decided. A reference to the facts of this case would show that . the claim for mesne profits had been previously negatived and a second proceeding had been started to ascertain the mesne profits which had been already negatived in a former trial. It may be that here if the question of res judicata had been decided properly, the latter Court would have no power to go into the further question as to the ascertainment of mesne profits. This may be the reason why the Judicial Committee opined that this case was wrongly decided. The actual facts in the case of Raja Amir Hossain Khan do not appear either in 11 Cal. 6, or in 11 I. A. 237. It is difficult for us to gather what the precise facts were. It would seem, however, from the bare summary which is given in the reports that there a previous suit for redemption was dismissed and later on proceedings were again taken under the Oudh Taluk Act for the same relief. It is possible that the question of res judicata arose merely as an issue in the case, namely, whether the claim for redemption was available to the plaintiff in the later proceeding in view of the previous decision. In our opinion, it cannot be said that in the last two decisions, the Judicial Committee have differed from the view which was taken in the early case of Rajah Amir Hossain Khan in 11 I. A. 237: 11 Cal. 6 (P.C.) viz., that a mere error of law which has no reference to the question of jurisdiction is not by itself sufficient to entitle this Court to interfere in revision. In our opinion only in those cases where in the exercise of jurisdiction the Court acts illegally or with material irregularity that this Court can interfere under S. 115 (c), Civil P. C., a mere error of law not involving the jurisdiction of the Court is not enough. As we have already observed, in the present case the direction of the learned Subordinate Judge to the commissioner to ask judgment-debtors to lead evidence in the first instance materially affects the determination of the question of mesne profits and the case comes within S. 115 (c), Civil P. C. The objection raised by Mr. Mukherjee must, therefore, be overruled.

[11] In the result this Rule is made absolute. The order of the learned Subordinate Judge is set aside and this case is remitted to him for directing the commissioner to proceed with the work of mesne profits in the light of the obser-

[12] The defendant petitioner is entitled to his costs in this Rule from the plaintiff opposite party, the hearing-fee being assessed at two gold mohurs.

Guha J.—I agree.

Aditya Kumar Ray-Appellant v. Dhirendra Nath Mandal and another-Respondents.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 1 of 1948, Decided on 18th July 1949, against judgment of Blank J., D/-29th January 1948, in A. F. A. D. No. 1819 of 1943. (a) Limitation Act (1908), Art, 144 — Symbolical possession— Delivery of, operates as transfer of possession — Decree-holder given such possession on certain day— Judgment-debtor keeping him out of possession from next day — Judgment-debtor's possession becomes adverse from such date —Suit for possession by decree-holder is governed by Art, 144.

Delivery of symbolical possession operates in law as a transfer of possession from the judgment-debtor to the decree-holder. And this is so even where the judgment-debtor is in direct possession and not in possession through tenants: 16 Cal. 530 (F. B.); A. I. R. (4) 1917 P. C. 197 and 24 Cal. 715, Foll.; 36 Bom. 379 (F. B.), Not foll.; A. I. R. (10) 1923 Cal. 138, Ref.

Where, however, the decree-holder is given symbolical possession on a certain day, but the judgment debtor keeps him out of possession from the next day, the judgment-debtor's possession becomes adverse to him from that day, and limitation would begin to run against him from that date in respect of any suit for possession that he might afterwards bring against the judgment-debtor and such a suit would be governed by Art. 144: 24 Cal. 715, Foll. [Para 9]

Annotation: ('42 Com.) Lim. Act, Arts. 142 and 144, N. 65, Pts. 1 and 2.

(b) Limitation Act (1903), Art. 144 — Adverse possession against mortgagor — Simple mortgage by H in plaintiff's favour—Suit by plaintiff—Decree obtained — In execution mortgaged property purchased by plaintiff and symbolical possession obtained—In meanwhile H obtaining ejectment decree against defendants who were his tenants and obtaining symbolical possession—Suit by plaintiff for khas possession within twelve years of date of his purchase — Art. 144 and not Art. 137 or Art. 142 held applied—Suit held was not barred—Limitation Act (1908), Arts. 137 and 142.

The term "adverse possession" implies that the person against whom adverse possession is exercised, is a person who is entitled to demand possession at the moment adverse possession begins. Hence, the possession of a person who has dispossessed the mortgager of a simple mortgage subsequently to the date of the mortgage is not adverse to the simple mortgagee: 33-Cal. 1015; A. I. R. (5) 1918 Cal. 933 and A. I. R. (3) 1916 Mad. 990 (F.B.), Rel. on. [Para 10]

One H executed a simple mortgage of the lands in suit in favour of the plaintiff in 1921. In 1928 the plaintiff brought a suit upon this mortgage and obtained decree and in execution of that decree he purchased the mortgaged property on 14th April 1931 and on 9th September 1931 took delivery of possession through Court. In the meanwhile, in 1928, H got an ejectment decree against the defendants who were his tenants and obtained possession on 13th September 1928. It was found that the defendants' tenancy under H was putan end to by the ejectment decree and that the possession through the Court which H obtained on 13th September 1928 and which the plaintiff obtained on 9th September 1931 was only symbolical possession and actual possession remained with the defendants all along. In a suit by the plaintiff instituted against the defendants on 18th September 1940 for declaration of title to and recovery of khas possession of the land:

Held, that as a simple mortgagee the plaintiff had no right to demand possession at the time when the adverse possession by defendants against H started. He became entitled to possession only when he purchased the mortgaged property in execution of his mortgage decree on 14th April 1931 and the defendants' possession became adverse to him only from that date. In this view Art. 144 and not Art. 137 or Art. 142 would apply to the suit and as it was brought within twelve years of the time when the defendants' possession became adverse to the plaintiff, it was not barred by time.

(c) Limitation Act (1908), Art. 137—Applicability —Article cannot apply to purchaser at sale in execution of mortgage decree.

Article 137 contemplates an auction purchaser who has by his purchase acquired just the interest which the judgment-debtor had in the property at the date of the sale and no higher, and who stands in precisely the same position as the judgment-debtor did in relation to third parties in respect of that property. The purchaser at a sale in execution of a mortgage decree, however, becomes clothed not merely with the equity of redemption but also the mortgagee's interest in the mortgaged property and, therefore, Art. 137 cannot apply to such a purchaser: A. Sarat Chandra Jana-for Appellant. Sukumar Ghose (Sr.)-for Respondents.

- P. N. Mitra J.—This is an appeal on behalf of the plaintiff under Cl. 15, Letters Patent from a judgment of Blank J. in a suit for declaration of title to and recovery of khas possession of certain lands. The trial Court decreed the suit, but on appeal the learned Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Howrah, modified that decree by dismissing the plaintiff's claim for khas possession and giving him only a declaration of his title to the landlord's interest in the suit lands. Our learned brother has affirmed that decision of the lower appellate Court.
- (2) The suit lands are C. S. Dag No. 2684, which is a tank, and C. S. Dag. No. 2683, which an adjoining garden. These plots formed part of a maurashi mokarari jama which belonged to one Harish Chandra Mondal. Harish executed a simple mortgage in respect of this jama in favour of the plaintiff. It was stated to us by the learned advocate for the appellant that this mortgage was made in 1921. In 1928, the plaintiff brought a spit upon this mortgage, being Title Suit No. 83 of 1928, and obtained a decree. In execution of that decree he purchased the mortgaged property on 14th April 1931 and 9th September 1931 he took delivery of possession through Court.
- [3] In the plaint the plaintiff made the case that since obtaining delivery of possession through Court he remained in khas possession until the defendants dispossessed him on 20th Falgoon 1344 B. S. corresponding to 4th March 1998 on the allegation that they had a tenancy right in the suit lands. Plaintiff averred that the defendants never had any tenancy right in the lands and Harish had all along been in khas possession.

Upon these averments the plaintiff brought his suit on 18th September 1940 for declaration of his title by auction purchase and for khas possession.

- [4] The defendants filed their written statement on 12th December 1940. They put the plaintiff to proof of his title to the suit land, and they pleaded that they had a tenancy right in the suit lands under Harish since more than 50 years ago from the time of their grand father and the plaintiff's case of khas possession and dispossession in Falgoon 1344 was a false story. They said they had all along been in possession. They also pleaded limitation.
- [5] It appears that on 7th August 1941, an application supported by an affidavit was filed on behalf of the plaintiff praying that certain records might be called for. In this application it was stated that Harish had got an ejectment decree in Title Suit No. 144 of 1928 in the 3rd Munsif's Court at Howrah against the predeces. sors-in interest of the defendants and had taken possession of the property in suit through Court and thereby all right, title and interest of the defendants' predecessors in property in suit had been extinguished. These allegations were materially divergent from the averments in the plaint, but no application was made for amendment of the plaint, which was allowed to remain as it was.
- [6] The suit came on for trial on 13th August 1942. The learned Munsif allowed the plaintiff to put in evidence the decree for ejectment obtained by Harish in Title Suit No. 144 of 1928 against the predecessors in interest of the defendants and the peon's return to the writ of posses. sion showing delivery of possession to Harish on 13th September 1928. The decree was an ex parte one and was dated 31st May 1928. The defendants' objection to the reception of this evidence was overruled by the learned Munsif with the observation that the defendants had notice of the plaintiff's application of 7th August 1941, but they had not filed any additional written statement or counter-affidavit challenging the facts set out in the plaintiff's application. Upon this evidence supplemented by a little oral evidence the learned Munsif came to the conclusion that although the plaintiff's case that Harish had been in khas possession all along was untrue, the defendants' tenancy had been put an end to by this ejectment decree and Harish had obtained khas possession in execution of it. With regard to the plaintiff's allegation of dispossession in Falgun 1344, the learned Munsif does not appear to have come to any finding, but he held that the suit was not barred by limitation as the plaintiff had proved that he had taken possession on 9th September 1931. As he also found title in favour of the plaintiff, he gave the plaintiff a decree for declaration of title and khas possession.

[7] On appeal by the defendants, the learned Subordinate Judge took the view that the course that had been adopted at the trial of allowing the plaintiff to adduce in evidence the ex parte ejectment decree and the peon's return to the writ of possession without any amendment of the plaint had been unfair to the defendants and had caused them prejudice. He observed that "unless the plaint had been amended the defendants were not required to plead that the decree was a fraudulent one or that in spite of the decree the defendants have acquired a limited right of tenancy by adverse possession for more than twelve years."

He remarked that he "had a mind to send the case back on remand for an amendment of the plaint as well as to allow the defendants opportunity to file additional written statement and for framing additional issues," but he said that this course was not "necessary in view of the fact that the plaintiff's claim for khas possession is barred by limitation". Differing from the learned Munsif, he held that Harish had only taken symbolical possession and had never taken actual possession, and he also disbelieved the plaintiff's case of khas possession after his purchase. His finding was that the defendants had been in actual possession all along. He held the plaintiff's claim for khas possession to be barred by time, because the cause of action, he said, had arisen on 13th September 1928 when Harish obtained delivery of possession through the Court and the plaintiff had failed to prove his possession within twelve years of the accrual of the cause of action, but he did not indicate which Article of the Limitation Act be thought to be applicable. He accordingly gave the plaintiff only a declaration of his title to the landlord's interest in the suit lands and dismissed the claim for khas possession.

[8] On second appeal Blank J. disagreed with the view that any prejudice had been caused to the defendants by the course adopted at the trial, but he concurred in the view of the lower appellate Court upon the question of limitation and affirmed the decree which had been made by it.

[9] The view taken by Blank J. and by the lower appellate Court on the question of limita. tion has been assailed before us by the plaintiff appellant. That question has to be dealt with on the basis of the case that the defendants' tenancy under Harish was put an end to by the ejectment decree obtained by him against them and on the findings of fact arrived at by the lower appellate Court that the possession through the Court which Harish obtained on 13th September 1928 and which the plaintiff obtained on 9th September 1931 was only symbolical possession and actual possession remained with the defendants all along. Delivery of sbymolical, possession operates in law as a transfer of pos. session from the judgment-debtor to the decreeholder: Jugobundhu v. Ram Chunder, 5 cal. 584: (5 C. L. R 548 F. B.); Joggobandhu v. Purnanund, 16 Cal. 530 (F.B.) and Radha Krishna v. Ram Bahadur, 22 C. W. N. 330: (A. I. R. (4) 1917 P. C. 197). And this is so even where the judgment-debtor is in direct possession and not in possession through tenants; Hari Mohan v. Baburali, 24 Cal. 715. The contrary view taken by the Bombay High Court in Mahadeo v. Janu, 36 Bom. 373: (14 I. C. 447 F. B.) has not been accepted in our Court: Bhulu Beg v. Jatindra Nath, 27 C. W. N. 24: (A. I. R. (10) 1923 Cal. 138). Harish, therefore, must be taken to have obtained possession on 13th September 1928 when he was given symbolical possession as against the defendants' predecessors. As, however, they kept him out of possession from the next day, their possession became adverse to him from that day, and limitation would begin to run against him! from that date in respect of any suit for possession that he might afterwards bring against them. It was held by Banerjee J. in Hari Mohan's case (24 Cal. 715), that such a suit would be governed by Art. 144. It is unnecessary to consider whether Art. 142 would not be more appropriate in the view that Harish must be taken to have been dispossessed on the day after the delivery of possession to him, as the date of the dispossession for the purpose of Art. 142 and the date when the possession of the defendants became adverse to him would be the same so far as Harish was concerned.

[10] But the position of the plaintiff was entirely different from that of Harish. There could be no question of the plaintiff being dispossessed, as he was not in possession. Nor can it be said that the possession of the defendants' predecessors became adverse to him at the time when it became adverse to Harish. It is now well settled that the possession of a person who has dispossessed the mortgagor of a simple mortgage subsequently to the date of the mortgage is not adverse to the simple mortgagee; See Aimadar Mondal v. Makhan Lal, 33 Cal. 1015: (10 C. W. N. 904); Priya Sakhi v. Manbodh Bibi, 44 Cal. 425: (A. I. R. (5) 1918 Cal. 933) and Vyapuri v. Sonamma, 39 Mad. 811: (A. I. B. (3) 1916 Mad. 990 F. B.). The principles which govern the matter have been fully discussed in the judgments of Sanderson C. J. and Mookerjee J. in Priya Sakhi v. Manbodh Bibi, 44 Cal. 425 : (A. I. R. (5) 1918 Cal. 933), which reversed a judgment of Fletcher J. taking the contrary view. As Sanderson C. J. observed in that case, "the term 'adverse possession' implies that the person against whom adverse possession is exercised, is a person who is entitled to demand possession at the moment adverse possession begins."

As a simple mortgagee the plaintiff had no right to demand possession at the time when the adverse possession of the defendants' predecessors against Harish started. He became entitled to possession only when he purchased the mortgaged property in execution of his mortgage decree on 14th April 1931, and the defendants' possession became adverse to him only from that date.

[11] In this view Art. 144 would be the Arti. cle applicable to the plaintiff's suit for khas possession against the defendants and the suit would be in time, but the defendants have contended before us that the suit is governed by Art. 137, as this is a suit for possession of immoveable property by a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree when the judgment-debtor is out of possession at the date of the sale. Under that Article limitation runs from the time when the judgment debtor is first entitled to posses. sion. As Harish, it was contended, became entitled to recover possession from the defendants' predecessors at least on 14th September 1928, which was the day after he took symbolical possession, the suit brought on 18th September 1940 must be held to be out of time.

[12] The consequence of acceptance of this argument, it will be seen, will be to nullify the proposition that adverse possession against the mortgagor cannot be adverse to the mortgagee in a simple mortgage. While we have held that the possession of the defendants' predecessors did not become adverse to the plaintiff when it became adverse to Harish on 14th september 1928, we shall, if we accede to this contention, be in effect upholding the contrary position that the adverse possession of the defendants' predecessors against Harish affected the plaintiff as well, for according to this contention limitation would begin to run against the plaintiff from the time when Harish became entitled to possession and that is the time when the possession of the defendants' predecessors became adverse to Harish. We do not think that the language of Art. 137 compels us to adopt a view which would lead to such a result. When the Article speaks of a suit for possession by an auction purchaser when the judgment-debtor was out of possession at the date of the sale and makes limitation run from the time when the judgmentdebtor becomes entitled to possession, it appears to us to contemplate an auction purchaser who has by his purchase acquired just the interest which the judgment-debtor had in the property at the date of the sale and no higher, and who stands in precisely the same position as the judgment-debtor did in relation to third parties in respect of that property. The purchaser at a sale in execution of a mortgage decree, however, becomes clothed not merely with the equity of redemption but also the mortgagee's interest in the mortgaged property. In our opinion, therefore, Art. 137 cannot apply to such a purchaser. This was also the view which was taken of the article in Sundaram v. Thiyagaraja, 50 M.L.J. 183': (A. I. R. (10) 1923 Mad. 160).

[13] Article 137, therefore, is not attracted to the plaintiff's suit. Article 142 cannot apply as the plaintiff was never in possession, and no other article has been suggested as being applicable. Our conclusion, therefore, is that the suit is governed by Art. 144, and as it was brought within twelve years of the time when the defendants' possession became adverse to the plain.

tiff, it is not barred by time. [14] Our decision on the question of limitation, however, does not dispose of the case finally. The learned Subordinate Judge, as noticed before, stated in his judgment that but for the view which he was taking on the question of limitation he could have remanded the case to the trial Court for amendment of the plaint and for the filing of additional written statement and the framing of additional issues, and the defendants respondents urged before us that if we held against them on the question of limitation, as we have now done, they should be given an opportunity properly to contest the new case made by the plaintiff at the trial. We think that the defendants have legitimate ground for complaint against the manner in which this matter was dealt with in the trial Court. They could not anticipate that the application filed by the plaintiff for calling for certain records would be treated as having amended the plaint, and we do not agree with the learned Munsif that the filing of the application cast a duty upon the defendants to file an additional written statement. The learned Munsif seems to have thought that it was a question merely of the factum of a decree and a proceeding for delivery of possession. But the case the defendants apparently wanted to make when they were confronted at the trial with the ex parte decree and the peon's return was that the entire proceedings were vitiated by fraud as they laid some evidence to the effect that no summons in the suit had been served and no delivery of possession had actually been made in the locality. It is not surprising that this aspect of the matter was not at all considered by the learned Munsif, as there were before him neither pleadings nor issues bearing upon it. As the application of 7th August 1941. was in fact treated by the trial Court as having amended the plaint and the plaintiff was permitted to lead evidence in support of the case made in it, we consider it unnecessary to direct that the plaintiff should be asked formally to amend his plaint. But it is necessary in the interests of justice that the defendants should have an opportunity to meet the new case.

[15] We accordingly remand the case to the Court of first instance and direct that leave be given to the defendants to file an additional written statement within a time to be fixed by the Court, and that any additional issue or issues that may arise on that written statement be framed thereafter and the parties be allowed to adduce such further evidence as they may be advised on the new issue or issues. The question of plaintiff's title to the suit lands by his auction purchase at the mortgage sale and the question of limitation have been finally decided and are not to be re-opened. We may also observe that no case has hitherto been made by the plaintiff that the defendants' tenancy came into existence subsequently to his mortgage and he is not to be allowed to make such a case. If the Court comes to the conclusion that the defendants have a subsisting tenancy right in the suit lands, the plaintiff's suit for khas possession will be dismissed and he will only get a decree declaring his title to the landlord's interest therein. If, on the other hand, the Court comes to the conclusion that the defendants have no subsisting tenancy right in the suit lands, it will give the plaintiff a decree for khas possession as well as for declaration of title.

[16] We direct that the parties will bear their own costs up to this Letters Patent appeal. Future costs will be in the discretion of the Court dealing with the case.

R. P. Mookerjee J. - I agree.

Case remanded.

A. I. R. (37) 1950 Calcutta 96 [C. N. 25.] K. C. CHUNDER J.

Bibhuti Bhusan - Defendant - Petitioner v. Surendra Mohan Lahiri-Plaintiff - Opposite Party.

Civil Rule No. 863 of 1949, Decided on 18th July 1949.

- (a) Houses and Rents-Calcutta Rent Ordinance (V [5] of 1946), S. 25 - Tenant's appeal against order granting conditional permission to landlord to file suit for ejectment - District Judge can pass legal order granting permission unconditionally -No question of O. 41, Civil P. C., arises.

· Where the tenant files an appeal to the District Judge against the order of the Rent Controller granting a conditional permission to the landlord to file a suit for ejectment, the District Judge has jurisdiction under S. 25 to pass a legal order granting the permission unconditionally. No question of O. 41, Civil P. C., or anything analogous to it arises. The Rent Controller is not a Court and the District Judge does not act as a Court of appeal in the sense in which the Civil Procedure Code contemplates a Court of appeal. [Para 3]

(b) Houses and Rents - West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act (XXXVIII [38] of 1948), S. 45 (2) — Permission to file suit for ejectment obtained under Calcutta Rent Ordinance of 1946 - Pending suit Ordinance expiring and Rent Control Act coming into force-Suit held did not abate.

Where, pending a suit for ejectment by the landlord after obtaining permission under the Ordinance, the Ordinance expired and the new West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act was passed and came into force and it was contended that as the Ordinance under which the permission was granted expired the suit abated:

Held that the suit brought by the landlord was because of the rights given to him under the general law. The Rent Control Ordinance put certain bars to his right to institute the suit. So far as he was concerned, he had those bars removed by getting the permission but the removal of the bars themselves by the Legislature not continuing the Ordinance itself had nothing to do with his right to sue, or could in no way abate his claim.

(c) Houses and Rents-Calcutta Rent Ordinance (V [5] of 1946), S. 14 (3)-Landlord serving notice to quit - Rent Controller's permission to file suit obtained - Another notice to quit served before institution of suit - Second notice does not affect jurisdiction of Rent Controller to grant permission.

The law does not require the Rent Controller to grant permission to a landlord to file a suit for ejectment only when the landlord has already terminated the tenancy. The Rent Controller is at liberty to grant a permission even when the tenancy has not been put an end to. Where, therefore, the landlord serves a notice to quit and obtains permission of the Rent Controller, the question whether there was a subsequent notice to quit served before the institution of suit accepting the tenancy as subsisting till the second notice does not at all affect the question of jurisdiction of the Rent Controller who has ample jurisdiction to grant permission without a notice to quit even.

Order. - This Rule was issued at the instance of the tenant defendant. The plaintiff filed a suit for ejectment in 1947 and, as is usual, though he claims the house for his personal use and occupation, he is being driven from pillar to post. The Calcutta Rent Ordinance, 1946 was then in force. The landlord got the permission of the Rent Controller. The Rent Controller granted a conditional permission.

[2] The tenant filed an appeal to the District Judge, 24 Parganas under the Ordinance. The District Judge in deciding the appeal very rightly passed a legal order by granting the permission unconditionally. Had the original order of the Rent Controller stood, there might have been some justification for the contention raised before us that the permission was not legal.

[3] As regards the question that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to pass such an order, the jurisdiction is granted by 8, 25 of the Ordinance. No question of O. 41, or anything analogous to it arises. The Rent Controller is not a Court and the District Judge is not acting as a Court of appeal in the sense in which the Civil Procedure Code contemplates a Court of appeal.

[4] Then the Ordinance was extended by a further Ordinance after the suit had been filed with the permission. Then the Ordinance expired and the New West Bengal Premises Rent Control (Temporary Provisions) Act, 1948, was passed and came into force on 1st December 1948. The contention put forward before us is that as the Rent Ordinance under which the permission was granted expired, the suit brought by the landlord abated. The suit brought by the landlord is because of the rights given to him under the general law. The Rent Control Ordinance puts certain bars to his right to institute the suit. So far as he was concerned, he had those bars removed by getting the permission, but the removal of the bars themselves by the Legislature not continuing the Ordinance itself has nothing to do with his right to sue, or can in no way abate his claim. The utmost that it can do but we do not decide at all whether it actually does so or not, is to deprive the defendant of certain defences which he might have had if no permission had been taken in such a case. The question does not even arise in the present case.

[5] Finally, it has been urged that the landlord served a notice to quit, and filed a proceeding before the Rent Controller for permission to file a suit. As the proceedings dragged on for sometime, when he got the permission finally, and before the institution of the suit, he filed a second notice to quit. It has been urged before us that this had made the permission given by the Rent Controller without jurisdiction. The law did not require the Rent Controller to grant permission only when the landlord had already terminated the tenancy. The Rent Controller was at liberty to grant a permission even when the tenancy had not been put an end to. Therefore, the question whether there was a subsequent notice to quit accepting the tenancy as subsisting till the second notice does not at all affect the question of jurisdiction of the Rent Controller who had ample jurisdiction to grant permission without a notice to quit even.

[6] These are all the points urged and, therefore, the Rule is discharged with costs.

[7] Let the records be sent down without delay.

Pasupati Banerji -- Accused -- Petitioner v. The King.

Criminal Revn. No. 330 of 1949, Decided on 7th July 1949.

(a) Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 195 (1) (a)-"Public servant concerned"-Offence under S. 182, Penal Code-Words mean public servant to whom false information is given - Penal Code (1860), S. 182.

The words "public servant concerned", so far as an offence under S. 182, Penal Code, is concerned, would mean a public servant to whom a false information is given with the intention or knowledge that such public servant will do something which he ought not to do.

Annotation: ('49-Com.) Criminal P. C., S. 195, N. 4.

(b) Penal Code (1860), S. 182 (a) __ Accused writing letter to chairman of municipality objecting to name of S in Electoral Roll-Assertion therein that S was not paying income-tax and therefore he could not claim to be voter - Copy of letter sent to Sub-Divisional Officer Such officer requested in accompanying memorandum to call for from Income-tax Officer necessary information - Enquiry made by Sub-Divisional Officer-S found to have paid income-tax - Sub-Divisional Officer filing complaint against accused for offence under S. 182 -Sub-Divisional Officer held had no right to file complaint -Criminal P. C. (1898), S. 195 (1) (a).

In order to establish an offence punishable under S. 182, Penal Code, it must be established that a person gave information which he knew or believed to be false to a public servant and that he intended thereby to cause such public servant to do something which he ought not to do. The words "to do something" which such public servant ought to do must mean to do something which the public servant was enjoined to do in his official capacity as public servant. It a person gives false information to a public servant knowing it to be likely or intending that he would do something which had no connection with his office as a public servant the conduct of the person giving such information would not come within purview of S. 182, Penal Code. The accused wrote a letter to the Chairman of a municipality objecting to the inclusion of the name of S in the preliminary Electoral Roll, asserting that he had come to know after an informal enquiry that S did not pay income-tax, that therefore he could not claim to be a voter and that his name should be struck off if it was found after necessary enquiry that he did not pay the income-tax. A copy of the letter was sent to the Sub-Divisional Officer and in the accompanying memorandum he was requested to look into the matter seriously and call for from the Income-tax Officer necessary information in this connection. Enquiries were made by the Sub-Divisional Officer and he found that S paid income-tax and that the allegation against him was false. Upon this the Sub-Divisional Officer filed a complaint against the accused alleging that he had committed an offence punishable under S. 182, Held, that the Sub-Divisional Officer was being asked to do something which did not constitute an act to be done in the exercise of his duties as a public servant. That being so, so far as the sending of the letter to the Sub-Divisional Officer together with memorandum was concerned, no offence under S. 182, Penal Code had been committed and therefore the Sub-Divisional Offioer had no right to file the complaint. Bireswar Chatterjee -for Petitioner. Noni Coomar Chakravarty-for the Crown.

Order.—This Rule has been obtained by one Pashupati Banerjee praying that certain proceedings against him should be quashed.

[2] The facts giving rise to this Rule may be briefly stated as follows: On 19th July 1948, the petitioner Pashupati Banerjee wrote a letter to the Chairman of the Kamarhati Municipality objecting to the inclusion of the name, Sri Sushil Kumar Mukherjee in the preliminary Electoral Roll. In his letter, the petitioner asserted that he had come to know after an informal enquiry that Sushil Kumar Mukherjee did not pay income-tax, that therefore he could not claim to be a voter and that his name should be struck off if it was found after necessary enquiry that he did not pay the income tax. Copies of the letter to the Chairman were sent to various persons amongst whom was the Sub Divisional Officer of Barrackpore. With the copy was sent the following observation:

"With a request to look into the matter seriously and call for from the Income-tax Officer necessary information in this connection. There should not be any shadow of doubt in the mind of the public that Sushil Babu being an ex-Commissioner of the Municipality is exercising his influence over the Registering Authority to include his name in the Electoral Roll in an illicit manner."

Enquiries were made by the Sub-Divisional Officer and he found that Sushil Babu paid income tax and that the allegation against him was false. Upon this the Sub-Divisional Magistrate asked the petitioner Pashupati Banerjee to show cause why legal action should not be taken against him for giving false information to the Sub Divisional Officer with the intention to cause annoyance and injury to Sushil Kumar Mukherjee without any lawful ground. Cause was shown and thereafter the Sub-Divisional Officer filed a complaint before Sri B. N. Sen, Magistrate, First Class, alleging that Pashupati Banerjee had committed an offence punishable under S. 182, Penal Code. The Magistrate took cognizance of the complaint and issued summons against Pashupati Banerjee who has now obtained this Rule for a quashing of the proceedings.

[3] The argument of learned Advocate appearing on behalf of the petitioner may be stated thus:

[4] The allegations which were made by Pashupati Banerjee against Sushil Kumar Mukherjee were made to the Chairman of the Municipality for necessary action and the Chairman alone could act upon this letter. It is true that a copy was sent to the Sub-Divisional Officer with a certain request but it could not be said that any offence has been committed by this act on the part of the petitioner. If the statements made by Pashupati Banerjee against Sushil Kumar Mukherjee are false, then the only person who could file a complaint against Pashupati Baner. jee would be the Chairman of the Municipality or some officer subordinate to the Chairman. The Sub-Divisional Officer was not an officer subordinate to the Chairman and therefore he had no right to complain. By virtue of the provisions of S. 195 (1), Criminal P. C., the Court could take cognizance of the complaint only upon the complaint of the Chairman or his subordinate. The Court was wrong in taking cognizance of the complaint of the Sub-Divisional Officer.

[5] Learned advocate appearing on behalf of the Crown contended that the complaint filed by the Sub-Divisional Officer was a valid complaint and that the Court before whom the complaint was filed had jurisdiction to entertain the complaint and issue process. His argument is that statements made by Pashupati were false and that he made these false statements in order to induce or knowing it likely he will induce the Sub-Divisional Officer to do certain things which he would not have done. His view is that the sending of a copy of the letter addressed to the Chairman together with the request amounted to giving the Sub-Divisional Officer information and asking him to do something which he ought not to do.

[6] In order to decide this question one must first examine the words of S. 195 (1) (a), Criminal P. C. It is in the following terms:

"No Court shall take cognizance of any offence punishable under Ss. 172 to 188, Penal Code except on the complaint in writing of the public servant concerned or of some other public servant to whom he is subordinate."

It is clear from this section that the person to make the complaint is the public servant concerned or his subordinate. The words "publicy servant concerned", so far as an offence under S. 182, Penal Code, is concerned, would mean a public servant to whom a false information is given with the intention or knowledge that such public servant will do something which he ought not to do. Obviously if the Chairman of the Municipality had filed this complaint, there could be no objection. The information was given to him and he was asked to act upon it. If the informant knew that the information was false he would be guilty of an offence punishable under S. 182 Penal Code. Here, however, the complaint has not been filed by the Chairman but by the Sub-Divisional Officer. I quite agree with learned advocate appearing for the Crown that by sending a copy of the letter addressed to the Chairman to the Sub-Divisional Officer the petitioner was giving information to the Sub-Divisional Officer. It is also true that in the memorandum accompanying the letter Sub-Divisional Officer is requested to do certain things. The question which arises for consideration is whether this amounts to an offence punishable under S. 182, Penal Code. For this purpose, we have to examine the wording of S. 182 (a), Penal Code. It is in the following terms:

"Whoever gives to any public servant any information which he knows or believes to be false, intending thereby to cause, or knowing it to be likely that he will thereby cause, such public servant (a) to do or omit anything which such public servant ought not to do or omit if the true state of facts respecting which such information is given were known by him, or"

Reliance has not been placed by the learned advocate for the Crown on sub-s. (b) of s. 182, Penal Code, so, I leave it out of consideration. In order to establish an offence punishable under S. 182, Penal Code, it must be established that a person gave information which he knew or believed to be false to a public servant and that he intended thereby to cause such public servent to do something which such servant ought not to do or that he knew it to be likely that he would thereby cause such public servant to do something which he ought not to do. Now, the words "to do something" which such public servant ought not to do must mean, in my opinion, to do something which the public servant was enjoined to do in his official capacity as public servant. If a person gives false information to a public servant knowing it to be likely or intending that he would do something which had no connection with his office as a public servant then, in my opinion, the conduct of the person giving such information would not come within the purview of s. 182, Penal Code. For instance, if a person gave information to a public servant knowing it to be likely or intending that such public servant would go and beat up somebody, then it cannot be said that this offence has been committed because it is no part of the duty of a public servant to beat up people. Now, in the present case the Sub-Divisional Officer has nothing to do with the matter regarding the inclusion of Sushil Kumar Mukherjee in the Electoral Roll. He bad no function to perform regarding these matters and it was no part of his duty as a public servant to make enquiries whether Sushil Kumar Mukherjee paid income-tax or not. Therefore, it is quite clear that the Sub-Divisional Officer was being asked to do something which did not constitute an act to be done in the exercise of his duties as a public servant. That being so, so far as the sending of the letter to the Sub-Divisional Officer together with memorandum is concerned, no offence under S. 182, Penal Code, has been committed and therefore the Sub. Divisional Officer had no right to file the complaint. The person who should have filed the complaint is the Chairman of the Municipality or some one subordinate to him. one for on [7] In these circumstances I must hold that the proceedings are bad ab initio and they must therefore be quashed.

[8] I wish it to be understood that I am expressing no opinion whether in the circumstances of this case the Chairman of the Municipality should take steps or not. That is a matter for the Chairman to decide.

[9] The rule is made absolute.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 283 of 1949, Decided on 7th July 1949.

Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 200, 202 and 156 (3)—Complaint to Magistrate—Procedure to be followed by him stated—Order by Magistrate forwarding complaint to police to make inquiry and take cognizance if any cognizable offence was made out and send report — Order improper — Subsequent trial held illegal.

When a complaint is filed before a Magistrate be can adopt one of two courses. He can examine the complainant upon oath and then issue process. On the other hand he can under S. 202 of the Code postpone the issue of process and refer the complaint to a Magistrate or the police for further enquiry and then take action on receipt of the report. The other course open to the Magistrate is to send the complaint to the police asking them to take action under S. 156 (3) of the Code. In that case the Magistrate would not examine the complainant, but merely forward the complaint to the police for investigation and taking cognizance. [Paras 6 and 7]

On receipt of a complaint the Magistrate forwarded it to the police to make an enquiry and take cognisance if any cognizable offence was made out and send a report. On seeing the report sent by the police the Magistrate took cognizance and summoned the accused and proceeded with the trial:

Held (i) that the order of the Magistrate forwarding the complaint to police to make inquiry and take cognizance if cognizable offence was made out and send a report was an order which could not possibly be made: 53 C. W. N. 653, Rel. on;

(ii) that it was clear that the Magistrate acted under S. 202 and having seen the report he took cognizance and summoned the accused but he never examined the complainant on oath as required by S. 200 and therefore he could not under the circumstances take cognisance under Ch. 16 and the proceedings thereafter were illegal;

[Para 9]

(iii) that the case did not fall within S. 156 (8) because the police though asked to inquire and take cognisance were also asked to report. The police did not submit a charge sheet or a challan but reported and, therefore, quite clearly they did not act under S. 156 (8).

Debabrata Mookerjee and Arun Kishore Das Gupta-tor Petitloner. Diptondra Mohan Ghose-tor Opposite Party. Harries C. J.—This is a petition for revision of an order of a learned Magistrate acquitting the opposite parties under S. 258, Criminal P. C.

[2] The learned Magistrate held that the whole of the trial was illegal and he did not enter into the merits of the dispute.

[3] It appears that a complaint was made to a learned Magistrate alleging offences under Ss. 448 and 341, Penal Code. On 6th December 1947, the learned Magistrate passed the following order: O/C Watgunge, P.S.—to make an enquiry and take cognizance if any cognizable offence is made out and send a report by 6th January 1948."

[4] The police apparently reported, as an order of 6th January 1948, reads: "Seen report. Complainant absent—file." There is another order of the same date: "Complainant appears by petition. Seen police report. Summon Balai Lal Das and Parmeswar Singh under Ss. 488 and 341, Penal Code for 4th February 1948."

[5] The proceedings continued after the evidence of the prosecution had been taken and charges framed and witnesses cross-examined. A point was taken by learned advocate for the defence that the whole trial was without jurisdiction by reason of the orders passed by the learned Magistrate.

(6) When the complaint was filed before the learned Magistrate he could have adopted one of two courses. He could have examined the complainant upon oath, and then issued process. On the other hand, he could under S. 202, Criminal P. C. postpone the issue of process and refer the complaint to a Magistrate or the police for further enquiry and then take action on receipt of the report.

[7] The other course open to the Magistrate was to send the complaint to the police asking them to take action under S. 156 (3), Criminal P. C. In that case the Magistrate would not examine the complainant, but merely forward the complaint to the police for investigation and taking cognizance.

[8] It will be seen that the learned Magistrate in this case forwarded the complaint to the police to make an enquiry and take cognizance if any cognizable offence was made out and send a report. It is an order which cannot possibly be made. Either the Magistrate himself examines the complainant and then asks the police to enquire and report or the complaint must be sent to the police for them to enquire and take cognizance if they think proper.

[9] In the present case it is quite clear that the Magistrate acted under S. 202, Criminal P. C. and having seen the report he took cognizance and summoned the accused; but it is to be observed that he never examined the complain. ant on oath as required by S. 200 and therefore he could not in the circumstances take cognizance under Ch. 16 and the proceedings thereafter were illegal.

[10] The case does not fall within S. 156 (3) because the police though asked to enquire and take cognizance were also asked to report. The police did not submit a charge sheet or a challan but reported and, therefore, quite clearly they did not act under S. 156 (3) of the Code. It seems to me that this case is completely covered by a recent Bench decision of this Court in the case of Pulin Behari Ghose v. The King, 53 C. W. N. 653. There very much the same thing happened and the Bench held that when a complaint is filed before a Magistrate he should either take cognizance of it under S. 200 of the Code and proceed under ch. 16 or send the complaint to the officer in charge of the Police Station directing him to proceed under ch. 14 of the Code. He should not make a hybrid composite order, both under S. 156 (3) and under S. 202 of the Code.

[11] The Magistrate here took cognizance after a report without examination of the complainant and the proceedings thereafter were illegal and the learned Magistrate was right in so holding.

[12] That being so, this petition which is directed against the order of discharge fails and is dismissed.

Civil Revn. Appln. No. 502 of 1948, Decided on 8th July 1949, for setting aside judgment and decree of Munsif, 3rd Court, Midnapore, D/- 21st January 1948.

Railways Act (1890), S. 75 (1) and (2)—Applicability—Actual value of excepted goods consigned exceeding Rs. 100 but value declared to be less than Rs. 100—Goods lost—Claimant not entitled to compensation: A. I. R. (34) 1947 Cal. 182, Not approved.

The words of S. 75 (1) are plain and admit of no qualification. If the package contains excepted goods, and the instrinsic value exceeds the statutory limit, the railway administration cannot be held responsible for the loss, destruction or deterioration of the package, unless the value and contents are declared. The value to be declared is the true value. Section 75 (2) in terms does not entitle the consignor or consignee to get the declared value, It places a maximum limit, beyond which the claimant cannot recover whatever the true value may be. Section 75 (2) is intended to apply to cases where a declaration is called for. An unnecessary declaration is not contemplated by the section. In cases of over-valuation of excepted articles above the statutory limit, the claimant gets the true value; the declaration does not help him. In cases of under-valuation of excepted articles above the statutory limit, a limited disability is imposed by S. 75 (2), viz., that the claimant can only recover up to the declared amount.

[Paras 10 & 11]

Where, therefore, the actual value of the excepted goods consigned exceeds Rs. 100 but the declared value is less than Rs. 100 and the goods are lost, destroyed or deteriorated, the claimant will not be entitled to any compensation: A. Nripal Chandra Roy Choudhury -for Petitioner.

Chandra Sekhar Sen and Ajoy Kumar Basu

for Opposite Party.

G. N. Das J.—This rule was obtained by the petitioner Krishna Chandra Guin. It is directed against the decision of Mr. D. N. Chakladar, Munsif, 3rd Court, Midnapore, exercising Small Cause Court powers, whereby he dismissed the petitioner's suit for recovery of a sum of Rupees 152, alleged to be the price of goods consigned for carriage by the B. N. Railway administration represented by the defendant opposite party, and not delivered to the consignee.

[2] The facts of the case are that Joseph Herber & Co., Calcutta self-consigned a package for carriage by the B. N. Railway from Esplanade, Calcutta, to Midnapore. In the forwarding note, the consignor described the package as containing Gramophone Records and declared the value to be Rs. 99 only. The plaintiff petitioner purchased the goods from the consignor and took an open delivery of the package at Midnapore Railway Station. A part of the contents of the goods was not delivered by the B. N. Railway. After service of the requisite notices, the petitioner filed this suit for recovery of a sum of Rs. 152 being the price of goods not delivered to him. The defendant denied liability; the material defence with which we are now concerned, is a plea under S. 75, Railways Act.

[8] The trial Judge gave effect to this plea and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff has moved this Court in revision.

[4] It is not disputed in this Court that the articles contained in the package come within item (r) of sch. 2 of the Act and are excepted articles.

[5] Mr. Roy Choudhury for the petitioner pressed only one point, viz., that although the value of the package exceeded Rs. 100 and it came within S. 75 (1) of the Act, nevertheless he was entitled to recover the sum of Rupees 99, the value declared by him. In support of his contention, he relied on S. 75 (2) of the Act and the decision of Lodge J., in the case of Governor-General in Council v. Tarak Nath De, A. I R. (34) 1947 Cal. 182; (225 I. C. 630).

- Advocate for the opposite party, contended that S. 75 (1) is clear on the point and the disability to recover anything is not controlled by S. 75 (2). He referred us to an unreported decision of Chakravartti J., in the case of Governor General in Council v. Basanta Kumar Goldar, Oivil Rule 293 of 1948 decided on 9th July 1948.
- [7] The aforesaid decisions are clearly in conflict and we have to resolve the same.
- [8] Section 75 of the Act as it then stood, read as follows:
- "(1) When any articles mentioned in the second schedule are contained in any parcel or package delivered to a railway administration for carriage by railway, and the value of such articles in the parcel or package exceeds (one) hundred rupees, the railway administration shall not be responsible for the loss, destruction or deterioration of the parcel or package unless the person sending or delivering the parcel or package to the administration caused its value and contents to be declared or declared them at the time of the delivery of the parcel or package for carriage by railway, and, if so required by the administration, paid or engaged to pay a percentage on the value so declared by way of compensation for increased risk.
- (2) When any parcel or package of which the value has been declared under sub-section (1) has been lost or destroyed or has deteriorated, the compensation recoverable in respect of such loss, destruction, or deterioration shall not exceed the value so declared and the burden of proving the value so declared to have been the true value, shall, notwithstanding anything in the declaration, lie on the person claiming the compensation."
- [9] The liability of the Railway administration is that of a bailee under S. 72 of the Act; the measure of such liability is the damage sustained by the claimant. The amount of such damage is the value of the goods lost, destroyed, or deteriorated in transit. The value declared under S. 75 (1) is not the measure of such loss, destruction or deterioration. The burden of proving the true value is upon the claimant and the burden rests on him inspite of the declaration made by the consignor and not objected to by the railway administration; this appears from S. 75 (2) of the Act.
- [10] Section 75 of the Act is an exemption provision. Clauses (1) and (2) of the section are both intended to limit the liability of the railway administration, as would appear from the opening words "Further provisions with respect to the liability of a railway administration as a carrier of articles of special value". The object of the section is to protect the railway administration. In cases of excepted articles, the section compels the consignor to declare the value if it exceeds the limit of R9, 100. The declaration is intended to put the officers of the administration on their guard. The administration is also entitled to charge a certain percentage of the value in such cases. The words of s. 75 (1) are plain and admit of no qualification. If the package contains excepted goods, and the intrinsic value exceeds the staturory limit, the railway administration cannot be held responsible for the loss, destruction or deterioration of the package, unless the value and contents are declared. The value to be declared is the true value.

[11] Section 75 (2) in terms does not entitle the consignor or consignee to get the declared value. It places a maximum limit, beyond which the claimant cannot recover whatever the true value may be. Section 75 (2) is intended to apply to cases where a declaration is called for. An unnecessary declaration is not contemplated by the section. In cases of over-valuation of excepted articles above the statutory limit, the claimant gets the true value; ibe declaration does not help him. In cases of under-valuation of excepted articles above the statutory limit, a limited disability is imposed by S. 75 (2), viz., that the claimant can only recover up to the declared amount. In the latter case, his claim for the difference between the declared value and the true value is only negatived, but the whole of his claim is not disallowed.

[12] For the above reasons, we disagree with the view taken by Lodge J., and approve of the opinion expressed by Chakravartti J.

[13] We, therefore, overrule the contention urged on behalf of the petitioner.

Gostha Behari Dutt-Petitioner v. (Dead)
Palaram Pal and others-Opposite Party.

Civil Revn. Nos. 1747 and 1913 of 1946, Decided on 7th December 1948, from order of Sub-Judge, Bankura, D/- 24th August 1948.

(a) Debt laws — Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act (VII [7] of 1936), Ss. 8 and 33—Reference to certain debt not made in the body of petition deliberately — Reference made only in column reserved for history of debt— Debt is not included in application and not cove red in award subsequently made — S. 33 does not apply.

Where an applicant under S. 8 makes no reference to certain debt in the body of the petition at all but makes an indirect reference to it in the column reserved for the history of the debt, the object of so framing the petition being not to exceed Rs. 25,000 as the total amount of the mortgagor's debts, the mortgagor deliberately omits to ask for an adjudication on that debt and he is not entitled to say that his application included that debt or that the debt was covered by the award which came subsequently to be made. There was therefore no amount payable with regard to it under the award and it must follow that neither of cls. (a) and (b) of S. 33 applies. [Para 15]

(b) Debt laws—Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act (VII [7] of 1936), Ss. 8 and 18 and Rr. 145, 146, 147 and 148 — Pecuniary jurisdiction — Test is amount of creditor's claim and not amount admitted by debtor or determined by Board.

Both the Form prescribed for an application under S. 8 and the Rules framed under the Act make it perfectly clear that the amount which must furnish the test as to whether the Board has pecuniary jurisdiction or not is the amount of the claim of the creditor and not the amount admitted by the debtor, or determined by the Board, at least in a case where the amounts mentioned by the debtor themselves make up a total in excess of Rs. 25,000. [Para 17]

(c) Debt laws—Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act (VII [7] of 1936), S. 39 — Territorial jurisdiction — Power to transfer — Collector has no power to transfer case to Board having no territonal jurisdiction over parties in absence of specific rule.

It will be noticed from the reading of S. 39 that the Act by itself does not give the Collector any power to transfer. It leaves it to the Provincial Government to authorise the Collector and such authorisation must be subject to rules made under this Act. It is not the power of transfer which is so restricted, but the power of authorisation given to the Provincial Government. Section 39 read with the Rules makes it perfectly clear that the limits of the Collector's power to make an order to transfer must be found within the Rules framed by the Provincial Government. In other words, the Collector will have power to make an order of transfer only in those cases where he has been authorised by the Rules to do so.

(d) Debt laws—Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act (VII [7] of 1936), S. 33 (a)—Question as to validity of award arising before Judge sitting as civil Court — Award found void — Proceedings before Board cannot be held to be pending: — Proceedings in civil Court cannot be stayed.

Where question as to the validity of an award arises before a Judge not sitting either as an appellate officer or in revision in proceeding under the Act but only as a civil. Court in a different chain altogether, and he finds that the award is without jurisdiction and void, he is not right in holding that in a view of his decision as to the validity of the award, the proceedings before the Debt Settlement Board must be deemed to be pending, and direct stay of suit in that view.: [Para 21]

Chakravartti J. — These are two Rules directed against the same order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge, Bankura, on 23rd August 1946, whereby he stayed further proceedings in a mortgage suit, purporting to act under

s. 33 (a), Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act. The learned Judge has held that the award pleaded by the mortgagor as a bar to the suit was without jurisdiction and void. But he has also held that if the award was void, the proceedings before the Board were in the eye of law still pending and consequently the mortgage suit was liable to be stayed under the provisions of S. 33.

[2] Rule 1747 of 1946 was taken out by the mortgagee and his complaint is that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge that the suit must be stayed is erroneous.

[3] Rule 1913 of 1946 was taken out by the mortgagor and he challenges the decision of the learned Judge that the award was without jurisdiction and void.

[4] In order to appreciate the respective contentions of the parties, it is necessary to refer to the facts in some detail. It appears that the transactions between the parties were numerous and of a complicated character. The first transaction was on 6th August 1920, when the mortgagor took a loan of Rs. 4999 from the mortgagee upon an earlier mortgage. On 14th April 1930, the mortgagor executed a simple money bond for a sum of Rs. 5182-10-6 pies which is said to have represented the resultant liability arising out of a number of previous loans. On 19th June 1933, the mortgagor executed an instalment mortgage bond for a sum of Rs. 19,700. This sum is said to have represented the amount due upon two previous bonds, as also a certain further amount as future interest. The bond provided that the amount would be payable in a number of instalments, but in case of default in the payment of any one of the instalments, interest at a certain rate would have to be paid and if there were three successive defaults, the whole amount would become due, On 19th December 1939, the mortgagor made an application under S. 8, Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act to the special Debt Settlement Board at Bankura. In columns 6 of that application, he mentioned only two debts owing to the present mortgages. One was the debt of Rs. 4,999 which was the consideration for the first mortgage and the other was a debt of Rs. 1,999 which was one of the debts taken into consideration in arriving at the amount of the second bond. The bond of 1933 was not mentioned in column 6. What the mortgagor in fact did was that he inserted a long and somewhat rambling statement in Schedule B of the application wherein he stated that the mortgage bond for Rs. 19,700 was taken from him by undue influence and fraud and that as a matter of fact no such amount was due from him to the mortgagee. There appears to have been some controversy before the Special Debt Settlement Board as to what the amount of the debt was and the Board ultimately came to an informal decision that the amount was Rs. 7,329 1.0. Upon that finding the Board asked for the sanction of the Collector which in due course was granted.

[5] An application was thereafter made to the Sub-Divisional Officer by the mortgagor for the transfer of the case from the Bankura Special Debt Settlement Board to the ordinary Board at Midnapore in Bankura. It is not disputed that neither of the parties resided within the jurisdiction of that Board, but the application was made on the ground that the President of the Board which had territorial jurisdiction in the case was related to the mortgagee and, therefore, the case could not properly be transferred to that Board. The application succeeded and the Sub-Divisional Officer made the necessary order, transferring the case to the ordinary Board at Midnapore. The Board at Midnapore eventually entered upon an adjudication of the liabilities of the mortgagor and eventually decided that the amount due from him to the present mortgagee was Rs. 3,000. An award embodying that decision of the Board followed in due course.

[6] The mortgages preferred an appeal from the decision of the Board to the appellate officer, but the appeal was rejected as barred by limitation. An application in revision to the District Judge also failed and a further application to this Court met with the same result. So far as this Court was concerned, it was only stated in the judgment that the learned Judges saw no reason to interfere in revision with the decision of the authorities below.

[7] The present suit was thereafter brought by the mortgagee, claiming to recover a sum of Rs. 23,476.0.6 pies upon an instalment mortgage bond of 12th June 1933. In the plaint he made a reference to the proceedings before the Debt Settlement Board and stated that the mortgagor had deliberately and fraudulently omitted to mention the debt of 1933 in his application to the Board and thereby contrived to procure an adjudication under the Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act. The plaint was subsequently amended and an allegation that the Board at Midnapore had no territorial jurisdiction to deal with the case at all was added.

[8] The mortgagee put forward three grounds as to why the so called award under the Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act could not affect his suit. It was contended in the first place that inasmuch as the mortgagor had not mentioned the debt of 1983 at all, the award did not purport to deal with that debt and consequently the existence of the award was no bar to the suit being dealt with by the civil Court. It was contended in the second place that inasmuch as the mortgagor had denied all liability to his creditors, the application to the Board was not maintainable at all. It was contended lastly that, in any event the total amount of the debts owing by the mortgagor having been in excess of Rs. 25,000 no Debt Settlement Board could deal with his debts and that, in particular, the Board at Midnapore had no territorial jurisdiction.

[9] The learned Subordinate Judge held that the debt of 1933 bad in fact been mentioned in the mortgagor's application to the Board, inasmuch as he had mentioned the earlier debts, the dues upon which really formed the consideration for the bond of 1933. The award, in the view of the learned Judge, did purport to deal with the debt of 1933 as well. The learned Judge held further that the mortgagor had not denied any liability to any creditor but had admitted some of his debts. Consequently, the learned Judge proceeded to observe the application before the Board was not an application by a debtor who did not admit any liability to any creditor and, therefore, it was in order. The learned Judge, however, gave effect to the third objection of the mortgagee which, as already stated, was to the effect that the Board at Midnapore had no territorial jurisdiction to deal with the case. In the opinion of the learned Judge, the power of transfer conferred by S. 39 of the Act was, subject to the rules made in that behalf and under the section, read with the rules the Collector could only transfer a case to a Board having territorial jurisdiction. Inasmuch as the Midnapore Board had admittedly no territorial jurisdiction, the learned Judge concluded that the award made by it was without jurisdiction and void.

Judge proceeded to hold that his finding that the award was without jurisdiction and void would not avoid the mortgagor's objection to his proceeding with the suit, inasmuch as the award being out of the way, the proceeding before the Debt Settlement Board must be held to be still pending. In that view he held that although cl. (b) of s. 33 had no application to the facts of the case before him, cl. (a) had, and by reason of the provisions of that clause he felt himself bound to direct stay of the suit. It is against that decision that the present rules were obtained.

Judge was right in his view that S. 33 (a), Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act applied to the case, the proper course for him would have been not to stay the suit, as he did, but either to dismiss it or to return the plaint. That, however, is another matter.

[12] In support of the rule taken out by the mortgagee, it was contended by Mr. Gupta that the award did not affect the suit at all, inasmuch as the mortgagor had not included the mortgage debt of 1933 in his application and consequently there was no award with respect to that debt. He contended in the alternative that assuming that the award covered that debt as well, it must follow that the mortgagor's application included the debt and if it did, the total amount of debts owing by the mortgagor would clearly exceed Rs. 25,000 and consequently the case would be one beyond the jurisdiction of any Debt Settlement Board. Mr. Gupta further contended that the conclusion of the learned Judge that the Midnapore Board had no territorial jurisdiction to deal with the case was well founded, but he complained that the learned Judge should have held that in spite of the award being invalid, the suit was liable to be stayed, in the view that the proceedings before the Debt Settlement Board must be deemed to be pending.

[13] Dr. Sen Gupta, appearing on behalf of the mortgagor, contended that the power of transfer given by S. 39 of the Act was absolute in so far as such power had not been specifically restricted by Rules. He pointed out that there was no Rule which prevented the Collector from transferring a case to a Board having no territorial jurisdiction over the properties and accordingly contended that the decision of the learned Judge on this part of the case was erroneous.

place that the Board had pecuniary jurisdiction in the present case inasmuch as the Board had found informally, as it was entitled to do, that the amount of the mortgagor's debt was below Rs 25,000 under the proviso to R. 145. Dr. Sen Gupta contended further that there had been no suppression of the debt of 1933, reference to which had been clearly made in the history of the debt. His argument was that inasmuch as the mortgagor had referred to the basic debts and inasmuch as the consideration for the bond of 1933 was nothing else than the amount due upon those earlier debts the debt of 1933 had been mentioned, both in substance and in fact.

behalf of the mortgagee is clearly right. It cannot be pretended that the relevant columns in the mortgagee's application before the Debt Settlement Board contain any entry as regards the debt of 1933. On the other hand, the statement made by him in the column reserved for the history of debts, makes it perfectly clear that he did not wish the debt of 1933 to be taken into account at all, inasmuch as in his view the bond did not represent any real liability and had been obtained by undue influence and duress. The object of framing the application in that form is, to my mind, perfectly clear. If the debt of

Rs. 19,700 had been included in a straightforward manner in column 6 of the application where it ought to have been included, the total amount of the mortgagor's debts would obviously exceed Rs. 25,000 and the mortgagor could not possibly get what perhaps he expected, viz., a friendly adjudication by the Debt Settlement Board. The device he adopted was to make no reference to that debt in the body of the petition at all but to make an indirect reference to it in the column reserved for the history of the debt. I am of opinion that since the mortgagor deliberately omitted to ask for an adjudication on this debt and relegated whatever reference he made to it to Sch. B, he is not entitled to say that his application included this debt, or that the debt is covered by the award which came subsequently to be made. If that be so, the debt was not included in his application made under S. 8 of the Act, nor was any amount payable with regard to it under the award and it must follow that neither of the two clauses of S. 33 applies.

[16] I am also of opinion that the alternative argument of Mr. Gupta is equally sound. As. suming as the learned Judge found and as Dr. Sen Gupta contended, that the award does cover the debt of 1938, it must follow that the application included that debt. If it did, I am of opinion that the total amount of the debts owing by the mortgagor for the purposes of the jurisdiction of the Board would be clearly on the face of his own application, above Rs. 25,000 and the Board in dealing with the mortgagor's application acted without jurisdiction. It was contended by Dr. Sen Gupta that what is material for the purposes of jurisdiction was not the claim by the creditor, but the decision of the Board, although it might be an informal decision as to the amount of the debt. The learned Judge below has followed the same line of reasoning more or less, because he observes at more places than one in his judgment that the debt informally determined by the Bankura Special Debt Settlement Board fell below Rs. 25,000 and that accordingly no question of pecuniary jurisdiction would arise. In my opinion, this view of the rules is clearly wrong. Dr. Sen Gupta referred to the terms of Rr. 144 and 145 and contended that the latter of them made it perfectly clear that the Board had jurisdiction to decide by way of a preliminary point the amount of the debt due, on the principles of S. 18 and that, in a case of doubt or dispute, it was its duty to do so. It was the result of this informal determination which, according to Dr. Sen Gupta, would determine the jurisdiction of the Board. In my opinion, what R. 145 contemplates is not a determination of the debt actually due but a decision on a contest as regards what the amount of a claim actually is. The matter, in my view, is placed beyond doubt by the form which has been prescribed for applications under S. 8. Column 8 of that form is headed "Total claim by the creditor." Column 9 is headed "Amount, if any, admitted by the debtor." There is no other column. It is perfectly clear that when an application is made and the Board has to decide whether it has jurisdiction or not, having regard to the amount of the debt, the only amount which can furnish the necessary test is the amount claimed by the creditor. It is quite true that the Board may untimately find the actual amount due to be much lower, but that decision it would arrive at in the course of the settlement and I fail to understand how a decision on that matter can be undertaken for the purpose of deciding whether the Board has or has not jurisdiction. It is elementary that the jurisdiction of the Tribunal is determined by the allegations contained in the plaint, or in other words by the claim made. If that very matter is decided in advance for the purpose of ascertaining whether the Tribunal has jurisdiction or not, the position would be that the Tribunal concerned assumes jurisdiction after deciding the main question on the merits.

[17] Referring to the Rules, the relevant Rules in the present case are in my view, Rr. 146 and 147. Rule 148 provides that if the sum total of all debts mentioned by the debtor in his application exceeds Rs. 5000 but does not exceed Rs. 25,000 the Board shall forward the application to the Collector for his sanction. It would be noticed that what the Rule contemplates is debts "mentioned" by the debtor. Sub-rule (2) of the Rule provides that if the amount so mentioned by the debtor exceeds Rs. 25,000 the Board shall not entertain the application. Again what the subrule contemplates is the amount "mentioned" by the debtor. In neither case is it the amount admitted by the debtor or the amount found by the Board as due, whether formally or informally. Rule 147 provides for cases other than those mentioned in R. 146, that is to say, cases where the amount mentioned by the debtor exceeds Rs. 5000 but does not exceed Rs. 25,000. There is another Rule which seems to exclude altogether the view put forward by Dr. Sen Gupta. That Rule is R. 148 which provides that if, in the case where the sum total of all the debts exceeds Rs. 5000 but does not exceed Rs. 25,000 the Collector grants sanction, the Board shall, subject to R. 189, record the order of determination with regard to each debt under sub-s. (2) of s. 18 and shall then proceed to dispose of the application according to law. This Rule makes it perfectly clear that determination under S. 18 must take place after the Collector has granted sanction and cannot precede it. I am of opinion that both the form prescribed for an application under S. 8 and the Rules framed under the Act make it perfectly clear that the amount which must furnish the test as to whether the Board has pecuniary jurisdiction or not is the amount of the claim of the creditor and not the amount admitted by the debtor, or determined by the Board, at least in a case where the amounts mentioned by the debtor themselves make up a total in excess of Rs. 25,000.

[18] If then the application in the present case included the debt of Rs. 19,700, there can be no doubt that the total amount of the debts exceeded Rs. 25,000 and it must follow that the Board had no jurisdiction whatever to deal with the mortgagor's application. If the award is not invalid for the reason that the Board had no territorial jurisdiction, it is certainly invalid for the reason that the debt exceeded the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Board. The award, therefore, has no legal existence and cannot be a bar to the entertainment of the suit by the learned Judge.

[19] As regards the territorial jurisdiction, Dr. Sen Gupta contended that there were no limitations on the powers of the Collector to transfer a case save those prescribed by the Rules and he pointed out that the Rules did not prevent the Collector from transferring a case to a Board which had no territorial jurisdiction over the parties. In my view, this construction of S. 39 is not correct. The section reads as follows:

The Provincial Government may authorize the Collector subject to rules made under this Act, to transfer from one Board to another, for disposal, applications made under S. 8."

[20] It will be noticed that the Act by itself does not give the Collector any power of transfer. It leaves it to the Provincial Government to authorise the Collector and such authorisation must be subject to rules made under this Act. It is not the power of transfer which is so restricted, but the power of authorisation given to the Provincial Government. This section, read with the Rules, seems to me to make it perfectly clear that the limits of the Collector's power to make an order of transfer must be found within the Rules framed by the Provincial Government. In other words, the Collector will have power to make an order of transfer only in those cases where he has been authorised by the Rules to do so; that is to say only if there is any specific Rule authorising the Collector to make a transfer to a Board which has no territorial jurisdiction over the parties, the Collector has such power. In my opinion, the view taken by the learned Judge as to the absence of territorial jurisdiction in the Midnapore Board is perfectly correct and the award is void for that reason as well.

[21] The learned Judge, however, was not right, in holding that if the award was without juris. diction and void, the proceedings before the Debt Settlement Board must be deemed to be still pending. He seems to me to have overlooked the fact that he was not sitting either as an appellate officer or as a District Judge in revision but only as a civil Court. Whatever his view as to the validity of the award might be, the award would remain as the final decision in the proceedings under the Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act till it was set aside by an appropriate authority. The learned Judge, sitting as a civil Court could not set aside the award, nor could any declaration made by him extinguish it. For example, neither of the parties could, on the authority of the view taken by the learned Judge, approach the officer now discharging the functions of the Board and ask him to resume the proceedings under the Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act on the footing that they are still pending. If the matter had come up to a District Judge under S. 40A of the Act, or come up to this Court in revision and it was held that the award was void, the effect would certainly be to restore the case to the stage at which it was before the award was made and the proceeding would have to be completed in due course by a final decision. But the question having arisen before the civil Court in a different chain altogether, the civil Court might disregard an award if it found that it was without jurisdiction, but it could mould its own procedure in the view that its decision would have an actual effect on the proceedings before the Board and revive a proceeding which had already terminated in an award. The learned Judge, in my view, was bound to take the procesding under the Board as it was and he was not right in law in holding that in view of his decision as to the validity of the award, the proceeding before the Debt Settlement Board must be deemed to be pending.

[22] The position, therefore, is that the award pleaded by the mortgagor is an invalid award both because the Board had no territorial or pecuniary jurisdiction to deal with the case and also, as we hold, because the debt which is the subject-matter of the mortgage suit was not included in the mortgagor's application and was not in fact dealt with by the award. The result, therefore, is that neither of the clauses of s. 33 has any application and there is no bar to the learned Judge proceeding with the suit.

[23] We desire to make it clear that the effect of the view we take of the award is that the debt concerned is not covered by any valid award under the Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act and therefore there will be no bar to the learned Judge exercising his powers under the Bengal Money.

lenders Act, should that Act be otherwise applicable.

[24] In the result, Civil Rule No. 1747 of 1946 is made absolute. The order of the learned Judge and so much of his judgment as is not upheld by this judgment are set aside and he is directed to proceed with the suit.

[25] Civil Rule No. 1913 of 1946 is discharged. [26] The petitioner in Rule 1747 of 1946 will get his costs from the opposite party—the hearing fee being assessed at three gold mohurs. There will be no order as to costs in Rule 1913 of 1946.

Civil P.C. (1908), O. 6, R. 17—Suit for contravention of municipal rule regarding side space — Amendment seeking to add infringement of different rule regarding back space, adds new cause of action and cannot be allowed.

In a suit against the defendant for contravention of a municipal rule regarding side space, an application to amend the plaint into an infringement of quite a different rule relating to the back space also, cannot be allowed, as it would introduce an entirely new cause of action. If the infringement of the back space rule is alleged to be subsequent to the filing of the suit, the case for amendment becomes still less maintainable, as it would be allowing the plaintiff to introduce a fresh and independent cause of action in a suit which was instituted at a time when the infringement subsequently alleged did not exist.

Order. — This rule must be made absolute. The rule was obtained by the defendant against an order allowing the plaintiffs to amend their plaint. Put shortly the facts are these. The plaintiffs instituted a suit against the defendants on 1st February 1947 for contravention of the dant petitioner erected a building on his premises in contravention of the rule regarding side space. The rule then in existence provided that there should be a three feet side space. In 1937 the rule was amended and it prescribed a four feet wide space. Before the new rule had been introduced the defendant had obtained sanction of the Tollygunge Municipality and had erected the first storey of his building in accordance with those rules. In 1916, the defendant erected a second storey in accordance with the old plan which had provided for two storied building and had practically finished construction when the present suit was instituted against the defendant by the plaintiffs alleging a breach of the rule regarding side space. There was an application for injunction by the plaintiffs which was granted and subsequently dissolved on the defendant undertaking to remove any structure if it were found in the suit that it contravened the provisions regarding side space. In November 1947 for the first time the plaintiffs applied for an amendment of their plaint. They alleged that not only had the side space rule been infringed but that the defendant had also infringed the rule regarding back space and they wished to amend their plaint by adding that the defendant had infringed the rule regarding back space. The defendant opposed this amendment on the footing that it introduced an entirely new cause of action. The learned Munsif negatived the contention of the defendant and allowed the amendment. Against that order the present rule has been obtained.

[3] It seems quite clear to me that the allowing of this amendment would introduce an entirely new cause of action. The suit was based on the infringement of a particular rule regarding side space. The plaintiffs cannot be allowed at this late stage to make out an additional and independant case of an infringement of quite a different rule which relates to the back space. The learned advocate appearing in opposition to the rule stated that at the time of the suit back space rule had not been infringed but that subsequent to the filing of the suit a permanent structure was erected on the back space. If that be so, it seems to me that the case of the plaintiffs for an amendment becomes still less maintain. able. The suit was based on a certain cause of action. If a fresh cause of action has arisen after the institution of the suit, the plaintiffs may very well institute another suit on this cause of action. I see no reason why they should be allowed to introduce a fresh and independent cause of action in a suit which they instituted at a time when the infringement subsequently alleged did not exist.

[4] In these circumstances I set aside the order of the learned Munsif and disallow the amendment with costs here and in the Court below against opposite parties Nos. 1 to 4 represented by Mr. Hemanta Kumar Bose. The rule is made absolute.

(a) Bengal Cotton Cloth and Yarn Control Order (1945), para. 18 (2)— Possession by person of cloth in excess of his normal requirement — Term "normal requirement" is vague — There must be something to show what normal requirements of accused and his family were at the time.

For a prosecution under para. 18 (2), for possessing cloth in excess of normal requirements, unless some kind of standard is fixed by the order or the Rules thereunder, it cannot be said that the accused were in possession of cloth in excess of their normal requirement. The term 'normal requirements' without further specification is a vague term. What may appear normal to some, may seem abnormal to another. In the absence of anything to show what the normal requirements of the accused and his family at the time were, his conviction cannot stand: A. I. R. (35) 1948 Cal. 78, Rel. on.

(b) Bengal Cotton Cloth and Yarn Control Order (1945) — Prosecution — Sanction of Provincial Government must be obtained — Prosecution for contravening provision of Order of 1945, cannot be started upon sanction for prosecution for contravening provision of Order of 1943, though provisions alleged to have been contravened are identical — Order sanctioning prosecution not showing offence for which sanction was given — Sanction is of no value — Criminal P. C. (1898), Ss. 196 and 188.

A prosecution for a contravention of any provision of the Cotton Cloth and Yarn Control Order 1945, requires the sanction of the Provincial Government. Sanction for prosecution for the contravention of the provisions of order of 1943 cannot be held to be a sanction for the prosecution for the disobedience of the order of 1945 which was not in force when the sanction was given, even though the terms of the corresponding paragraph of the Order of 1943 were identical. The sanction must be given with respect to the contravention for which the accused are being tried. [Para 5]

Similarly where on the face of the order sanctioning prosecution there is nothing to show for what offence the prosecution was sanctioned and there is no evidence given to show what the sanction was about, the sanction is of no value: A. I. R. (35) 1948 P. C. 82, Rel. on. [Para 6]

There can be no doubt that blackmarketing and similar anti-social activities should be punished. But the fundamental principle of criminal law that the prosecution must prove its case 'strictissimi juris' must be observed.

Ajit Kumar Dutt and N. C. Talukdar - for Petitioners.

Order. — The two petitioners have been convicted under: R. 81 (4), Defence of India Rules, for having contravened the provisions of para. 18 (1) and (2), Cotton Cloth and Yarn Control Order, 1945 and each of them was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 80 in default to suffer rigorous imprisonment for two months. From this order of conviction and sentence an appeal was taken to the Sessions Judge who dismissed the appeal. Thereafter they obtained the present Rule.

[2] The facts are very simple. The case for the prosecution is that these two persons were walking along the embankment of the Hooghly river when they were challenged by the local people. It was at about 9 O'clock at night. Each of the petitioners had a bag and in the bag of the petitioner Khan Mahammad were found 9 pieces of mill-made dhoties and 3 yards of millmade shirting and in the bag of the petitioner Sk. Amanat were found 6 mill made saris and 4 pieces of mill-made dhoties. The Preventive Officer lodged a first information charging the petitioners with having contravened the provisions of Para. 4, Bengal Cotton Cloth and Yarn Control Order, 1945. The petitioners were tried for that offence. After some time that case was withdrawn as it was found that para. 4 had no application to the facts of the case because it dealt with the purchase, sale or storage of cloth without a licence or in contravention of the terms of a licence.

[3] About two months after the two petitioners were again sent up for trial on the same facts this time for having contravened the provisions of para. 18 (2), Cotton Cloth and Yarn Control Order 1945. That paragraph is in the following terms:

"No dealer or other person not being a manufacturer shall, save with the permission of the Textile Commissioner, at any time hold stocks of cloth or yarn in excess of his normal requirements."

It has been held by the Court below that the petitioners were holding cloth in excess of their normal requirements without permission of the Textile Commissioner and on this basis they were convicted.

[4] On behalf of the petitioners, the first contention raised is that it cannot be said that the petitioners were in possession of cloth in excess of their normal requirements unless some kind of standard is fixed by the Order or the Rules thereunder. I entirely agree with this view. I have expressed the same opinion in the case of Prag Das Lakhutia and others v. Emperor, 49 Cr. L. J. 31 : (A. I. R. (35) 1948 Cal. 78). The term 'normal requirements' without further specification is a vague term. What may appear normal to some may seem abnormal to another. Both the petitioners have families. We do not know how much wearing apparel the family possessed. It may be that all the wearing apparel had been exhausted and that these were the only wearing apparel which would be available to them. That being so, I cannot see how the Court can hold that they were in possession of cloth in excess of their normal requirements. On this ground the order of conviction and sentences is liable to be set aside.

[5] There are some other grounds which would in my opinion render the conviction illegal. A prosecution for a contravention of any provision of the Cotton Cloth and Yarn Control Order 1945, requires the sanction of the Provincial Government. In the present case, no sanction was granted for the prosecution of the petitioners for having contravened any of the provisions of the aforesaid Cotton Cloth and Yarn Control Order. 1945. Sanction was obtained for contravening the provisions of the Cotton Cloth and Yarn Control Order, 1943. Now, that Order was not in force at the time that this offence was committed and the sanction for prosecution for the contravention of the provisions of that Order cannot be held to be a sanction for the prosecution for the disobedience of the Order of 1945. The learned Courts below say that the terms of the paragraph under which the prosecution is held under the Order of 1945 and the terms of the corresponding paragraph of the Order of 1943 are identical and therefore they consider that the sanction obtained for a prosecution under the Order of 1943 can be taken to be a sanction for the prosecution for the contravention of the provisions of the Order of 1945. This argument is obviously fallacious. The sanction must be given with respect to the contravention for which the petitioners were being tried. They were being tried for a contravention of the provisions of 1945 Order and unless the sanction was, such prosecution could not be a valid one. The sanction for prosecution for a contravention of the provisions of the Cotton Cloth and Yarn Control Order 1943, is not sanction for the present prosecution. It must therefore be held that there was no valid sanction for this prosecution and that being so, the entire proceedings are without jurisdiction.

[6] Next, the learned Advocate for the petitioners pointed out that all that has been proved in this case is that an entry on a piece of paper to this effect "Prosecution sanctioned"; signed (illegible) District Magistrate. The report submitted to the District Magistrate for the obtaining of the sanction has not been proved; nor has any one been examined to prove what the sanction related to. On the face of the order 'Prooution sanctioned" there is nothing to show for what offence the prosecution was sanctioned and there is no evidence given to show what the sanction was about. In such a case the sanction is also of no value. In this connection I would refer to the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Gokulchand Dwarkadas Morarka v. The King, 52 C. W. N. 825: (A. I. R. (85) 1948 P. C. 82 : 49 Cr. L. J. 261).

[7] For all these reasons I hold that the orders of conviction and sentences must be set aside. The fines, if paid, must be refunded. The accused, if in custody, must be released forthwith. The rule is made absolute.

[8] In this connection I would repeat what I have said in a previous case regarding a similar matter. The practice seems to prevail in the Courts below of dealing with all irregularities and illegalities in prosecution of cases in connection with blackmarketing or contravention of Orders regarding cloth control with great laxity. There can be no doubt that blackmarketing and similar anti-social activities should be punished. But the fundamental principle of criminal law that the prosecution must prove its case 'strictis simi juris' must be observed. The conviction in this haphazard manner helps nobody and indeed may lead to sympathy for persons engaged in blackmarketing and similar illegal transactions.

A. F. A. D. No. 1304 of 1945, Decided on 30th June 1949, against decree of Sub-Judge, first Court, Zillah Hocghly, D/- 28th February 1945.

(a) Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (1887), Sch. II, Art. 35 (ii)—Tenant cutting and appropriating trees planted by his predecessor — Suit by landlord for compensation alleging tenant entitled only to fruits of trees — Tenant claiming right to cut trees under law — Suit held cognizable by Small Cause Court.

The right of a landlord and a tenant in respect of trees is very often a disputed right depending in some cases upon statutory provisions and in others upon custom or otherwise. A criminal case for theft or mischlef or misappropriation can easily be defeated by defendant urging that he had a right to cut the trees or that he bona fids believed that he was entitled to cut the trees. In such a case a suit for compensation would not be excluded from the cognizance of the Small Cause Court under Sch. II, Art. 35 (ii): A. I. R. (10) 1923 Cal. 568; A. I. R. (15) 1928 Cal. 153; A. I. R. (17) 1930 Pat. 575 and A. I. R. (15) 1928 Cal. 946, Ref.

A suit was brought by landlord against tenant for compensation for cutting and appropriating trees on the ground that the tenant was a non-permanent theka tenant who had only the right to enjoy the fruits of trees. The trees were found to have been planted by the tenant's predecessor. The tenant claimed that he had a right to cut the trees under the law:

Held that the suit was not excepted from the cognizance of the Small Cause Court under Sch. II, Art. 85 (ii).

Judgment .- This appeal is on behalf of the plaintiff in a suit for recovery of Rs. 25 as compensation for cutting away and appropriating a mango tree by the defendant. The plaintiff's case is that the defendant is a non-permanent thika tenant who has only the right to enjoy the fruits of trees that may be on the land but she has no right to cut away any trees even those grown by her. The defendant had removed a mango tree and the plaintiff had accordingly filed this suit for the recovery of Rs. 25 as compensation.

[2] The defendant admits that she had cut and appropriated the mango tree planted by her predecessor.in-interest and she contends that she has a right to do so under the law.

- (3) The plaintiff's witness baving admitted that the defendant and her predecessors had been in possession of the disputed land for over 100 years, the mango tree in question was held by the learned Munsiff, to have been planted by the defendant's predecessor—a case as made by the defendant. The particular land is now situate within the municipal area in the town of Serampore and is used as a homestead and garden. The learned Munsif held that the tenancy was governed by the Transfer of Property Act, the defendant had the right to cut away and appropriate the tree. The suit was accordingly dismissed.
- [4] An appeal was taken on behalf of the plaintiff to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Hooghly. He held that under Art. 35, cl. (ii) of Sch. II, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, this being a suit for damages for trees cut down and misappropriated, and even though involving a question of title to immoveable property, was cognisable by a Court of Small Causes. The learned Munsif who heard the suit was vested with the power to hear cases as a Judge of the Court of Small Causes upto a valuation of Rs. 300. Even though this suit was registered and heard as a money suit no appeal would lie against that decision.
- [5] The learned Subordinate Judge further held, on the merits, that the plaintiff cannot be allowed to make a new case for the first time that the tenancy having been created more than 100 years ago, was not governed by the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act but by the general law in vogue before the promulgation of the Transfer of Property Act. The learned Subordinate Judge held that that case, not having been made in the plaint, cannot be allowed to be made now. He accepted the evidence on behalf of the defendants that the particular tree had been planted 22 years ago although the plaintiff had alleged in the plaint that that tree had been planted by his predecessor-in-interest. The plaintiff's case, as in the plaint, was rejected. The Court, further, held that the defendant had not done any act of damage by taking away a tree grown by her mother-in-law. The appeal was accordingly dismissed.

[6] The first point which requires consideration is whether any appeal lay to the Court of the Subordinate Judge against the order of dismissal of the suit passed by the learned Munsif. The value of the claim was put at Rs. 25 only. The Munsif who heard the suit had jurisdiction to try suits of a Small Cause Court nature and of the value of the claim. The suit was tried by the Munsif in his ordinary jurisdiction. That fact, however, did not take away the prohibition of an appeal contained in the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. Mohini Mohan v. Sankardas Mohanta, 39 C. L. J. 532: (A. I. R. (11) 1924 cal. 487). Unless the plaintiff can invoke the provisions of Art. 35, cl. (ii) of Sch. II, Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, it must be held that no appeal lay against the decision of the Munsif. It is argued on behalf of the appellant that the allegations as made in the plaint constitute an offence of mischief within the meaning of S. 426 which falls under Chap. XVII, Penal Code. It has, however, been repeatedly pointed out that when there is a dispute between a landlord and a tenant with regard to the question as to whom the right to the trees or the right to the timber when the trees are felled, belongs is often a question of considerable difficulty. The right of a landlord and a tenant in respect of trees is very often a disputed right depending in some cases upon statutory provisions and in others upon custom or otherwise. A criminal case, either for mischief or misappropriation or for theft, would easily be defeated by the defendant urging that he had a right to appropriate the trees, as also the timber after felling them, and in the written statement as filed in this case that defence was actually raised. The tenant in such a case can very well plead that he bona fide believed that he was entitled to cut the trees and if under such bona fide belief he had felled the trees and removed the timber the provisions contained in Chap. XVII, Penal Code, cannot at all be attracted. Such a suit is one which is not excluded from the cognisance of the Court of Small Causes, (Dildar Hossain v. Sadaruddin Chowdhury, 27 C. W. N. 469 : (A. I. R. (10) 1923 Cal. 568), Radhaballav Guha v. Panchcowri Seal, 46 C. L. J. 552: (A. I. R. (15) 1928 Cal. 153), Damodar Jha v. Baldeo Prosad, 9 Pat. 569: (A. I. R. (17) 1930 Pat. 575) and Ram Prosad v. Sri Charn Mondal, 27 C. L. J. 594. (A. I. R. (5) 1918 Cal. 946).) In my view, therefore, the learned Subordinate Judge was correct in holding that no appeal lay before him against the decision by the learned Munsif.

[7] It is to be noted that in the present suit the defendant is admitted to be a tenant of the plaintiff, the land is in the possession of the defendant, and the finding is that the tree in question was planted about 20 years ago by the mother-in-law of the defendant. The position might have been different if the claim was for damages for cutting of trees, standing on the plaintiff's land, without any legal justification. Such a case of a wrongful cutting of trees, for which damages are claimed, amounts to an act of mischief or criminal trespass as defined in the Penal Code, (Commrs. of Pabna Municipality v. Nirode Sundari, 46 C. W. N. 943: (A. I. R. (29) 1942 Cal. 544)).

(8) In view of the fact that no appeal lay to the Court of the Subordinate Judge it must be held that the appeal preferred before the Subordinate Judge was rightly dismissed. There is no second appeal either against the decision and this appeal must accordingly be dismissed with costs.

Boto Krishna Ghose — Defendant No. 1— Appellant v. Akhoy Kumar Ghose and others —Respondents.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 13 of 1946, Decided on 9th September 1949, against judgment of Chakravartti J., in A. F. A. D. No. 1302 of 1942, D/- 13th February 1946.

(a) Partition Act (1893), S. 4—Share in dwelling house belonging to undivided family — Meaning of —Undivided family means family which owns dwelling house and has not divided it — Transfer of share by member to stranger — House does not cease to be one belonging to undivided family — T. P. Act (1882), S. 44.

The expression "share of a dwelling house belonging to an undivided family" is used in para. 2 of S. 44, T. P. Act, and seems to have been adopted from there into S. 4, Partition Act, which takes up the law from where the former section leaves it. The expression, therefore, has the same meaning in the two enactments.

"Undivided family" means simply a family not divided qua the dwelling house, in other words, a family which owns a dwelling house and has not divided it. It does not mean Hindu joint family or even joint family. The members need not be joint in mess. The essence of the matter is that the house itself should be undivided amongst the members of the family who are its owners. The emphasis is really on the undivided character of the house, and it is this attribute of the house which imparts to the family its character of an undivided family. For the members of the family may have partitioned all their other joint properties and may have separated in mess and worship, but they would still be an undivided family in relation to the dwelling house so long as they have not divided it amongst themselves: A I R (21) 1934 Cal. 202, Rel. on.

[Para 12] Where a member of the family transfers his share in the dwelling house to a stranger, the position that arises is that the second para. of S. 44, T. P. Act, comes into operation and the transferee does not become entitled to joint possession or other common or part enjoyment of the house, although he would have the right to enforce a partition of his share. The factual position then is that it is still an undivided dwelling house the possession and enjoyment of which are confined to the members of the family, stranger transferee being debarred by law from exercising his right to joint possession which is one of the main incidents of coownership of property. Such a dwelling house can still be looked upon as a dwelling house belonging to an undivided family, because the members of the family have not divided it amongst themselves and are in sole enjoyment and possession of it to the exclusion of the stranger transferee who has only a right to partition. And so long as the dwelling house has not been completely alienated to strangers, successive transfers by other co-sharer members of the family do not alter the factual position in this respect, because the remaining member or members of the family have the right to hold exclusive possession to the exclusion of the stranger allenees. So long as that situation lasts, the dwelling house continues to be a dwelling house belonging to an undivided family : 23 Bom. 73; A. I. R. (16) 1929 Cal. 269 and A. I. R. (34) 1947 Cal. 426, Ref.
